Taking a new perspective on rodeos, Brian Dultmeier, senior in construction science and management, takes a wild backward steer ride during the intramural rodeo Thursday evening in Weber Arena.

It was a human stampede, with 21 contestants chasing after, nine steers.

The first Intramural Rodeo was sponsored by the K-State Rodeo team Thursday night in Weber Arena.

Chris Larson, freshman in animal science and industry, and Chad Yost, sophomore in animal science and industry, won the first division of the Intramural Rodeo: team roping.

Larson and Yost chased a steer on foot and were the first team to successfully rope the animal's head and two back legs.

"It sounded like a lot of fun," Yost said. "We got a team together to see what we could do."

Twelve teams competed in the five rodeo events. Teams consisted of four men and two women. No horses or equipment were needed to compete, so anyone was able to enter.

"Hopefully, this will be the first annual Intramural Rodeo," said Dan Suderman, senior in animal science and industry and president of the Rodeo Club.

Jimmy White, senior in animal science and industry and vice president of the Rodeo Club, suggested the idea of the rodeo.

"I transferred here from Fort Hays State University, and we did it there. It was very popular," he said.

White said he thought the rodeo would make the Rodeo Club more visible on campus.

"When I transferred, I noticed not a lot of the college knows we are here. We are literally unheard of," he said. "I thought it would be a good way to get the rest of the college involved and let them have a good time with us."

The five events were calf tying, team roping, goat tying, barrel racing and steer riding.

Each team paid a $10 entry fee plus $1 per event, Suderman said.

Pissed Off Cowboys was the winning team and received a $60 jackpot.

Team members were Karen Moorman, junior in animal science and industry, Becky Molzen,

Exceptional adults watch rodeo team rope 'n' ride

Weber Arena was filled with bright eyes and big smiles Thursday evening as a crowd of more than 100 people watched the K-State rodeo team.

Members of the K-State rodeo team participated in an Exceptional Rodeo as the residents of Big Lakes Development Center Inc. and the Kansas Neurological Institute watched on the sidelines.

About 60 physically and mentally handicapped adults from Big Lakes and about 35 from the Kansas Neurological Institute attended the rodeo.

The program has been going on for more than five years, said Dan Suderman, Rodeo Club president and senior in animal sciences and industries.

Patty Roark, Big Lakes community living adviser, said the residents enjoy the interaction with rodeo-team members and watching the events.

"They were really looking forward to it. They've been talking about it all week," she said.

The reception from the team members was wonderful, Roark said.

"They met us at the vans and walked us to the arena. They have been great," she said. "They make them feel real special," she said.

Amy Kinney, Kansas Neurological Institute activities therapy technician, said some of the residents know what is going on and just enjoy watching the rodeo. For others, she said, all the visual sights and sounds are wonderful.

▶STATE UNIVERSITIES MAY LOSE MILLIONS

TOPEKA (AP) — Decreas-ing enrollments and increasing costs at state universities prompted a committee Thursday to remove $6 million in proposed spending for the Kansas Board of Regents system.

The House Appropriations Committee endorsed a proposal to cut 0.8 percent from Gov. Bill Graves' recommended general-use budgets for all six regents institutions for the fiscal year 1996, which begins July 1.

Rep. Kenny Wilk, R-Lansing, said the cuts sent a message to universities to ease spending.

The committee had originally endorsed a $5.7-million reduction based on each school's tuition shortfalls. Under that proposal, the University of Kansas would have faced $3.4 million in cuts, and K-State would have suffered the second-largest cut, $1 million.

Under the new proposal, KU's cuts are $1.5 million, while K-State and Wichita State University face larger cuts.

One of the most important budget decisions legislators make each year is how much money to spend on state universities.

Reg-ents institutions account for 13.7 percent of all tax dollars spent.

Conservatives want to remove $100 million from Graves' budget proposals to permit large tax cuts. To meet their goals, they would have had to remove $13.7 million from the regents budget.

UFM salaries allocation passes

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Student Senate finished semester allocations to campus organizations Thursday night by giving UFM half the money it had requested.

However, the K-State administration has agreed to contribute the portion of the money that Senate cut from its allocation to UFM this year.

Patrick Carney, arts and sciences senator, introduced an amendment Feb. 7 that would have cut $10,350 in Senate funding for UFM salaries. Senate voted Thursday to allocate UFM $4,350 for salaries.

Carney received a commitment from the administration to pay more than half of UFM salaries next year, and the bill was again brought before Senate.

Phil Anderson, faculty representative to Senate, said UFM was an important part of this campus, and it should receive its full amount for salaries from Senate.

Carrie Edelman, agriculture senator, expressed concern that additional funding for UFM would only be available next year.

Senate sets precedents when funding groups, and it would be more difficult to add to next year's UFM budget, Edelman said.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said Senate should save money this year by accepting the administration's offer and funding UFM completely when it comes up for allocations again.

UFM had requested $13,000, and the Allocations Committee had recommended $11,700.

Senate's final allocation to UFM was $5,700, which included funding for salaries, postage, printing and honorariums.

While UFM was of interest to many senators, the bulk of the evening was spent on allocations to International Coordinating Council.

Nine student organizations in the ICC received funding. The groups

Fighting racism through community service

ANNE HAZLETT
Collegian

As a college student in 1966, Anne Butler, interim director of women's studies, read a book that changed her life.

"'Coming of Age in Mississippi' was written by Anne Moody, a woman who was active in the civil-rights movement in the rural South," Butler said.

"Reading about her life changed my life because I realized everyone can do something for change no matter where they are."

Butler was a student at Eastern Kentucky University during the late 1960s. She said she would describe her involvement in the social change of this time period as grassroots participation.

"There had been several racial incidents at Eastern the year before I came to school," Butler said. "As a student, I became involved in community-service activities as a way to forge ties between the university and the community, which was predominantly white."

▶ TRIO PROGRAMS HELP DISADVANTAGED STUDENTS PREPARE FOR FUTURE

Students who come from low-income backgrounds and have parents without a college education are excelling in high schools and graduating from universities nationwide.

Because of the federally funded Trio programs, which were established by Congress in 1965, disadvantaged students are now preparing themselves for the future.

Kathy Greene, director of Educational Support Services, said 1,750 programs have been set up across the nation, and 700,000 students are involved each year.

"Historically, the Trio programs provide educational opportunities," said Lora Boyer, assistant director and coordinator of Upward Bound.

"The idea is that if you increase the educational level, you increase the chance to get out of the poverty," Boyer said.

The programs, which include Upward Bound, Student Support Services and Talent Search, were started at K-State in 1974.

Upward Bound is a program designed to help high-school students to stay and succeed in school.

Boyer said the program advises 72 high-school students in the Manhattan, Riley, Rock Creek and Junction City area.

"Over 90 percent of the participants who graduate choose to attend school," Boyer said.

"I feel very positive about the program. It helps a great deal," she said.

Boyer said Upward Bound helps students fill out college applications and provides a tutoring program.

To apply for the Trio programs, students must meet federal low-income guidelines, have learning or physical disabilities or be the first generation in their family to go to college.

Educational Support Services, the other existing program at K-State, works to advise undergraduates while they are attending the University.

Greene said the Trio programs are valuable to the American education system.

"Without these types of support programs, students at these levels would never be able to get a college degree," Greene said.

To celebrate the creation of the Trio programs, a National Trio Day was declared on Feb. 25.

Universities across the country are organizing open houses, assigning guest speakers and setting up information tables, Greene said.

This year, Educational Support Services has invited students who are involved in the Trio programs at K-State to a reception, which will be at 10 a.m. today at Holton Hall.

"We want to celebrate it to highlight our success record," Greene said.

"We've been around for a long time, and we want people to know about us," she said.

▶ CASINO NIGHT, BALLROOM BLITZ WILL ROUND OUT CIRCLE K DISTRICT CONVENTION THIS WEEKEND

K-State's Circle K International chapter will be host to the Kansas District Convention this weekend.

Snehal Bhakta, president of Circle K International at K-State, said he expects 50 people from different colleges in Kansas to attend the convention.

"It's a chance for other clubs in Kansas to come to one central location and exchange ideas and have fun," he said.

The organization will have a number of events throughout the weekend, Bhakta said.

Opening ceremonies for the convention will begin at 8 tonight in the K-State Union Ballroom and will be followed by a casino night.

Free Circle K International money will be given out to those who bring a can of food or a coloring book, and there will be different tables to gamble at, Bhakta said.

The canned foods will be donated to the Flint Hills Breadbasket, and the coloring books will be donated to Manhattan Headstart Program, he said.

Workshops, a luncheon, governor's banquet and a ballroom blitz dance will be Saturday in the Union.

A farewell luncheon will conclude the convention in the Landon Room at Ramada Inn.

Bhakta said the organization is the largest worldwide service organization across college campuses.

"It's a real good opportunity to build in service, character and leadership," he said.

New members are always welcome to join the organization or attend a meeting, which are at 9 p.m. Tuesdays in Union 204, Bhakta said.

"Here at K-State, the best way to learn about Circle K may not be to come to the convention but come to our meetings," he said.

"But I don't want to discourage anyone interested in not coming to the convention," Bhakta said.

Marlatt B wing to feature suites, remodeled rooms

JANICE MELIA
Collegian

Marlatt Hall will reopen its B wing the first of June for residents, but the rooms will have a new look.

"The rooms will look like you're walking into the Hilton Hotel," Gene Wiley, director of maintenance, said.

Many of the special or expanded rooms are complete with ceiling fans, wall-to-wall carpet, mini-blinds, dropped ceilings, cabinets and bookshelves, along with a personal bathroom, he said.

The rooms, which are on the first three floors, will have private bathrooms in each room, and each floor will have a laundry room that will be used only by the residents of that floor, Wiley said.

Lawson Harris, freshman in architecture and design, said he thinks the new rooms will increase the number of people who want to live in the residence halls.

"I think the suites would keep a lot more people in the halls, especially by having a private bathroom," he said.

Sybil Freeman, sophomore in elementary education, agrees with the importance of having privacy.

"I like having people around, but you need to have your own space. I grew up having my own room," she said.

The expanded rooms will allow more students to have that space.

The new rooms come in a variety of styles. Two of the styles involve converting three rooms into two separate living quarters.

Other designs are an L-shaped room or a rectangular-shaped room with a larger bathroom. The bathroom for the rectangular room contains more shelving and space. These are called expanded or special rooms.

The final design is to make the three rooms into a single living area for three people. One room becomes a sleeping area, the middle can be a living area and the third is two bathrooms. These are known as suites, Burgess said.

West and Haymaker halls have some suites and expanded rooms. The Haymaker rooms are full, and the demand is high for those rooms, Mateo Remsburg, assistant hall director for Haymaker, said.

Tim J. Hanzlik, junior in architectural engineering, said he would like to move into the new expanded rooms at Marlatt.

The room would cost him $85 a semester more than his current double-as-a-single room is costing him, he said. After looking at the rooms, Hanzlik said he decided the extra cost would be worth it.

For a student on the 20-meals-per-week plan paying with installments, an average residence-hall room will cost $1,710 next year, while the expanded rooms under the same scenario will be $2,020, said Bob Burgess, assistant director of housing for business operations.

Because the competition for the rooms is high, the residents for those rooms will be chosen on several criteria, Yoder said.

The first consideration is the number of semesters that the residents have lived in Marlatt. The date the $25 housing application fee was paid is next on the list. The earlier applicants get the fee paid, the more likely they are to get one of the rooms.

The leadership positions the person has taken place in either the hall or on their floor is another criteria, which is at the discretion of the hall director, Yoder said.

"Those criteria, by and large, have solved the problem," he said.

The work at Marlatt has met all safety codes and regulations and has been approved by both state and University officials. Each of the three floors has a handicapped-accessible room as well. All of the work in renovating has been done in-house, and nothing was contracted, Wiley said.

By doing the work in-house, Wiley estimated the costs have been cut by one-third to one-half. This allowed the flexibility to make changes in plans as it became necessary.

▶ RENT

Residence-hall rent to increase in fall

JANICE MELIA
Collegian

The cost of living in the residence halls will increase again next year.

The 4.7-percent increase will be used for a number of purposes, said Chuck Werring, director of Housing and Dining Services.

This is the first year that money will be put into the Facilities 2000 fund, which is a program for the residence halls to support capital improvements.

The money will be used for behind-the-wall improvements like plumbing, elevators and electrical repairs, Werring said.

The increase will also be used for salary, food and utility-cost increases and inflationary expenses, he said.

The housing department does not receive any funds from the state in the form of tax money for operating, salaries, repairs or maintenance. All of the money the department uses must come from the money students pay to live in the residence halls, Gene Wiley, director of maintenance, said.

In addition, when the state mandates salary increases or compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, they do not provide any funds to help meet those requirements, Werring said.

"We try to project what will happen so we can cover the bottom line," he said.

Wiley said the cost of running the residence halls has increased.

"We are not raising funds to do things. It's just expensive," Wiley said.

Ryan Haraughty, junior in wildlife biology, said residence halls just don't hold the appeal of luxury apartments.

"Dorms are getting to be less and less competitive," he said.

Haraughty said he would like to live somewhere other than the residence halls, but his class load does not allow him the time for cooking and cleaning.

Residence halls are trying to encourage students to return to the halls despite the price increase.

Haymaker Hall is having a poster campaign this week to remind residents to sign up for preferential rooms. The cartoon posters went up in the Haymaker lobby on Monday.

The posters, which resemble "The Far Side" cartoons, were designed to attract the attention of the residents so they would remember to sign a contract for next year, Mateo Remsburg, assistant hall director of Haymaker, said.

"We hope they will be more likely to come down and sign a contract," he said.

Returning residents will receive a personal note of recognition from Remsburg, their floor staff and Kim Winkler, Haymaker hall director.

"I feel we are very committed. Hopefully, it shows by the number of returns we have," he said.

Brian Story, freshman in business, said living in the residence halls has been a good experience as a freshman.

"They do a very good job," he said.

Story plans on moving out next year, but he said the price was not a factor in his decision.

Through his apartment hunting, Story said he found that it seems to cost around $200 to $215 a month, but you have to cook your own food and buy whatever else you might need, he said.

Michael Garcia, freshman undecided, said the residence-hall prices are economical, but there are other improvements that could be made.

"I think they're fairly reasonable since they include dinners, but I think the dinners could

HGB to sponsor free Mardi Gras dance in Boyd Hall

JOE KLEIDOSTY
Collegian

The genuine Mardi Gras celebration may be in New Orleans, but the residents of Boyd Hall plan to have a little party of their own Saturday night.

Jenny Graff, Hall Governing Board social chair and sophomore in agricultural economics, said the second annual Mardi Gras dance will be in a decorated Boyd Hall basement.

The free dance is being sponsored by HGB and will take place from 8 p.m. to midnight.

Graff said the dance will be different in a couple of aspects this year.

She said some men from Marlatt Hall volunteered to DJ the dance, in contrast to last year's jazz ensemble music.

"We wanted more of a dance atmosphere, and we didn't want it to be the same," she said.

Michelle Cortese, sophomore in animal science, said the DJs will be playing requests and general popular music.

"A lot of people didn't dance last year to the jazz ensemble," Cortese said. "I think the variety of the music will be suited to everyone."

Graff said HGB had a number of things in mind when it decided to sponsor the dance.

"We needed to have an activity where people could get together and just meet people, have a good time and relieve some stress," she said.

Graff also said this year's dance will be open to anyone living in any of the residence halls. Last year's Mardi Gras dance was only open to residents of Strong Complex.

Jennifer Higerd, HGB treasurer and sophomore in political science, said the festive atmosphere should provide students with a good time.

"This year, we're hoping a lot more people come over from other residence halls," Higerd said.

Graff also said Mardi Gras may be replaced with something new if there is not a good turnout.

"We hope that we get a major response, because sometimes you don't get people to respond," she said. "People just don't come."

She also said Boyd Hall residents are excited about the opportunity to be the site of such a big event.

"It's a big deal for us to have so many people invited," Graff said. "We feel big pressure for the response, since this is our first time to undertake something so big."

Graff said she hopes for about 200 people to attend the event.

"It will be a great time," she said. "The more people we have, the more fun it will be."

IN OUR OPINION

by the Collegian Editorial Board

More insurance plans easier on students

The Student Health Advisory Council wants students to be able to choose from three plans with different degrees of coverage.

K-State students could be getting more health-care options.

The University only offers one student health plan. The addition of more choices could be very beneficial to students.

The biggest downfall of the current student insurance is that it has only one plan.

If a K-State students cannot afford the plan, then they have to either go without or get insured by an outside company.

The Student Health Advisory Council wants students to be able to choose from three plans with different degrees of coverage.

Most importantly, it has three different price ranges.

One good characteristic that would be carried over from the current system is that insurance still would not be a prerequisite for enrollment.

Unlike the system at the University of Kansas, if students do not want insurance at K-State, they are not forced to carry it.

It would be beneficial to K-State if more students could afford health insurance.

An effective way of allowing affordability would be to have several plans to fit different budgets.

Disadvantaged students get a chance

Feb. 25. It will be a significant day for those of us who are Trio alumnae.

Thirty years ago, Congress established and funded Trio programs. This would mean "first-generation low-income young Americans would have an opportunity to aspire for a college education and fulfill their dreams of making a difference in life."

For those of you who grew up in an environment in which a college education was an ultimate destiny, Trio Day may not seem that important. But I encourage you to think about the 1986 Congressional Resolution on National Trio Day.

Trio Day focuses the nation's attention on the needs of disadvantaged young people and adults aspiring to improve their lives, to the necessary investment if they are to become contributing citizens of the country, which would be wasted if that investment is not made.

When I was growing up in a housing project, I never thought about college. It was an environment that could only encourage "maybe getting a high-school education" but definitely getting a job to cover the bills.

In high school, I can remember my classmates making plans to attend college. They had aspirations of being doctors, lawyers, counselors and teachers. There were no college plans or career aspirations for me. All I knew was I had a low ACT score, and college didn't seem feasible. My goal was to get a job to pay the bills and survive.

I was fortunate that I was able to save some money from part-time jobs and take one class in creative writing, which was my area of interest. By taking that one class, I came in contact with people who supported my decision to continue with pursuing a college education.

I also came in contact with my first Trio program that supported my college development. That Trio program was Educational Supportive Services.

Because of the cultural, economic and gender biases within my primary and secondary schools, I was not proficient in mathematics. Through Educational Supportive Services, I was able to obtain peer tutoring, which assisted me in understanding the approaches and strategies in doing mathematics.

I was able to do better, participate in my class and receive a passing grade so I could achieve my degree.

During my junior year, I also had the opportunity to be involved with the Trio program in another capacity. As a student teacher for Upward Bound's Summer Bridge program, I was able to work with first-generation college students who were making the transition to college.

The program provided academic and study-skills development along with helping students build their cultural identities. In addition, the program focused on building math and science competency. I also teamed students with community and faculty mentors, which is another important component of the Trio program.

GUEST COLUMN

Since I was a first-generation college student, I know it is crucial for the first-generation college student to have mentors and role models.

Even though it is exciting being the first to aspire toward college in the family, it is also very scary and unpredictable. Often the student may be from an environment that prescribes to the philosophy of everyday food and shelter survival, so college may not be encouraged or supported. There is also no history or example within the family or even within some of the community living areas of college success to admire and aspire to.

One of my first college teachers gave me an exemplary example of Trio role modeling. He was a well-known playwright, and I never thought he would take a black girl from the housing project seriously with an amateur play. But he did. He spent many hours of one-on-one individualized teaching with me. I knew he cared, and I knew he had faith in my talent and abilities. That's one of the reasons why I'm a Trio alumna today.

Now as an Academic Counselor Services Coordinator at K-State, it has been very rewarding for me to see how Trio programs have developed. Not only is peer tutoring offered, but there are classes on critical thinking and leadership. It has been very pleasing for me to see my Trio students in class processing their critical-thinking skills and applying their thoughts on leadership, which is essential to a critical thinker. This will benefit communities in the future.

Trio programs also include the Ronald E. McNair Post Baccalaureate Achievement Program and Talent Search. The McNair program encourages minority and/or first-generation college students to pursue doctoral degrees in math and science. Talent Search assists middle- and high-school students with exploring their educational and career options.

Since I was a first-generation college student, I know it is crucial for the first-generation college student to have mentors and role models.

For those who might believe Trio programs give wasted support and opportunities to people who are not college material, ask yourself what prospects life would hold for you if you hadn't gotten the opportunity to go to college and pursue the career you have a passion for.

If you have a talent for computers, music, writing, art or whatever, ask yourself where that talent would be if someone — a teacher, a friend, a counselor, a parent or whoever — hadn't believed in your talent. If your family has a business and you are looking forward to being a part of that business once you graduate, ask yourself where your career aspirations would be without that business.

If you answered these questions honestly and sincerely, then you will have an indication how important Trio programs are to these students.

On Feb. 24, Educational Supportive Services at K- State will have an anniversary commemoration in support of National Trio Day on Feb. 25.

I encourage everyone to visit Holton 201 at 10 a.m. to get to know more about the program and how it successfully affects students' academic progress.

There's an African proverb that says it takes a village to raise a child. I also believe it takes a village to groom and mentor a student.

Trio programs give a deep meaning to this thought, because if a village does groom and mentor a student, that village gets a self-empowered individual and community leader back.

Tolerance doesn't mean being spineless

During this school year, there has been an ongoing controversy over how to define the concept of tolerance and especially how it is defined in the Christian faith.

The latest eruption in the debate stemmed from a columnist on this page defining tolerance in today's context as "spineless."

This was apt to bring about some reply from the campus community, but the most surprising source of it came from people who claim to be Christians.

It was confusing to me why people who claim the same set of beliefs could have their real beliefs so diametrically opposed.

While I realize that not everyone on campus claims to be Christian, I wanted to discover why those who do were in disagreement.

So I took it upon myself to discover the meaning of these concepts from the source of Christianity — the Bible.

I do not intend to present my own definition of tolerance, love or any other word that is in a current state of redefinition because I do not believe my definition is any better than anyone else's. Because we live in a country where freedom of thought is still protected, I do not intend to tell anyone how to think.

I am simply questioning the basis of those who claim to be Christian and dispute what Jesus Christ said and did in regard to love and tolerance.

However, since Christianity is objectively defined and presented in the Bible, and any deviation from this source simply creates another subjective religion, there is no way to define these concepts for the Christian other than according to the Bible because it is the source of Christianity.

In addition, I challenge those who intend to participate in this debate to include scriptural reference with their argument as evidence so that there is no confusion over their basis for a certain point.

Let me be very clear what I intend to do: I am not forcing my beliefs on anyone, nor do I believe that my beliefs are any better than anyone else's.

I am simply questioning the basis of those who claim to be Christian and dispute what Jesus Christ said and did in regard to love and tolerance.

At the crux of the debate is how Christ defined tolerance.

It appears that many believe that since Christ "preached love to the masses" and his greatest commandment was "Love your neighbor as yourself" that Christians should tolerate any and all behavior because of love.

If one believed that this was the case, why should murder be wrong to the Christian?

Although this is an extreme case, what difference is there between murder and lying, since both are sins according to the Bible?

If one is to create a new set of morality for each action, then one has just created a new religion and must then embark on the "My religion is better than yours" crusade, a difficult task in an era of cynicism and agnosticism.

JEREMY STEPHENS

Using this extreme case, are Christians called to let murder slide because of the "don't judge" clause and just love the murderer for who he is and look past what he did? Surely not, for Christ himself was crucified alongside two murderers, and he only forgave the one who asked for repentance.

The one thing Christ never did while on earth was give anyone license to continue to sin on the basis of tolerance. This also necessitates a definition of sin, which the Bible does.

For those who claim to be Christian, it is your responsibility to know what sin is. "For I have hidden your word in my heart that I might not sin against you." (Psalm 119:11)

While some may believe that we should look past other's shortcomings because we are mature and educated, Christ never taught this.

He preached love to the masses, but not an earthly love between people that sought to approve all behavior, but rather a love for Christ. "Anyone who loves his father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." (Matthew 10: 37)

It was not Christ's intent to make everyone live in harmony and peace with lots of love and the current concept of tolerance. In Luke 12:51 he said, "I did not come to bring peace, but division."

Many argue that when Christ said "Judge not, lest ye be judged" this gives license for everyone to set their own morality.

However, Christ applied this teaching in a different manner.

When Christ was faced with dealing with the Pharisees who were about to stone an adulterer in John 8:7, he told them "Let him who is without sin throw the first stone."

But more importantly, he didn't stop there. He then told the woman, in John 8:11, "I also do not condemn you, but go and sin no more."

The commandment to "Love your neighbor as yourself" has been used to validate certain kinds of behavior as well.

However, this command has nothing to do with the behavior of others but one's own.

It originated in the Law of Moses (Leviticus 19:18) and commands "Do not seek revenge or bear a grudge against one of your people, but love your neighbor as yourself," and appears in the New Testament with the parable of the Good Samaritan, neither of which deal with actions by others, but rather, to use a contemporary term, "Get-Even-With-'Em-ism."

So although Christ preached love, he did not validate tolerance of sinful behavior in the name of love because love denotes discipline and mercy (Proverbs 13:24), not a "spineless" tolerance.

Night of bowling doesn't cut it

Dear editor,

I am a faithful reader of the Collegian, like many students, and I would like to respond to the letters titled "Story was irresponsible" and "Alcohol could lead to death." I know that when the article "Finally 21, Finally Legal" was published, it would surely spark some responses, but gee wiz, both John Lyle and Rene Delehanty appear as if they had 16 shots and seven beers before writing their letters.

I understand that both of them had feasible points, and I would like to express my condolences to them about their friends and people they have known who have died of alcohol-related poisoning. However, I don't agree with their observations about the events of Kent Hamilton's 21st birthday.

I am confused about Lyle's statements that this type of journalism is not responsible. I have personally seen several other half-brained individuals participating in this sort of event, which apparently Mr. Lyle doesn't think occurs at KU. In my opinion, the Collegian wasn't promoting, but rather reporting. Even Delehanty noted the story in the Manhattan Mercury about alcohol-related reporting. Although she must not have very good friends, because I don't know any friends that would care that little about your well-being in that similar situation to leave you with a trash can and call it good enough. Yes, I was up with Kent for most of the time that he was passed out, except to go to my classes the next day, but someone was always in the room with him until I got back. Delehanty said she thought that the article should have been written about celebrating your 21st birthday at K-State's bowling alley. Maybe it's just that I don't bowl regularly, but do you get carded when you bowl? I thought I heard somewhere about not striking out at the checkout desk. Seriously, we all know what turning 21 enables you to do that legally couldn't get done, and I'm not trying to go bowling.

"I am confused about Lyle's statements that this type of journalism is not responsible."

In conclusion, I am glad that both of these people are concerned with alcohol poisoning, but to Mr. Lyle and Ms. Delehanty, I don't care what the people at KU think. Maybe it wouldn't be a good idea to go to the bars on March 4 if you don't want to see a "half-brain" in a night of drunken debauchery.

Let students vote on proposal

Dear editor,

I am a student here at K-State. I pay tuition, and I pay to park. Therefore, I believe that I should voice my opinion on this parking garage issue. Here it is point-blank. I do not want to pay for this garage. I don't think that I should be forced to pay for this garage, either. As others have stated, there is room to park behind Weber, and there is room to park in the parking area across from Memorial Stadium.

Already, I have spoken to several people who do not want to pay for this garage, and I sincerely believe that this campus-wide vote for the garage is a great idea. It is our money that SGA is spending, and we should have a voice in how it is spent. Let's do a vote. Let's show the SGA how we feel about its garage.

Parents need theater

Dear editor,

I am writing in regard to Russell Fortmeyer's column on Feb. 17. There are parents going to school who are paying as much money as you are, therefore they would also be considered "students."

"Sure, I also thought Aladdin's production was really bad, but my daughter seemed to enjoy it."

IVONEE ZALDUMBIE
senior in advertising

These parents can hardly ever attend events such as plays, music concerts and other serious events that go on in McCain, because it is either hard to find a babysitter or just hard to trust one. That's enough of a good reason to bring stuff that will entertain the children of students. That way, we can have family time doing something besides watching television, going to the movies and playing at the park.

Sure, I also thought Aladdin's production was really bad, but my daughter seemed to enjoy it. I believe McCain is using "my money" too, to entertain "my" children.

You probably didn't have a childhood and will never make your children happy with such an attitude. Whoever said that twenty-something students do not enjoy stuff made for children, probably not Aladdin's production, but I'm sure many of them would enjoy other children productions.

If you don't like McCain productions, you can always go somewhere else and pay for it anyway. It is not like we get to go in for free. And if you don't like reviewing for bad productions, you'd better get another job, because you won't always get to review what you like.

I agree that McCain needs to improve the quality of its productions, but I support their productions targeted to children. After all, they are also using some of "my money."

Garage would be useful

Dear editor,

This is not just another letter about the parking situation. There has been a lot of discussion lately about the proposal to build a parking garage. Many of the views are from the student perspective and assume that students will have to shoulder the bill for the facility. But this is an issue that affects faculty and staff as well as students and, as far as I know, the proposal did not specify the method of payment.

As a staff person at K-State as well as a student, I believe I can offer a different perspective.

There is a lack of parking near many of the buildings on the south side of campus. I don't feel that people who are employed by K-State should have to park on the north side of campus and walk 15 minutes to their office. In the winter, it is often dark by the time an employee leaves work. Most staff people cannot afford reserved parking stalls on their salaries. Currently, I walk to campus, but if I remained employed at K-State until retirement, I do not know if I would continue to be able to do so.

If an employee's schedule differs from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., it is virtually impossible to find a place to park in faculty-staff or general lots. Parking off-campus is not a solution because it is discourteous to the residents, and many neighborhoods have taken action to prevent parking on the streets bordering K-State. If an employee has a doctor appointment, wants to attend a child's school program, wants to meet a friend at lunch or run errands at lunch, it is impossible to return to campus and find a parking place. Since I walk, I have not purchased a parking permit. There are times, however, when circumstances require me to drive. Then I must find a place in the metered lot. This is not easy, especially when half of the lot is blocked for an event in the Union.

"As a staff person at K-State as well as a student, I believe I can offer a different perspective."

LAURIE KIFER

Since the new art museum will soon attract more people to the south side of campus, and other plans for the future include increasing the convention capabilities of the Union, it is imperative that steps be taken to provide adequate parking facilities. It is past time for a parking garage at K-State. Perhaps those who feel that people are just lazy will be willing to continue to walk from the north lots so I can park my car a little bit closer to my office.

▶ TOLERANCE

Tolerance only goes so far

Dear editor,

Two plus two is four. I believe this is a fact. Of course, I have learned to accept and tolerate those who believe two plus two equals five. Far be it from me to force my beliefs and convictions upon anyone else. Who am I to say that the answer is four and not five? Yes, it is fine for me to believe in four, but at the same time, what business do I have forcing my conclusion on others?

Accepting the answer of those who believe the answer to be five of six will help us all get along better in this quickly changing world where lifestyles, faiths and views on arithmetic are diverse.

In fact, I have no problem giving these people the highly respected banking positions they have been denied for too long. Denying people a job because they believe differently than the institution they work for is both ludicrous and highly unfair.

In fact, letting a wider array of people with different arithmetical beliefs into the bank will allow more people to see the transcendent acceptance that the said bank professes to believe in.

"The problem with absolute tolerance is it flies in the face of reason."

True, the absolute right and wrong will be abolished, and the financial institution will be falling apart because it is contradicting itself, but it will be tolerant.

The problem with absolute tolerance is it flies in the face of reason.

We have to come to grips with the idea that there are absolutes, there is a right and wrong, and not every idea is a good idea. Although it may be old-fashioned, I believe that the basis of right and wrong is the Bible, and not a morally ambiguous social majority.

"It's not right, and no amount of pretty packaging is going to change my mind."

I believe in following the example of Jesus Christ, loving the sinner and offering a way of escape from sin.

To me, calling lying, homosexuality, sex outside of marriage and murder anything but wrong is the equivalent of accepting my bank statement with the banker believing two plus two as five.

It's not right, and no amount of pretty packaging can make me be tolerant of it.

Cats to square off against MU, CU

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

The K-State women's basketball team will play its final games of the regular season this weekend in a homestand that may decide their postseason fate.

The Cats will be host to Missouri tonight at 7 and then play Colorado Sunday afternoon at 2.

Both teams won their home games against K-State by 10 points.

The Buffaloes pulled out a 76-66 win Jan. 27, and the Cats dropped to Missouri 70-60 two days later.

Post defense will be crucial in Friday's game against the Tigers.

"Missouri has two really good players, Nikki Smith and Erika Martin, in the post," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

"They both had close to 20 points against us over there. We'll have to do a better job of putting pressure on the ball and playing post defense."

The more formidable of the two opponents comes in Sunday. The third-ranked Colorado Buffaloes will be bringing in a balanced scoring attack and high optimism.

"It wouldn't surprise me if Colorado wins it all," Agler said.

"They're definitely a Final Four team."

"They've just got everything you need. They've got good perimeter players, and they've got really strong post play."

The Cats played Colorado tight in Boulder, tying the score with 11:44 remaining.

But three consecutive three-point shots by Amy Palmer put the game away.

"We don't really do anything different than with anyone else," Agler said.

"We've always, for some reason, played them well, and I wouldn't be surprised if we see the same thing Sunday. We'll have to do a good job controlling the tempo, but if we can do that, I feel we can be right with them."

This weekend's games could have a great effect on K-State's seed in the Big Eight Tournament.

By winning both games, the Cats could finish as high as third in the conference.

Losing both games could drop the team as low as sixth.

Both games could be important in the race for an NCAA Tournament berth as well.

"We've got to win Friday, because to get to postseason play, you've got to have a .500 record or better on your conference," Agler said.

"If we could beat Colorado, not only would that be a win in the conference, but we'd beat a team that's really powerful. That would greatly enhance our chances."

Even though a win against Colorado would be nice, Agler said the Cats can't look beyond Missouri.

"We are not looking by Missouri in any kind of fashion, because they whipped us over there," he said.

"Our ladies know that for us to have any shot at all, they have to finish .500 or better in the conference, so we have to take care of business Friday."

Track can be an enjoyable experience

Sports fans have a golden opportunity to watch some of the best athletes in the nation perform this weekend, but some might miss it.

WESS HUDELSON

For the first and possibly the last time, the Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships will be in Ahearn Field House Today and Saturday.

K-State's Gwen Wentland, the best female high jumper in the United States, and Petar Malesev, the best collegiate male high jumper, will be on display along with dozens of other NCAA qualifiers.

Sports fans generally only pay attention to track and field in Olympic years or when something negative in the sport occurs, such as athletes failing drug tests.

However, if given a chance, fans can enjoy the sport and possibly establish an admiration for one of the few sports in the world where a referee can't decide the outcome.

OK, I hear the usual excuses like "Track is boring," or "It takes too long."

The blame for this can be split between the sports fans and the sport itself.

Fans just don't expose themselves to track-and-field news.

Additionally, fans who are addicted to contact sports like football and basketball get bored when there's no violence involved.

The people who conduct track meets are to blame because track meets just aren't fan-friendly.

"Track is the only sport in the world where fans honestly don't know what the score is," Nebraska track coach Gary Pepin said. "I think we need to do a better job of letting the fans know what is going on."

Track meets appear to be a three-ring circus. The heights and distances of the field events are usually clearly displayed on signs, but the problem with those is that fans have three signs flashing results at them at the same time, and it becomes overwhelming.

Team scores are also a problem. Most fans don't have any idea of what the team standings are unless they have been diligently keeping track of results on their own.

Fans who actually understand how to score a meet are a rarity as well, even though it is simple.

(The top eight finishers in each event will be awarded points in this order: 10, 8, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2 and 1 point for eighth place.)

Ever started watching basketball in the middle of the game on television and get frustrated because the station won't show the score? That's what fans are up against at most track meets.

Becoming fan-friendly creates a double-edged sword for the sport, though. If officials only run one event at a time, then the meet drags on for hours, and boredom sets in.

This is where the job of the public-address announcer is vital.

While such events as the high jump may take more than an hour to complete, the event is usually won or lost on the last few jumps.

Therefore, the announcer needs to draw attention to events that are near completion.

Organizers need to schedule events so they don't all end at the same time.

My advice to fans who plan to attend the Big Eight Indoor Championships this weekend is to think ahead.

The meet runs from 9 a.m. to approximately 8 p.m. today, and 9 a.m. through 3 p.m. on Saturday. That might be too much to ask of anybody.

Try to find out some information on the individuals or events you would like to see and when they take place.

Better yet, try to find a time when several events you may be interested in take place in a row.

If you aren't planning to attend, you should seriously reconsider calling yourself a sports fan, because you will miss some of the greatest athletes in college athletics.

Cats to face Lobos

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

The K-State tennis team is looking to get back on track after a two-week layoff.

After a disappointing 0-2 trip to Utah, K-State coach Steve Bietau said his Wildcats hope to turn things around on their own playing surface.

The team claimed victory in only one match on the road trip. In No. 1 doubles, Karina Kuregian and Martine Shrubsole captured a 6-3, 1-6, 6-4 win over Angie Olson and Linda Engblom of Utah.

"We really struggled out there as a team," Bietau said.

"I think we have to learn how to be tougher, play smarter and be a lot more competitive. When we do those things, we will be a lot more successful."

Coming into town Saturday is the Cats' next opponent, the New Mexico Lobos.

New Mexico, a member of the Western Athletic Conference, is ranked ninth in the Central region rankings, three spots below K-State.

Leading the way for the Lobos is Angela Skrbic, the No. 30th-ranked player in the region.

K-State has a bigger weapon, though, in Kuregian. Despite a three-match losing streak in singles, Bietau said he looks for improvements from his all-American.

"When it comes to Karina, we're not in a panic state yet," Bietau said.

"She lost to two very good players and played one very poor match. We have to keep things in perspective, though. Any time a player isn't playing well, you have to do the things that work out any problems. She has been working a lot on her stroke. We need her to feel better about the way she's playing."

The match against New Mexico is K-State's final home match until the Big Eight Conference season begins.

Bietau said that the next month of play is important for his team.

"The matches coming up for us mean a lot to this team," Bietau said.

"We need to start getting things together before the conference season starts. Our next major concern is Big Eight play. Anything we do before we start the conference in April can make a big difference for us."

Saturday's action is scheduled for noon at the Cottonwood Club.

K-State to play in Louisiana during weekend

The K-State baseball team got its first taste of victory Wednesday night after sweeping a doubleheader from Missouri Western.

Now Coach Mike Clark just hopes his Wildcats keep that winning appetite.

"I hope the guys have a nice taste in their mouths after Wednesday night, because I want them to get hungry for this weekend," Clark said. "I want them to stay hungry for it and continue to do the things we need to do like we did Wednesday night."

What K-State did Wednesday night was put together solid performances both on the mound and at the plate, resulting in 6-4 and 10-3 victories against the Griffons.

Newcomer Steve Pearce gave the Cats four solid innings from the mound, as he allowed just four hits and two runs while striking out two. But picking up the win for K-State was Adam Novak.

The second game of the evening saw K-State record a more convincing win as the Cats scored 10 runs on 15 hits.

But despite the Cats' impressive performance Wednesday, Clark said his team will have to be prepared for this weekend's Lake Area Classic in Lake Charles, La.

"We've got to come out and have a good weekend this next weekend," he said. "Both Creighton and McNeese State are excellent. It's a good test for us. It's the type of competition that's going to prepare us for the Big Eight Conference.

"They'll either show us this weekend what we need to continue to work on, or they'll show us, hey, if we compete with these guys, we can beat these guys."

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

This is all true. Well, almost true. Kind of true. Just a bit of truth. Actually, there's more truth in the Enquirer.

Today's blue-light special: authentic Mark Twain Memorial Bridge pieces

Free to good home: historic bridge. Some assembly required.

The Missouri Highway and Transportation Department is looking for a new owner for the Mark Twain Memorial Bridge in Hannibal, Mo.

The bridge is scheduled to be replaced after 60 years of carrying highway traffic over the Mississippi River in Samuel Clemens' hometown.

It's a good deal for the right person, said Randall Dawdy, the department's historic bridge coordinator.

The department will even take the bridge apart and leave it in a nice, neat pile for the new owner.

But it will be up to the new owner to move it and rebuild it.

The 2,637-foot bridge was built in 1934 by the Mount Vernon and Union Bridge Construction companies at a cost of about $600,000.

It will continue to carry two lanes of U.S. 36 traffic over the river until a bigger, four-lane replacement can be completed sometime in 1998 or 1999.

I've got it! Let's get this bridge, move it to K-State and put it up in front of Memorial Stadium to hide the parking garage inside.

We could then turn the road surface of the bridge into a grass playing field, effectively doubling the existing green space.

The Parking Task Force has said this may be a possibility, but the feasibility study will not be done until sometime in 2009.

Air Force no longer able to fly the friendly skies of West Virginia county

The Air Force has surrendered to a small Appalachian county that voted to close its airspace in protest over an unpaid bill.

The federal government will reimburse Morgan County, W.Va., $10,900 for responding to the crash of an Air National Guard C-130 in October 1992, Rep. Bob Wise said Wednesday.

The County Commission had voted to close its airspace to all federal aircraft until it received the money.

"If all goes as planned, perhaps the skies over Morgan County can be opened once again very soon," Wise joked in making the announcement.

"It proves to us that the American system truly does work," said County Commissioner Phil Maggio. "I'm sure our taxpayers will be pleased."

Maybe it's about time to close the airspace above the K-State campus to state government aircraft until they stop taking more tuition money from us each year.

Everybody cut footloose; Sunday dancing is back

Dancing fools will no longer have to waltz out of town every Sunday to get their thrills.

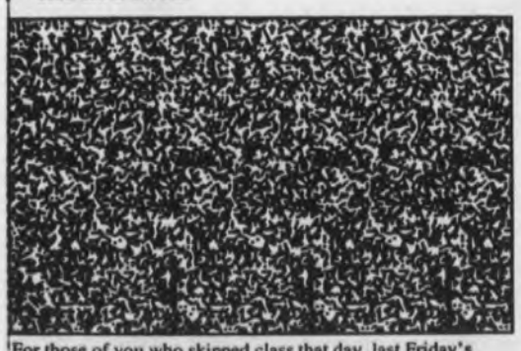
The Hereford, Texas, City Commission voted 6-1 Monday to repeal a 1956 ban on Sunday dancing in this Texas Panhandle town of 14,623.

Rumaldo Garcia, a dance-hall operator who led the repeal effort, said many people had been taking their Sunday two-steps to nearby communities.

"I don't see why these surrounding towns should get the money," he told the commission.

Others weren't exactly kicking up their heels.

"I'm just concerned about the family values in this time," said Commissioner Dennis Hicks, who cast the lone "nay" vote.



"If people want to dance, let them go to a place that allows that," Hicks said.

It reminds me of that eighth-grade film classic "Footloose."

As hipster-rebel Ren MacCormack (Kevin Bacon) said, "This is our time to dance."

Smatterings were not sponsored by the number 21.

TIRED OF THE MEAT MARKET?

Alternatives to traditional singles' scene do exist

STORY BY NIKOLA ZYTKOW

ART BY JUSTIN STAHLMAN

Looking into a crystal ball or calling the psychic hot line won't bring you any closer to the date of your dreams.

But joining volunteer groups, hanging out at weddings and even going to church might.

"A good place to meet women is at weddings," Norm Sedillo, senior in pre-medicine, said. "At weddings everyone is in the mood for love. They're smitten."

Sedillo said amidst all the kissing and bouquet tossing, the women often start to think about their future and wonder if they'll ever get married.

"That's when I show up and say, 'Hey babe,'" Sedillo said.

Jimmy Dean, sophomore in psychology, said he likes to meet women at church, in between praising the Lord, of course.

"You can really tell a church girl from a club hoppin' girl. They talk differently and carry themselves differently," he said.

Colleen Walton, senior in English literature, is one of those women who said she enjoys going to church singles groups, as well as the coffee shops and restaurants.

"You meet the right kind of people there — the creative thinkers," Walton said.

Walton said she likes to stay away from the bars and club scenes because of the raunchy atmosphere and come-on lines generated at some of the places.

"They're usually stupid or corny," she said of the pickup lines some guys use. "They usually come from people that are desperate and definitely not creative — the kinds of people you wouldn't want to hang around. I usually just tell them I'm dating someone. I lie, laugh or just ignore them."

But responses to these lines vary.

"It really depends on the person. If they are cute, they can get away with it," Jennifer Hubener, senior in human resource management, said.

Scott Smith, sophomore in horticulture, said it makes him sick that some guys actually approach women in that fashion.

"If I were a female, and a guy approached me like that, I'd feel cheap, degraded. I'd slap them or throw a drink in their face," Smith said.

"Men like that are very, very uneducated. They've got to live in the sticks to use that. They've gotta have some teeth missing, and their mom and dad have to be brother and sister," he added, half-laughing.

But bad pickup lines are not confined to men only, said Vrenda Pritchard, a faculty member in veterinary medicine.

Pritchard, who likes to go to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, said she sees women up there with thong body suits and G-strings and said she thinks they sometimes try to look helpless to pick up men.

"They play all helpless, like they don't know how anything works," she said.

Although she does admit that the Rec is a good place to meet people. Simply asking someone to spot you or asking the mechanics of a certain machine can be a good icebreaker, she said.

"You could say, for example, 'Would you watch my form?' while performing a certain exercise or lifting weights."

Pritchard said she's had people pick up on her there, and she even dated some of them.

Whether you're at a bar or a wedding, approaching the person of your dreams is always tough.

"Pickup lines nowadays come after a little bit of observation," Keith Collier, K-State graduate, said. He said this observation can vary from a couple of minutes to an hour, however long it takes to think of something original to say.

"If you see they're already interested in you — a certain glance or blatant stare — that's when you can go for the lines," he said.

"Compliment something about her, something original. If she looks like she spent a lot of time getting her nails done with jewelry in it and everything, tell her they look good. Basically compliment anything that looks like it took some extra preparation. Women love when a man pays attention to details."

Collier said he recently had an opportunity to use this line. When he saw the woman was receptive of his advances, he said to her, "Oh, and I don't see any rings on those fingers."

"This lets her know your intentions as well as shows her respect by making sure she's not with anyone else," Collier said.

Collier can testify to the success rate of this technique even out of the club scene. Recently, he has become involved in some volunteer work.

"You've got to get involved with a volunteer group. It's a chance to meet eligible, single people that are doing something positive. Oh, and believe me — there's a lot of good-looking women out there," he said.

Collier volunteers his time teaching elementary students the importance of staying in school. Meanwhile, he said he gets to know the counselors and teachers.

"I just met three women this way. One of them is a first-grade teacher," he said.

Smith, on the other hand, said he likes the outdoor atmosphere when meeting people.

"The park, definitely the park. You usually go with friends," Smith said. "If there's someone there that I'd want to draw attention to running or something, I'd start jogging over to them and ask if they want to play Frisbee with us."

Sounds innocent enough — as does the library, a place where Amy Braun, freshman undecided in arts and sciences, said she likes to

- "Bond, James Bond."
- "Sex is a killer — want to die happy?"
- "What would you do if I kissed you right now?"
- "I have had a really bad day, and it always makes me feel better to see a pretty girl smile. So, would you smile for me?"
- "Pardon me, but what pickup line works best with you?"
- "Do your legs hurt from running through my dreams all night?"

- "All those curves, and me with no brakes."
- "I miss my teddy bear. Would you sleep with me?"
- "So — how am I doing?"
- "Can I borrow a quarter? I want to call my mom and tell her I just met the girl of my dreams."

ASTROLOGY FORECAST

CHRISTY CALLOWAY

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Happy Birthday. Expect this week to be kind of a cool-down. You've been working hard and doing lots of studying. Enjoy the relaxation. Hang out with lots of friends and give that one special someone a bit of a chase. For the weekend: Follow your inner voice.

ARIES (March 21-April 20) You may feel dense and out-of-whack, so hang around with people who will lift your spirits. This is a great time to be optimistic and open your mind. Finances look great, but watch out for a con artist who is looking to spend your money. For the weekend: Go out on a secret rendezvous.

TAURUS (April 21-May 21) Spontaneous and adventurous are the key words for you. Be social and let go of that down-to-earth, mellow attitude you Taurus people are so known for. You'll be longing for status this week, so don't let your snobby side take over. For the weekend: Stick around the home front and let adventure find you.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21) Romance is highlighted this week, so make sure you're in the right place at the right time. Play hard-to-get when that former flame comes knocking at your door. Education should be at the top of your "to-do" list. For the weekend: Hang out with neglected friends and family.

CANCER (June 22-July 23) You will be using all your intelligence this week to get yourself out of trouble. Be extra-sensitive around someone you like, and they will respond beautifully. Finances still seem negative, so try seeking professional help. For the weekend: Be on your best behavior.

LEO (July 24-Aug. 23) Everyone seems to be working your nerves this week, so relax and chill out. Romance is more positive than ever, so put your best foot forward. Co-workers are in your corner, so be in theirs. For the weekend: Spend time with the one you love.

VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 23) Time to return to your old, sweet self again. Last week everyone was your worst enemy, but now you are more relaxed. Organization is sharp, and your instincts are on target. Romance is looking good — just give your partner the confidence to express feeling to you. For the weekend: Be loving.

LIBRA (Sept. 24-Oct. 23 An excellent opportunity for love has finally arrived. Let yourself be carried away in the excitement. Now is a good time to be responsible and grounded, which might be hard for airy Libra. Work has you feeling exhausted. For the weekend: Remain calm and focused.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) All the hard work you put into your career will finally earn you that recognition you've been waiting for. Someone may try to sink your ship, but just smile and keep on moving. For the weekend: Surprise your sweetheart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-December 21) The love interest you've been trying to develop is finally going to come through. Keep your head and don't get carried away. For the weekend: Avoid authority figures, or your rebellious nature will get you in trouble.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 20) Communications seem excellent, and they are. Mercury moved into your house of communication. Finances are wonderful, so go ahead and buy that new stereo. For the weekend: Give that romantic partner you've been neglecting a night of total bliss.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 19) Venus is moving into your sign, so get ready for lots of attention from the opposite sex. Finances may not seem too good, but you'll make do with what you have. For the weekend: Be assertive and call the shots.

Legacy lecturer stresses flexibility

MIKE HILL
Collegian

Being flexible is the key to finding a job in today's market.

Flexibility was one of the points Melanie Fannin, president of Southwestern Bell Kansas, stressed when she delivered the third Legacy Lecture Thursday in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

Fannin said there is no such thing as lifetime employment, and flexibility is the key to survival.

"Be flexible and be willing to embrace change," she said.

Fannin said having balance was a key to success at work and at home.

"There is more pressure to spend more time at work than at home," she said.

Following into that trap could destroy your work life as well as your home life, Fannin said.

"No company wants a burned-out mess," she said.

Fannin said she had always dreamed of being a lawyer, but her faculty adviser told her a pre-law degree would be a mistake.

"He said there was a good chance I wouldn't be accepted into law school, so I should get a degree like education," she said.

Fannin did receive a degree in education but went on to graduate from the University of Texas Law School with a law degree.

Fannin accepted a corporate attorney job with Southwestern Bell in 1977 and worked her way up the ladder to become chief legal counsel for Southwestern Bell Telephone's state operations in Oklahoma in 1992.

"I had climbed as high as an attorney can climb on the corporate ladder," she said.

Fannin said attorneys were told they could not expand into other areas in the business. That's why she was so shocked when she was offered the job of president in 1994.

"No one was as surprised as I was," she said.

As president, Fannin said she quickly learned how fast the telecommunication industry was advancing, and competition was fierce.

"Everyone wants in on the action," she said.

Fannin said firms are paying large amounts of money for the licenses of the new technology.

"The bidding price for a new cellular service called Personal Communication Service is at $6 billion for the license," she said.

Fannin said the international market is also growing quickly.

"Mexico has great growth potential. We install 100 new phone lines every hour of every day."

As the president of Southwestern Bell in Kansas, Fannin has observed various changes in the business world.

"These changes are overwhelming to us that have been in the business world," she said.

Employers used to want people who would take orders, Fannin said, but now they want people who are creative and have speaking and computing skills. She said interpersonal skills are also very important.

Fannin said even with these changes, one thing has remained the same.

"Employers are still interested in grades," she said.

Jenny Mccray, freshman in pre-law, said she enjoyed learning about the future of big business.

"The lecture was insightful on the international front and how it will affect my future," she said.

Jeff Schwab, senior in finance, said he knows what he has to work on.

"I need to focus more on the communications between individuals, both orally and written," he said.

Fannin ended her lecture with some words of advice.

"Choose a job you love, and you'll never work another day in your life," she said.

Maintenance, future renovation cause rates to rise in residence halls taste better considering what we pay for them," he said.

Remsburg said the increase plan was a good one. It is better to raise the prices minimally over the years rather than all at once, he said.

The history of the residence halls has been to try to space expenses out over the years so that any one group does not carry the burden itself, Werring said.

"The one added attribute is the commitment the students have made to Facilities 2000," he said.

Many of the buildings are 30 years old, and the systems are beginning to decay.

Maintenance is important to maintain things like hot water and air conditioning students expect every day. Otherwise, extensive renovations will be needed someday, Werring said.

"It seems kind of unnecessary, but everything is going up," Sybil Freeman, sophomore in elementary education, said.

General maintenance, along with routine bills, is expensive, Wiley said.

For example, the utility bill for housing alone averages around $100,000 every month. But that covers the 3,000 residents in the halls, the dining centers, the housing offices and all other housing facilities, Wiley said.

"We do things here that other schools don't. Money we save makes it better for our students," Wiley said.

freshman in pre-professional elementary education, Skeet Johnson, junior in general agriculture, and Suderman.

Individually, Johnson placed first in the steer-riding competition by holding on the longest while riding on a steer backward with his two hands holding on to the steer's flank and his legs wrapped around its neck.

Roger Miller, junior in feed-science management, and Sara Berkowitz, junior in animal science and industry, won the barrel-racing competition.

Miller carried Berkowitz on his back while running around three barrels.

Tonya Pauly, freshman in sociology, was the fastest to tie a ribbon around a goat's tail.

Jim Schmidt, sophomore in agricultural engineering, won the calf-tying competition with a time of 19.27 seconds. He flanked the calf and tied three of its legs.

Each divisional winner received a cash award.

"I think it went over pretty well," White said. "I think everyone liked it, and it can only get better if we do it again."

Muscular Dystrophy Association to receive money

Suderman said the residents really get a kick out of seeing the cowboys, especially the clowns.

"Working with them really makes you appreciate what the Lord has given you. Working with them helps us as people, or at least it helps me," he said.

"It is a lot of fun, and it also serves as kind of a run-through for the team for the upcoming rodeo," Suderman said. "It gives us a chance to see where our hiccups are, and what we need to work on."

In addition to this event, conducted in conjunction with the collegiate rodeo, the club also donates money to the Muscular Dystrophy Association, Suderman said.

"Rodeo Club is a fun time, and the reward is in your work. There is always something going on," he said.

Picking up people doesn't have to include bars

"Libraries are a good way to meet men. If a guy is there, you know he's studious," Braun said. "A good way to break the ice would be to ask them to help you find something."

"But you don't go to the library that much," a friend of Braun's said.

Both women laughed, and Braun admitted to going to bars occasionally.

"I go to bars to have fun, but not for a romance," she said.

Mary Fields, sophomore in anthropology, said she agrees and said the atmosphere at greek functions is much better than the bars anyway.

"People seem more sincere at the functions. You don't feel like someone's not going to remember your name in the morning," she said.

Fields said the best way to approach her is to start up conversation, and be honest and straightforward.

Makaela Nikodym, freshman undecided in arts and sciences, said the approach that works for her is to be shy or ignore the men. Her roommate, Amy Kennedy, freshman in pre-professional elementary education, said she disagreed. Kennedy said she likes to meet men in the mall.

"First you have to make eye contact," Kennedy said. "Then you walk away and leave the store."

Kennedy said she checks to see if the man will follow her. If he does, she might approach him. Sometimes it even leads to dating.

Even though it might sound unlikely that a serious relationship would emerge out of meeting at a video store or on the highway, it can happen.

Hubener said she met her husband on Kansas Highway 75.

"We pulled into a Hardee's parking lot. I was introduced to him by a friend. Actually, he wasn't my type. He had long hair, and he was in a band. I did tell him he had pretty eyes."

Four years later they were married.

Penis performance perplexes reader

Dear Cassie,
I don't mean to sound like a nympho, but I haven't had sex in a long time. I have a very dedicated, wonderfully caring boyfriend, but no matter what we do, he doesn't "rise to the occasion." Any suggestions?
Signed, Just not Satisfied

Dear Just Not Satisfied,
It could be that your boyfriend is just nervous and feels like he has too much pressure to perform.

My suggestion is that you take the pressure off him. Don't place so much emphasis on having sex, but more on being together. Talk, cuddle and take long walks. If you learn how to be fulfilled by just being together without sex, the rest will happen later naturally.

Cassie

Paper Doll House

i call in sick but i'm calling home and my home is yet to be my mental residency
i trespass on my father's wooden floors the key will take me halfway but the welcome mat is battered there's no on there to greet me gavel branded on my forehead so my judgment is recorded on the defective part of gods creation that is if there is a god
all according to father and father knows best no fairplay, mental foreplay pre-rage festivities swept under expectation forecast calls for ommissive passive aggressive game of father knows best and ring around the rosary the rosary is father's pride the ring is his children choking and spitting in the venomous spell of holy water

of childhood

and i crave the solace of a stranger's affection to suffocate the anguish of anger's infection to be my pillow while my soul's in storage mothballs and rejection, childhood in a closet reality is a hanger far above passive aggressive reach my mother was the seamstress

my brother, insulation
my sister was the preacher as my father painted windows and taught us silence well my mother counts the stitches after each public appearance and mends her daughters when paper dolls are torn but we rip the seam of spirit before we sell the paper doll house

i call in late
i had an appointment with a child with an appetite for the miracle of solace in a stranger she cried in my affection and became my winter coat her mother was a mothball, her father was a gavel her brother was the bailiff, her sister was the narrator until the rosary deflated and the closet door cracked open the reunion was belated when unspoken words were spoken and the ring of fathers rosary scattered shortly after and i am the historian, moved home to paper ashes took my soul out of storage to break the painted windows i'm not supposed to talk about it, or remember a ring of witnesses though i live in his paper reality though i even call it home i'll never be a mothball and i'll never learn to sew.

Council seeks cheaper insurance

Health policies examined in order to lower costs

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

The Student Health Advisory Council is looking into making student insurance less expensive.

"We're hoping to be able to offer a cheaper plan by jiggling around the benefits," John Bell, SHAC chairman, said.

Bell and his committee are looking into making the coverage as comprehensive as possible while keeping it within the price range of the average student, he said.

Debra Duncan, graduate student in family life education and SHAC member, said she signed up for the health plan at the beginning of her first year at K-State, but she had to drop it because it was too expensive.

"I couldn't make it month to month," she said.

Bell said group policies offer advantages to people who prefer lower rates.

"A group policy works best because there is more money coming in, so the insurance company can offer lower rates," Bell said.

Under the current policy, children and spouses of students can be covered on the same policy for a little extra money. The policy is not an age-rated policy, so the basic premium is the same for all students despite their ages, he said.

"There is a range of options in it," he said.

SHAC recommends a company to the University, and a card promoting the health-insurance plan goes out in official mailings to all students. Students interested in the policy can send the card back and receive the coverage, or they can ignore the card, Bell said.

Unlike other universities, K-State doesn't require students to purchase the insurance policy. The University of Kansas requires all students to purchase their insurance policy or provide proof that they are covered by an insurance policy, he said.

Lafene Health Center is the gatekeeper for the policy. Unless a student on the insurance policy needs emergency medical treatment, the student must go to Lafene before going to another medical facility.

"It would be wrong of the committee to take business away from a health center paid for by the students," Bell said.

About 650 students have policies with K-State's carrier, Bell said. The plan is only recommended, not University-controlled, he said.

The current policy contains a $250,000 lifetime maximum. The deductible is $100 per student per year. The policy also has a stop-loss at $1,100 on each policy per year, he said.

The stop-loss means students have a maximum amount they have to pay. On $1,000 bill, a student pays $300 including the deductible, Bell said.

Two things the committee said were important to look for in a policy is the quality of the coverage over the price and the ability to control the maximum debt a student can incur, he said.

"What people would really like is more coverage for less money," he said.

Insurance companies don't work that way, he said. The cheaper the policy is, the less coverage the policy holder receives.

"We want to buy a good policy," Bell said.

SHAC has been carefully weighing the benefits of coverage against the premium and the deductible on each policy, he said.

Bell said the committee is looking for the happy medium between having a policy with strong coverage and expense.

"You need to look at the economics and look at the pros and cons," Duncan said.

If premiums and coverage are dropped to the floorboards, then it's not worth having the coverage because the deductibles are so high, Bell said.

"We're trying to find the point where extra coverage makes it a good bet to have health insurance," he said.

The committee is looking into creating three tiers of coverage for students with different price ranges. The first tier would be basic coverage. The second tier would have more benefits, and the third tier would have even more benefits, Bell said.

The majority of students don't need the comprehensive coverage, Duncan said. A minority of students are going to be sick enough to need complete coverage, but those students are more likely to have their own health plans elsewhere, she said.

Bell said the cost of the policy forces some students to gamble on their health, Duncan said.

"I'm a gambler, so I'm taking the risk," she said. "I wish I wasn't. If we had the middle-range plan now, I surely wouldn't be."

Duncan, an international student, said she thought it was difficult for students like her to get and afford coverage because they don't know where to go or what to look for. Her main interest is in providing an affordable kind of health plan for those students, she said.

SHAC saw the proposal from the current carrier on Feb. 17. Duncan said she thought SHAC would decide today if they would be searching for a different carrier or going with the same one.

"We've told them what we'd like to see changed in their rough draft," Bell said.

SHAC has been approached by several companies throughout the year, but the current carrier gets priority over other companies for next year's contract, he said.

"We're real interested in getting some sort of prescription care," Bell said.

Currently, only in-patient and out-patient drugs are covered. SHAC would like to get a policy that would allow students to get pharmacy coverage on regular prescriptions, like the allergy medication Seldane, for an extra fee of a few dollars.

Bell said a lot of thought is going into the selection process because the committee wants to find a plan it feels confident in recommending to friends.

Performance recreates spirit of West Africa

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

A West African village complete with straw huts, colorful woven blankets, dancers, drummers and storytellers appeared on stage Thursday night.

The Le Ballet national du Senegal, a company of 35 performers, treated the audience to a night of cultural entertainment Thursday night at McCain Auditorium.

Although the performance began a half-hour late, the performance was worth the wait.

From the minute the performers swirled out to the final dance steps, the energy level was phenomenal.

The performers, who are natives of Senegal, had a natural movement that shined through in each step.

The artistic director, Bouly Sonko, travels throughout Senegal searching for members for the company and ideas to involve in the choreography.

Because the dancers, drummers and acrobats come straight from Africa, the performance was authentic and inspiring.

The first program introduced the audience to an African vigil in Senegal.

A storyteller came out on stage and spoke in his native language while a red outline of Africa shone in the background.

The rest of the company, dressed in colorful African clothing, then joined him to recreate the spirit of West Africa.

Later on in the evening, the dancers told the story of sacred spirits frightening a young girl. The dancers wore elaborate white masks to represent the spirits.

During this scene, a dancer, dressed in a yellow straw costume, shook back and forth as if he were a giant broom, and a clown on stilts bounced around the stage.

The next scene demonstrated the precise choreography of the production.

Women, dressed in beautiful, ethnic clothing, took the straw baskets off their heads, set them down on the ground and beat them in perfect unison while the drums were rolling behind them.

The costumes were an important element of the production, but so was the nudity during the "Khaware" section of the performance.

Bare-breasted women sat down on the ground as the men tried to seduce them by dancing to the beat of the magical talking drum.

While it may have been a surprise or even a shock to some people, I thought it added to the authenticity of the production.

Another aspect of the ballet that was impressive was the use of native musical instruments.

In between the dance routines, musicians played a Kora, a 21-string melodic harp made from a gourd, and the Balafon, which is similar to a marimba.

From the dancers to the musicians, the production was definitely one of the highlights of the McCain season.

The acrobatics and breathtaking costumes created the atmosphere of a West African village.

Overall, it was an excellent way to celebrate Black History Month and educate the K-State and Manhattan community about the African culture through stories, music and motion.

▶ FINANCIAL AID

Students skipping class risk losing federal financial aid

REBECCA SCHULZ
Collegian

Not going to class can also mean losing financial aid.

"The government has a philosophy that students should go to class," Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance, said.

The Department of Education in Washington has a federal regulation that requires students who receive financial aid to attend class. Institutions that do not comply with this directive can lose all student financial aid. Currently, the department has no method to fully enforce the regulation.

"It seems reasonable that the government should expect students to go to class if they are receiving aid," Michael Ossar, professor in German, said.

K-State's policy requires the faculty to inform the financial aid office on the status of students' attendance, leaving it up to the discretion of the teacher according to what they require for attendance.

"It shouldn't matter as long as you're making the grade," Lance Gutsch, junior in civil engineering, said.

Moeder said letters are sent to professors with the 20-day roster and a form to fill out and send to financial aid.

"We want to wait until students have really settled into their course," he said. "The method we have here is probably the most intrusive. It really leaves it up to the instructors."

While enforcement of the federal directive is left up to faculty, it doesn't require them to take attendance.

"I think it's a good idea, but I don't like to be the policeman," Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics, said.

Shayleen Wederski, senior in biochemistry, said she receives financial aid but was not aware of the federal regulation. She said steps should be taken to better inform students.

Financial aid has received a good response from the faculty, and in most cases, students haven't gone through the correct drop/add procedure.

"Right now, it is officially helping us to inform students to drop/add," Moeder said.

included African Student Union, Bangladesh Student Association, India Student Association and International Club.

Allocation for Multicultural Student Council was postponed. The group requested $1,650 to pay for two speakers, but group members and senators were unsure of who would be speaking and when.

Senate approved fees for the K-State Union and KSDB FM-91.9. Both fees will remain the same and will be reviewed in two years.

With the allocations process finished, Senate has $25,000 in its fund to loan out to other student groups. They cut almost $18,000 from the original allocations proposal.

John Riedel, Parking and Campus Safety Committee chair, talked further about the raising of metered-parking rates from 25 to 75 cents.

"You may see a bill before Student Senate next week that would raise the price to 50 cents," Riedel said.

Michele Meier, business senator, said parking council is also considering doubling the number of meters at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Parking will be discussed at two student forums early next month. The first forum will be at noon March 8 in the K-State Union courtyard.

The second forum will be at 5 p.m. March 9 at Lucky BrewGrille.

Students can also get involved with parking issues by coming to the next Parking Council meeting at 3 p.m. March 16 in Union 205.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Board hopefuls worry about future

After seeing the evolution of many district issues, she said she still believes the key to improving the district is for parents to become part of the education team.

"We are all in this together," she said.

Like everyone facing the possibility of having to decide how to handle the district's budget, Hill said cuts may need to be made.

"Some services we want and expect are going to suffer," she said.

Hill said she is enthusiastic about Quality Performance Accreditation because the state will accredit districts on what they are actually doing.

QPA is a state program to assess schools on the basis of student performances on assessment tests instead of through quantitative measurements like counting the number of books in the library.

She said QPA is an evolving process. Like any new system, it may have some flaws, but none which cannot be remedied, she said.

The tests are varied assessments of basic skills, she said.

"I can't believe anybody could be opposed," she said.

PHIL MORGAN

Expectations and motivation are great concerns of Phil Morgan as well.

Morgan

Morgan, a former K-12 instructor and a parent of four, runs a baseball school with children from different socioeconomic and cultural backgrounds.

He said he has a strong interest in paying the community back for all it has done for his family and motivating students.

"I have a strong interest in helping kids," he said.

In the real world, he said, people facing high expectations are those who work hard and get jobs.

Morgan wants kids to be in a position that they have the skills to do what they want in life.

Morgan said Outcome-Based Education is only a new name for an old concept.

"It has taken place since education has taken place," he said.

He said teachers have always practiced mastery learning in their classrooms. If not, no one would have gotten past their math facts, he said.

It is only when the name was applied to OBE that people began to worry, he said.

MARY NICHOLS

Mary Nichols, storytelling instructor, doctoral student, parent of two and an incumbent of two terms, said she is worried about students lacking computer literacy.

Nichols

"Some don't even have the abilities to work in McDonald's," Nichols said.

She would like to see students learn more computer basics to prepare them for the future.

"The year 2000 is going to be different for the job market," Nichols said.

One big problem with technological education is some students have more ability than others because they have learned at home, Nichols said

Other children, Nichols said, have parents who are not computer literate or cannot afford to keep up with changing technology.

Budget issues are another big concern for Nichols.

"Budget cutting is not a pleasant occupation," she said.

She said governmental relations are going to be important for any board member. The Kansas Legislature is in a tax-cutting mood, and cuts are not just being aimed at K-12 education, but universities as well, Nichols said

"It costs money to educate children," she said.

Nichols said she believes a better word for QPA is results.

"That part no one complains about," she said.

Nichols said on the state level there has been a lot of confusion about what was needed with the QPA program.

"You don't start massive programs on top of confusion," Nichols said.

Faculty member voices civil-rights concerns

Butler said one of the most important activities in which she was involved was the organization of breakfast programs in local schools.

"Eastern is located essentially in the foothills of Appalachia where the level of poverty is very high. We were able to make a real difference."

In addition to creating a breakfast program for local school children, Butler said she was also involved in organizing tutoring classes.

"Through these activities, I was able to have a positive impact on the community," she said. "But what I have taken away from these times is the effect grassroots participation can have in bringing change."

Through her involvement in local community service, Butler said she also learned about the importance of forming coalitions with other women.

"My younger years had been filled with strong women, so I had grown up with a sense of women's resiliency. But when I became involved with other women in the movement on campus, I realized women were always behind the efforts for social change."

As a student during the civil-rights movement, Butler said she was heavily influenced by the philosophies of a woman named Ella Baker.

"As a civil-rights activist, her philosophy was 'strong people do not need strong leaders,'" she said.

Butler said the efforts of people like Baker are often forgotten.

"Baker was involved in many aspects of social change, from organizing unions for black women in New York City to collecting data in the South for the NAACP," she said.

Butler said she is concerned that today there are extremists working to dismantle the change achieved during the civil-rights period.

"There is a cyclical movement to change. The pendulum swings one way and then swings back the other way. But each time it is harder to get it moving back in the right direction."

Butler said she is also concerned that there is a sense of lost energy on college campuses today.

"I worry that students have been lulled into a sense of complacency. Students are aware of what they don't like with a lack of awareness."

Candidates discuss town's economic base

on a new business park, the project must be approved by a public vote," he said. "Public programs will only work with public support and approval."

Hall said he shares the same attitude about a juvenile detention center.

"There is a need for a juvenile detention center and jail, which must be addressed by both the county and the city. As with a business park, this issue must also be placed before the taxpayers to be voted on, as they will be asked to pay for this improvement."

The Manhattan citizens should also have a say in how the half-cent sales tax is spent, he said.

"With the half-cent sales tax that passed in November, the city will have an additional $2 million each year to spend," Hall said. "We must demand that the city be accountable for our taxes. We must ask: What are we doing? Why are we doing it? Who are we doing it for?"

Hall said the same care should be taken when planning for future growth.

"I favor responsible growth. With the downsizing of Fort Riley and the peaking of enrollments at K-State, our growth will not be as it has in the past," he said. "Our planning must follow reason, must be prudent and must follow facts, not wishful expectations."

EDWARD HORNE

The future might not be so bright, unless the Manhattan community can pull together and work toward a common goal, Edward Horne said.

"The community need for an economic base is very important, especially with the downsizing of Fort Riley," Horne said. "We should be trying to pull the community together to support that goal."

Manhattan is headed in the right direction, however, Horne said.

Horne

"I'll be honest. I don't have a specific magical plan, but I know that the whole community does need to be encouraged to focus," he said. "Businesses should be encouraged to re-invest in the community.

The jobs will be needed because there could be 4,500 fewer people here after Fort Riley's downsizing is completed, Horne said.

"It will definitely affect our economy. It is certainly a high-priority item."

Horne has served as chairman of the Library Board.

"I'm in very big support of the Manhattan Public Library expansion project. There is a proposed expansion, and the project has wide support. I think it would be very worthwhile for the whole community."

LEX PEARSON

Lex Pearson has lived in Manhattan all of his life and said he knows the benefits K-State and Fort Riley can bring.

Pearson

"I love K-State being a part of the city," he said. "The school gets money back. It's beneficial to the students at large."

Pearson said everyone in Manhattan will feel the effect if Fort Riley is closed.

"It'll hurt if the fort keeps getting smaller. It's like a trickle-down effect. I'm a painter, and if there's no construction happening anywhere, that trickles down to me," Pearson said. "I'll do what I can. I'm for the fort."

Pearson said another industrial park could help with Manhattan's economic development.

"We need an industrial park. We have one out by McCall's, and there's interest there," he said. "I think an area by the airport would be a good place to have another one. That way it could help the airport also."

great research...
Kaplan spends over $3 million annually developing products and researching the tests. We've proved that we know the tests inside out.
LSAT — In 1992, Kaplan predicted the elimination of an LSAT question type and changed our course in anticipation of the change.
GRE — In 1993, the ETS was forced to withdraw a GRE question type because Kaplan "broke the code."

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Kelly Hanel, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications, rides around a barrel Sunday afternoon during the finals of the KSU Rodeo in Weber Hall. Hanel made it in 12.72 seconds. This nearly tied the time of her sister, Kasey, senior in elementary education, who rode in 12.79 seconds. The two competed in the barrel-race finals and were K-State's only participants in the finals Sunday afternoon.

Rodeo days

10,000 people attend rodeo at K-State

JILL TEGTMEIER
Collegian

Ten thousand rodeo fans turned out to see K-State's annual rodeo this weekend.

The K-State Rodeo Club organized and helped sponsor the annual KSU Rodeo last week in Weber Arena.

The winning team for the men's competition was Panhandle State University from Goodwell, Okla. For the women's events, it was Southeast Oklahoma State University from Durant, Okla.

Although the K-State Rodeo Team didn't have much of a showing in the finals on Sunday, it did put in a lot of hard work, said Dave Katzer, K-State Rodeo Team captain.

"Between the facilities we use and the work from the team members, I think most people agree we put on the best rodeo in the region," he said.

Katzer said he not only competed in the saddle bronc event but also did everything from sweep bleachers to present a plaque to the Coors beer distributors for their support.

"It's lots of manual labor — lots of cleaning up every night and wiring things together to get ready for the next show," he said.

Dan Suderman, K-State Rodeo Club president, said the rodeo was something special for him.

"I don't deserve a bit of credit," he said. "Everybody worked real hard and had fun while they did it. There was no big chief sitting back and telling everyone what to do."

When team members were not setting up or cleaning up, they were competing.

Sophomore wins rodeo crown

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

The Miss Rodeo K-State crown was passed on Saturday night in Weber Arena.

Lena Ratliff, sophomore in animal science and industry, was given the title by last year's Miss Rodeo K-State, Libby Schnoebelen, senior in microbiology and animal science and industry.

Kara Beth Lowe, sophomore in agricultural journalism, was first runner-up, and Jodi Christiansen, junior in business management, was second runner-up.

Christiansen was also awarded the Miss Congeniality title, which was voted on by the other two contestants.

The judging was divided into three different categories and was done days before the crowning.

The first category of judging was modeling at TW Longhorn's, Ratliff said.

"We had the opportunity to pick out clothing to wear from S Bar J Western Clothiers and from Lee's Western Wear and were then able to model to the song of our choice," she said.

The contestants were also required to answer an impromptu question at the modeling competition. Christiansen was awarded the modeling award.

The second judging category was the horsemanship contest. Within the horsemanship category, there were four different areas of competition.

The first area was performing horsemanship patterns.

"We each drew for two different horses that we had never ridden before and were then asked to perform two different patterns on them," Ratliff said.

The contestants were each given two minutes to get used to the horse they had drawn.

During the patterns, they were judged on horsemanship skills, a mount and a dismount. Ratliff won the horsemanship-performance competition.

The next part of the horsemanship category was a written test.

"The test covered information about K-State and about the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association," Christiansen said.

The third part of the horsemanship category was a 15- to 20-minute interview. Contestants were asked everything from current events to life at K-State to the rodeo.

For the last part of the horsemanship category, contestants gave a speech at Giorgio's

Forums over; elections next for school-board candidates

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

The issues are on the table. Now it is decision time.

The field of 10 candidates for the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board will be narrowed down to only eight after Tuesday's primary.

Running for the board are Rick Crow, Peter Garretson, Colleen Hampton, Joleen Hill, Phil Morgan, Mary Nichols, Deb Nuss, Michael Pearson, Kimberly Wells and Larry Weaver.

The candidates are coming off of two forums late last week.

Thursday, the Northview Area/Dix Neighborhood Association sponsored a small forum at Northview Elementary School, and Friday, the city's PTO/PTA groups sponsored a well-attended forum at Amanda Arnold Elementary.

All the candidates attended the Northview forum except for Crow, who didn't attend any of the forums. This was the community's only opportunity to hear Wells, for she was unable to attend the Amanda Arnold forum because of an injury.

The candidates were questioned on new issues, including overcrowding guidelines in reference to the opening of the new Frank Bergman Elementary School and how the community can benefit from school facilities.

Nichols, a two-term incumbent, said one reason she ran for the board initially was because of the district's battle with overcrowding.

She told the story of a kindergartner who one day told her mother she didn't know if she liked her class because her teacher had been so busy she didn't have time to say hello to her.

Nichols said she wants to keep class sizes small so teachers can spend quality time with their pupils.

Garretson said with the downsizing of Fort Riley and the uncertainty about how many students will be leaving the district, he hopes the district has enough students to warrant all the schools.

"We might have to close a school," Garretson said.

This would be a decision, he said, that would help the budget but would anger a neighborhood.

Hampton, a parent of three children in the district, said she does not think her children have ever felt the effects of overcrowding.

"I don't think they have been in a crowded classroom," she said.

She also said, however, that if the fort's downsizing does dramatically lower attendance levels, it could be nice to have extra space.

When discussing community usage of schools after hours, the responses were mixed, considering the budget strain the district is facing.

The state has not raised the amount of money it gives the district per student for three years. Combining this flat budget with the potential of losing students leads all the candidates to believe tough decisions concerning different programs may have to be made.

▶ CITY COMMISSION RACE

Candidate wants to cut taxes

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

This is the third of a three-part series spotlighting the eight candidates running for the city commission.

Eight candidates have put themselves in the limelight after dedicating their time to running for city commissioner.

Voters will be asked to choose their top three choices Tuesday in primary election.

STANLEY CROWDER

Cutting taxes is the plan for Stanley Crowder.

"Taxes are too high in this area," Crowder said. "They're money-crazy. I'm going to cut taxes."

Crowder, who has run in the city-commission race five previous times, wants to stop action on the half-cent sales tax that was passed last year.

"That tax was passed because Cessna was coming in. They're not coming here, so I want to push to get that stopped," he said. "We can take the money already collected and give it to the sewer and water company and have them give people a reduction. We need to return that money to the taxpayers."

Crowder

Crowder said he did not support plans for constructing a new air terminal at the Manhattan Municipal Airport and a four-lane highway on Seth Child sRoad.

"Manhattan doesn't need any of that. This town is gradually dying," he said. "Only two lanes are used on Seth Childs anyway. Why pay all this money? People take the Road Runner to Kansas City's airport."

One way to help businesses in Manhattan is to close the Manhattan Town Center, Crowder said.

"We need to foreclose on the mall. Let Manhattan have the businesses," he said. "If you look at the old maps, part of the mall is in Pottawatomie County, so part of that money isn't even going to Manhattan or Riley County."

Manhattan will also be losing money if Fort Riley closes.

"Manhattan is going to be hurting. I think Fort Riley is going to close," Crowder said. "There's a lot of discrimination against the GIs, but when college is out, the businesses welcome them. Manhattan will shrivel up without them."

Crowder also said K-State should not be a part of the city.

"Manhattan should leave them alone. They think it says

▶ SCHOOL-BOARD RACE

Candidates concerned about Fort Riley pullout, budgeting for quality education

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

This is the third in a three-part series looking at candidates for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board.

Concern for the changing size of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 classrooms and changes in the way students are educated have caught the interest of citizens hoping to be on the USD 383 School Board.

Ten candidates are vying for four available spots on the board. Two will be eliminated during the primary Tuesday.

PETER GARRETSON

Peter Garretson, who previously served on a school board in Highland Park, Ill., is a retired military attorney. His son, Alex, graduated from Manhattan High School in 1993.

After his retirement, Garretson re-enlisted, this time at K-State. He is pursuing a degree in secondary education.

Garretson

Garretson said his greatest concerns deal with the district's budget.

The state's contribution to the district is $3,600 per student. This amount has not been changed for three years, even though district expenses have risen.

Combine these flat budgets with the uncertain pullout of Fort Riley students because of downsizing, and it becomes evident the district could have some hard budgeting decisions to make, Garretson said.

Garretson said these cutbacks could mean the district might have to make cuts in areas such as uniforms, activities or personnel.

"The challenge is to provide our children not with more education but with better education," he said.

He said he hopes the community will be able to counterbalance the effects of military downsizing.

"Hopefully, Manhattan will be a growing community," he said.

▶FOUNDER OF LOCAL COSTUME STORE DIES AT AGE 69; SERVICE TODAY

Marie C. Lewis, 69, of 814 Wildcat Ridge, died Thursday evening. She was the founder of Marie's Costumes shop, which has been in Manhattan since 1977.

Lewis was born on Nov. 4, 1925, in Wood River, Neb. She was the daughter of Walter Sylvester and Cecilia Bonhart Schlick.

Lewis had resided in Grand Island, Neb., before moving to Manhattan in 1969.

Lewis graduated from Wood River High School in 1943. She then taught school for one year before working for a munitions plant during World War II.

In 1969, she moved to Manhattan, where she opened Marie's Costumes in 1977.

Lewis owned and operated the shop until her retirement in 1992, when her daughter Pam Miller bought it from her.

"She started collecting costumes and things other people made," Miller said. "She just collected things."

The things she collected were first sold as costumes for children. When she realized she had so many costumes, she started a business, Miller said.

Lewis sold costumes to K-State's dance and theater programs.

Lewis was a member of many Manhattan organizations, including the Seven Dolors Catholic Church, the VFW and the American Legion Auxiliaries.

In 1947, she married Weldon Roger Beier in Evanston, Wyo.

He preceded her in death. On Sept. 25, 1976, she was married to Arthur Earl Lewis in Manhattan. He preceded her in death.

Lewis is survived by six daughters, including Pamela Miller, Manhattan; five sons, including Michael and Steven Beier, Manhattan; one brother and one sister; 11 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Lewis was preceded in death by three sisters and her parents.

Friends may contribute to a memorial for Homecare and Hospice Inc. Contributions may be left in care of the Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral Home, 1616 Poyntz Ave.

The service will be at 10 a.m. today at Seven Dolors Catholic Church.

▶63-YEAR-OLD K-STATE STUDENT DIES; SERVICE SCHEDULED FOR TODAY

Yvonne G. Price, 63, of Wamego, died Thursday at her home.

She was born June 4, 1931, in Nam-Dinh, Vietnam. In 1953, she moved to the United States to live at Fort Eustis, Va.

She married Richard Price on July 15, 1964, in Westmoreland.

She and her husband moved to Wamego in 1971.

She had attended K-State for the past two years, taking classes in language development.

She is survived by her husband, two daughters and 10 grandchildren.

The service will be at 10 a.m. today at R.J. Evans Mortuary in Wamego.

▶FORMER FORT RILEY MAINTENANCE OFFICER CONVICTED OF 2 MURDERS

A former maintenance officer at Fort Riley was convicted of two murders Friday.

Pfc. Eddie Patterson, 22, was found guilty of the July 9 shooting deaths of Pv2 Anthony Thornton, 22, and Spec. Silky Boatwright, 23.

Thornton was a member of Company B, 701st Support Battalion, and Boatwright was a member of Company C, 701st Support Battalion.

Patterson was found guilty of the premeditated murder of Boatwright and the felony murder of Thornton.

Patterson was also convicted of communication of a threat and violation of the weapons regulation in connection with the shooting deaths.

An eight-member military jury, which included officers and enlisted soldiers, sentenced Patterson to life in prison, reduction to the rank of private E-1, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and a dishonorable discharge.

Patterson, formerly of the 556th Maintenance Company, 541st Maintenance Battalion at Fort Riley, will be serving his sentence at Fort Leavenworth.

▶U.S. AND CHINA AVOID TRADE WAR, SIGN COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENT

BEIJING (AP) — China and the United States averted a major trade war Sunday by signing a comprehensive agreement putting teeth into Chinese laws protecting copyright, trademarks and patents.

The agreement capped 20 months of "often very difficult negotiations," said Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky.

"This is a strong agreement for American companies and American workers," President Clinton said in a statement issued by the White House.

The agreement spells out measures that would enforce laws China wrote after similarly tense talks that went down to the wire in 1992. In those negotiations, the United States demanded stricter legal protection for its copyrights, patents and trademarks.

The steps include establishing a nationwide task force to raid businesses engaged in piracy, review business records, destroy goods and equipment, and order closure and criminal prosecution.

Suit protects workers from chemical waste

NIKOLA ZYTKOW
Collegian

A new suit may soon be available for nuclear plant maintenance workers, firefighters and people who clean up hazardous waste.

The Institute for Environmental Research in Seaton Hall has been given a grant from Oceaneering Space Systems to evaluate a new suit called the advanced worker protection system, said Elizabeth McCullough, co-director of the institute and professor of textiles.

The new suit is an advanced version of the old suit, which has been worn by workers for a long time now, McCullough said.

Both the old and new suits are impermeable to protect the worker from chemicals. But while the old suit does have a self-contained breathing apparatus, it lacks a cooling system, McCullough said.

Since sweat does not evaporate, in the old suit the person is susceptible to heat stroke, along with discomfort from sweat dripping all the way into the boots. Because of this, the worker can only wear them for short periods of time between rests, she said.

"This causes a tremendous loss of productivity on the job," McCullough said.

The new suit provides an internal cooling system that operates by using cold water tubes to cool the body. The system is tied to the air supply system.

The testing is taking place in an experimental chamber at temperatures such as 100 degrees and 80 degrees. It will go on for more than a week, and the participants are Manhattan firefighters, McCullough said.

"We are trying to measure the tolerance time in the new suit versus the old one," she said.

Jim Taylor, a local firefighter, said the four firefighters involved in the testing are getting paid.

"We walk a treadmill as long as we can hold out," he said.

Taylor said firefighters can walk about an hour to an hour and a half in the new suit, compared to 20 to 30 minutes in the old suit.

"They have thermo resistors on us that detect the skin temperatures and an EKG that detects heart rate and blood pressure," Taylor said.

At this point, the conclusion is that the new suit is two-to-three times more effective than the old one in the amount of work that can be achieved in it before the worker has to take a break, McCullough said.

If the new suit proves successful, it will be available for use within a year, she said.

Regents approve research center for food animals

ANGIE STUMP
Collegian

Research and post-graduate education will be the focus of the new Food Animal Health and Management Center at K-State.

The Kansas Board of Regents approved the new research group in the College of Veterinary Medicine on Feb. 16.

"We're elated," said Dr. Ron Marler, dean of veterinary medicine. "This is a major step forward in the cooperative relationship between the agricultural base in Kansas and Kansas State University."

The College of Veterinary Medicine made the decision to reallocate funds to form the center last spring.

"This was a major effort in refocusing our priorities around our strengths in food animal health and management," Marler said.

In November, the college named Dr. Jerry Gillespie as director of the Food Animal Health and Management Center. He left his position as head of the Department of Clinical Sciences to assume the leadership in the new center.

"My job at the center will be to act as department leader of the faculty and staff in the development of the center and to make sure we stay with the mission," he said. "I'll be also working to raise funds for the center."

Approval by the regents was the last step in the proposal for the new center. It had to be approved by the college and then by the University before the regents could take action.

Gillespie said the center's mission is applied animal-health research and management and postgraduate education.

"Our goal is to be one of, if not the leading food animal health research center in the world," he said. "I want it to be a place where the very best faculty want to be and where the very best graduate students want to come to study."

The center has four faculty members, a postdoctoral trainee and two staff members.

Gillespie said he is in the process of hiring a new swine specialist and hopes to add two more by the end of the year.

"In five years, we hope to have twice the staff we have now," he said. "The number of graduate students we will have depends on how well we raise money."

The specific aims for the center, as published in the proposal, are "to provide an environment for food animal health and management research and to provide a center of excellence in post-DVM and postdoctoral education in food animal health and management."

"Now, we have the means to provide focused research in postgraduate education for the food animal industry," said Dr. John Galland, assistant professor of clinical sciences and a faculty member with the center.

Gillespie said current research includes pre-harvest food safety, work in trying to improve the reproductive performance of beef cattle, and developing a computer program to help producers manage health practices on their farms.

"Up until recently, the focus for control of food safety has been a matter at the processor and beyond. We are doing research to develop management safety," he said.

The center is located in the east wing of the veterinary teaching hospital.

"We were working hard before the center was approved, and we will continue to do so," Gillespie said. "The regents approving the center helped us define our relationship with the rest of the college and campus.

"We're excited, and we think the Blood drive numbers are down

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

The numbers for the last week's blood drive were disappointing.

"There were a total of 533 donations and 43 defers, and these numbers are down considerably," Dodie Faulconer, head nurse of the blood drive, said.

Jeff Sneed, regional coordinator for blood services of the American Red Cross, said the goal was 80 donors for Derby Food Center and 165 donors per day for the rest of the week.

The blood drive was conducted at Derby on Feb. 20 and in the K-State Union Tuesday through Friday. The school that donates the most blood receives the traveling trophy and gets to keep it until the next blood drive.

K-State has won the four previous semesters. The results of this semester are not in yet because KU is not scheduled to have its blood drive for several weeks, Faulconer said.

Sneed said there has been a decrease in donor participation. Last semester's decrease was probably because the blood drive was during the K-State vs. KU football game. The cause for this decrease is unknown.

Kody Krien, junior in pre-pharmacy, said it is important to have a blood drive because it is necessary for hospitals and for surgery.

Sponsors of the blood mobile are Delta Tau Delta, American Red Cross, Lafene Health Center, Alphi Phi Omega, Golden Key National Honor Society, the Association of Residence Halls and Manhattan Christian College.

IN OUR OPINION

by the Collegian Editorial Board

K-State voters could make a difference

If the students of K-State voted as a unified body, we could vote just about anything into effect.

It is time once again for the traditional "go-vote" editorial from the Collegian.

We could have used an editorial from our archives saying how important it is to vote.

That might measure up to the same level of apathy that runs rampant through the K-State student body when it comes to voting.

This year's elections of city commissioners and USD 383 Board of Education members should be even more important to students because campus is now part of the city, and campus is affected by the sales taxes.

If the students of K-State voted as a unified body, we could vote just about anything into effect. That shouldn't be our goal. Our goal should be getting our voices heard and our votes counted on campus and city issues.

This election should spark student interest because a K-State student is running for city commissioner. Justin Kastner wants a say for K-State in city decisions.

Vote and make the city commission listen to us, as students and voters.

But let's face it, K-State students don't vote. Only about 18 percent voted in the last student election.

Large numbers of students won't vote in the city elections.

Just try and prove us wrong.

Environment doesn't cause homosexuality

KEVYN JACOBS

Is being gay a mental illness?

Those of you who read my column last week know that many homosexuals, including myself, didn't choose to be attracted to members of the same gender.

But if it isn't a choice, then what causes it? Was I born this way? Is it the result of my upbringing? Am I in some way mentally ill?

The evidence seems to suggest no. Now, I don't claim to be a mental-health expert. I'm not a psychiatrist or a psychologist or an expert on early childhood development. I'm just an interested lay individual who is giving you his subjective insight on the topic. And from my perspective, I don't think homosexuality is an illness. Nor do I think my sexual orientation can be changed with any kind of therapy.

And the mental-health profession generally seems to agree with me here.

There has long been a school of individuals who have viewed homosexuality as a developmental disorder or an illness.

In the early decades of this century, homosexual males were castrated, injected with hormones, subjected to electroshock and aversion therapies, encouraged to "bond" with masculine, father-figure role models, or were even lobotomized in an effort to find a "cure" for what was then considered to be "sick" behavior.

These "treatments" did nothing to stop homosexual tendencies in the subjects. Eventually, the "treatments" were discontinued, being called inhumane efforts to fix something that wasn't broken.

In 1973, the American Psychiatric Association finally concluded that homosexuality, while possibly resulting from environmental factors, was immutable once set — you could change it. They removed homosexuality from their lists of illnesses, citing the fact that most homosexuals lived healthy, constructive lives free from any other mental illness, and therefore homosexuality probably was just a normal variation on the human sexuality theme.

The evidence just didn't support it being an illness.

The emphasis in the mental-health field ever since has been on helping homosexuals adjust to living healthy, happy lives, accepting the way they are.

Mind you, there ARE still those in the mental-health field who still believe a homosexual orientation to be dysfunction and who attempt to change their patients' sexual orientation.

These practitioners are in a decided minority, and there is growing evidence that the kind of "reparative" therapy they provide often does more harm than good to the patient's mental state.

Sigmund Freud, the father of modern psychiatry, had a lot of influence on modern attitudes about the "pathology" of homosexuality. Freud is famous for suggesting that homosexuality develops in early childhood as a result of a strong mother and a weak or absent father. (Incidentally, Freud believed that once set, a person's sexual orientation could not be changed — it was set for life.)

Freud's reasoning in this matter has been largely discounted by a modern mental-health profession that sees homosexuality as a normal deviance in human sexuality. But there are still people who believe that Freud was correct about the causality of homosexuality.

Many of you grew up in environments just like mine — and grew up to be heterosexual.

Personally, I find Freud's idea particularly fascinating because I come from the very background that Freud was describing — my parents were divorced, and I was raised by my single mother, whom I consider to be VERY strong. (If being able to work full-time AND singlehandedly raise healthy, well-adjusted kids isn't a good definition of strong, then I don't know what is.)

Now, you might say this is evidence that Freud was right. But wait!

I have a brother less than two years different from me in age, raised in the exact same environment with that same absent father and strong mother. And he is most definitely heterosexual.

If it's the environment that does it, then why isn't he gay, too?

Many of you reading this right now know about the kind of home situation I am talking about — we are a generation that understands divorce and growing up in single-parent households. Many of you were raised in situations similar to mine, by single, strong mothers, without fathers present to help in the day-to-day tasks of raising kids.

Many of you grew up in environments just like mine — and grew up to be heterosexual.

That leads me to believe that environment isn't the whole story. Oh, it certainly may play a part, I won't deny that.

But maybe there is something else going on here other than just the family situation I grew up in.

Which leads me to my topic for next week: is it biology that caused my homosexuality?

UPDATE ON HETEROSEXIST & RACIST T-SHIRTS:

Two weeks ago, I reported to you that Hot Line Gifts in the Manhattan Town Center was selling heterosexist and racist shirts.

I am pleased to be able to tell you that the manager of Hot Line Gifts called me this week and informed me that the shirts are no longer being sold there — the owner has pulled them from the shelves.

I applaud Hot Line gifts for taking this very reasonable step. It shows great courage and fortitude on the owner's part, and I wish to publicly thank the manager for the great job she has done in handling this difficult situation.

Hot Line Gifts has done the right thing.

Christianity and compassion must go together

KATHLEEN MASTIO

Whenever my close friends come over to hang out, we usually end up talking about God.

I am somehow sucked into talking about my theology. Unfortunately, I am very unsure of certain aspects of my belief.

I have done a lot of observation in seeking my answers about God.

I am now certain about four things: God is, I am, I am not God, and compassion is beautiful.

While I am sure these things are probably no revelation to most of the world, I found them to be quite surprising.

There are two things that never cease to amaze me.

One is the fact that most Christians are so 100-percent certain of their beliefs.

I am also shocked by how inconsistent some Christians are.

Having read a large portion of the Bible, I would like to know how so many forget compassion.

Compassion is probably the most important lesson the Bible has to offer.

Compassion can play a very significant role in our lives.

It is important to offer it to others, lest they fail to offer it to us.

How many times do we need someone else to be a little more patient or understanding?

Compassion occurs on several levels. It can be an understanding for a physical ailment or a mental and emotional understanding of what level people are functioning on.

Once in a while, I would like friends and family to realize that no one has the same experience and not everything I do has a hidden meaning.

Modern rhetoric has thrown compassion out the window and has replaced it with tolerance. For some, these two ideas may be identical, but they are not.

Tolerance implies you are having to support an undue burden from the people around you.

Having compassion is having the ability to look past all of that and see God in another individual.

I sometimes wonder if the only people in whom we see God is ourselves.

The next time the opportunity arises, see the goodness in other people.

Look at other people for the praiseworthy things they do and the differences they make, instead of focusing on annoying habits, mistakes and differences of opinion.

Standing for the value of other people is important. A society should be gauged by its empathy toward others.

Everyone should live by the old proverb,, there but for the grace of God go I. It could have just as easily have been one of us heading down a dark twisted road.

One of the most rousing sermons I've heard was given by my pastor about forgiveness. The main idea of the sermon was a comparison of forgiving others and asking for forgiveness from God.

If we would go before God and ask for forgiveness, shouldn't we be willing to forgive those who have wronged us?

A little compassion goes a long way to build bridges and form friendships.

Isn't it time we reached our hands out to other travelers down the road of life?

Try smiling at someone or asking about their day and really meaning it.

Stop pretending to care, and start taking interest in other people's lives.

Although the proverb "Forgive and forget" might seem old and outdated, the bridges it can build may surprise you.

Don't let the opportunity pass you by.

Be kind to someone who needs a little forgiveness or a little empathy.

Don't condemn the answers others give for questions you have not been asked.

▶ PARKING

Cooperation could help

Dear editor,

Speaking of parking, I have been faculty representative on the University Parking Council for almost three years now. We've spent many pleasant hours listening and learning about the campus "parking problems." I would like to make a couple of observations about the parking discussion and share with you a few of my dreams.

My first observation is that we continue to use a language of rights and needs to talk about an issue of privileges and wants. There are certain rights that we have that are guaranteed by the Constitution. Driving a car is not one of them, and finding an empty parking space near the building of our choice is also not one of them. As an old landlord of mine used to say: "You have two rights: to breathe and to pay rent" (and he wasn't too sure about the breathing part).

A few of us need a parking space, a sure thing, next to a building. Those of us who have a physical disability that makes walking difficult or impossible probably need a parking space. A parent who has a 7:30 class and the day-care center doesn't open until 7:15 might need a handy parking space. Women (or men) who are required to wear pantyhose and pumps to work every day may need a parking space close to their office to avoid ankle injuries. Most of us, however, don't need a parking space. We want a parking space, and we want it right now.

A second observation is that discussions about parking and people's behavior about parking are irrational. We know (because we've counted) that at the busiest times of day on campus, there are from 300 to 500 empty parking spaces available. Most of these are likely to be in the outer lots, for instance behind Call Hall. Still, people pull into the lot behind Durland Hall at 11 a.m. for an 11:30 class and sit and wait for a parking space to open up a little after 11:20. A person could drive to Call Hall at 11 a.m., park the car and walk to Durland Hall in 10 minutes and have time to relax and have a Coke before the 11:30 a.m. class. Does this sound like a rational idea, one that would save fuel, help the environment, contribute to health of the walker/driver and reduce stress? Of course.

Would most people who drive their cars to campus think it was a nifty idea? Probably not. I rest my case.

Now, for my dreams. In waking reality, almost no one in the history of Parking Council has come to one of our meetings to tell us what a great job we are doing, that they are really impressed with how fast we removed the snow or how much they appreciated the new and improved lighting in the parking lots. However, in my sleeping dreams, I have been haunted by fantasies of a series of letters that have come through campus mail from people who are concerned about the parking problem. I'll share just a few excerpts.

A student: "... and I realize that some students drive a long distance to school and have to get up early enough without having to hassle about a parking space once they get to campus. I decided to walk the six blocks from home to free up a space for someone who might need it more than I do."

A secretary: "You were right! I started parking by the vet school and walking to my office in the Union. I feel so much better. Thanks!"

One of the suits in Anderson Hall: "I've been thinking. Walking for 10 minutes a day is just what the doctor ordered. I don't need my reserved parking stall anymore. Maybe a student could use it."

"My first observation is that we continue to use a language of rights and needs to talk about an issue of privileges and wants."

Another student: " I drove on campus to hear a speaker in the Union last night. I realized that there might be people in the community who might be less able to walk a long distance than I am. So I parked over in West Stadium so that maybe a space would be available closer to the Union for someone else."

Maintenance worker: "What could I do to help? I get here early so I never have a problem finding a space, but I would be willing to park in a different place if it would make the whole system work better."

I know, I need to wake up and smell the asphalt.

Being a Vegetarian at an all-beef U.

Being surrounded by so much beef at K-State , how can students eliminate meat from their diets?

Even in the land where the buffaloes roam, some people have made the decision to eliminate items such as beef and chicken from their diets.

For some, vegetarianism is a way of life.

Mike Muth, Manhattan resident, said he believes geography does play a large role in a person's diet.

"I guess if you live along the ocean, you eat seafood," Muth said. "If you live in Kansas, you eat meat."

Muth said he grew up in California where seafood was abundant. Three years ago, he said he made the decision to become a vegetarian mainly for health reasons.

In his diet, Muth said he eats no chicken or red meat, but continues to eat a large amount of fish.

Muth said his eating habits are not meant to offend anyone. It's just his preference.

"I don't think eating beef is wrong. It's a money source for a lot of people and that's fine," he said.

But Muth said he does have concerns about what is done to red meat and chicken.

"I think they use steroids and chemicals that you don't know about," Muth said. "I don't want those chemicals in my system."

Muth said the sight of red meat and chicken does not bother him.

"It's the smell that's repulsive," he said.

Unlike Muth, Gretchen Morgan, senior in theater, said she did not become a vegetarian for health reasons.

Morgan said it's the idea of eating an animal bothers her, but she does eat dairy products.

"For me that's different because I'm not actually eating the muscle of an animal," Morgan said. "It just doesn't have the same effect."

Morgan said she became a vegetarian five years ago, but it was a slow process.

"Well, I never really liked meat anyway, then I started thinking about what I put in my body, and it disgusted me," she said.

Morgan said she believes it is more difficult to be a vegetarian in a state like Kansas.

"It's nice to go to bigger cities — or states even — where they do have restaurants just for vegetarians," Morgan said.

Morgan said she does not believe in today's society, with the wide range of food choices available, that it is difficult to get protein from sources other than from meats.

Misty Schultz, sophomore undecided, said she is a vegetarian because she believes it is wrong to eat animals, but also because of the health aspects.

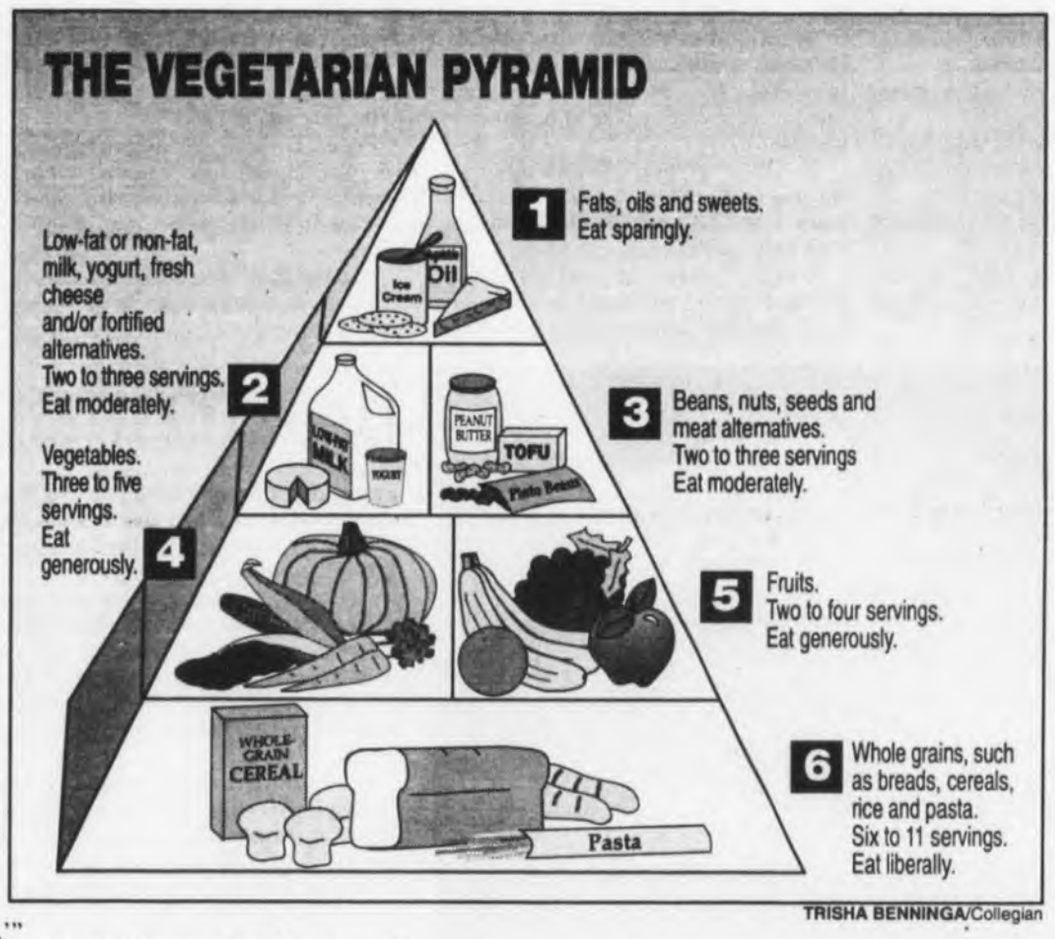
Schultz said it does not bother her when others eat meat.

"I don't try to push my opinions on others," Schultz said. "It's not my place to tell people how to eat or live their lives."

Schultz said her father owns farm land and raises cattle, but was still accepting of her decision to become a vegetarian her freshman year in high school.

"At the beginning they just thought it was a fad, and I was just trying to be different," she said.

Schultz said she thinks that she eats less fat than a non-vegetarian, but she still eats some unhealthy items too.



"I'm pretty positive I eat less fat than a normal person, but sometimes I still eat onion rings and French fries," she said. "Occasionally, I even have to eat ice cream."

Barbara Scheule, administrative dietitian for housing and dining, said it is complicated to plan meals in each of the dining centers on campus because students have a wide range of eating habits.

Some students are used to eating large portions of meat at each meal. Others, she said, are vegetarians.

About two years ago, Scheule said the dining centers started offering vegetarian entrees, but even among vegetarians there are differences in the types of food requested.

"We have some items that some vegetarians are very pleased and satisfied with as an entree, but others will say, 'This really isn't an entree to me,'" she said. "Then we have some items that some vegetarians are pleased with and others will say, 'I'm not going to eat this.'"

TRISHA BENNINGA/Collegian

Because some vegetarians do not eat items such as dairy products but others do, Scheule said that it is difficult to determine what exactly vegetarians will eat.

Scheule said a common misconception about vegetarians is that they do not get enough protein.

"From a nutritional standpoint, a traditional diet, or perhaps a traditional midwest diet, has a lot more meat in it than physically people need," Scheule said.

Scheule said a person's daily requirement of protein could be received by eating a 3-ounce hamburger, a 1-ounce piece of cheese and one egg.

Scheule said she has concerns that vegetarians who do not eat dairy products are not receiving enough calcium.

"There can be calcium in something, but if it's in the form that your body can't readily use, then it's more difficult," she said.

> "It's not my place to tell people how to eat or live their lives."
> MISTY SCHULTZ
> Sophomore undecided

Scheule said calcium in milk can be readily used, but in most other forms it is difficult.

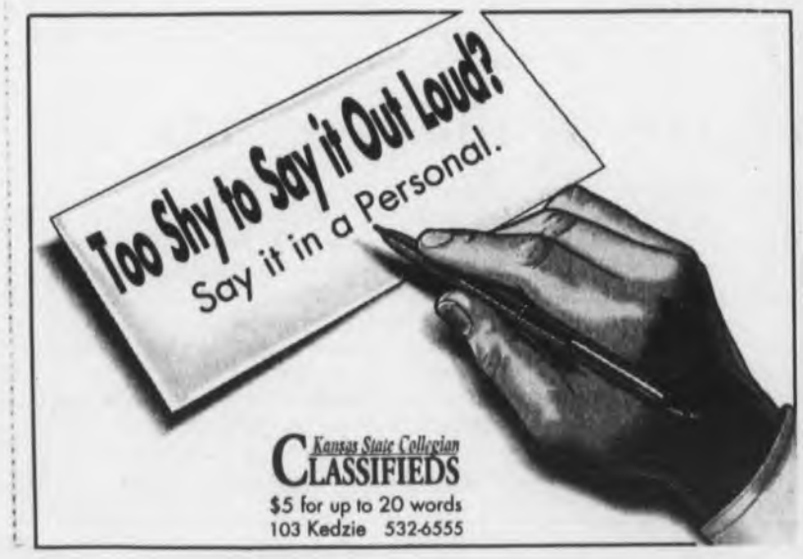
Like non-vegetarians, Scheule said vegetarians need to be careful about the amount of fat they eat.

Scheule said a vegetarian, for example, who drinks a large amount of whole milk and eats a lot of cheddar cheese would have a high-fat diet.

"Some vegetarians need to be careful about that," she said. "Does that mean you shouldn't eat that kind of stuff? No, but you need to eat things in moderation."

There are some health advantages associated with a vegetarian diet, according to the November 1993 Journal of the American Dietetic Association.

"Studies of vegetarians indicate that they often have lower mortality rates from several chronic degenerative diseases than do non-vegetarians," the report said.



The effects could be attributed to a vegetarian diet, but also to lifestyle characteristics such as maintaining desirable weight, regular physical activity and abstinence from smoking, alcohol and illicit drugs, the same report said.

The report also said that a typical vegetarian diet, which is usually lower in protein than a non-vegetarian's diet, can have positive side effects.

"This lower protein intake may be associated with better calcium retention in vegetarians and improved kidney function in individuals with prior kidney damage. Further, lower protein intakes may result in a lower fat intake with its inherent advantages, because foods high in protein are frequently high in fat also," the report said.

▶ BIG EIGHT TRACK AND FIELD CHAMPIONSHIPS

K-State can't overcome Nebraska, takes second

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he had a good idea of how the Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships would end.

Before the meet Friday and Saturday, Rovelto said, he knew Nebraska's domination in the 20-pound weight throw and the shot put would be tough to deal with.

"Basically, those two events were too much to overcome," Rovelto said. "In terms of points, we came in about where I thought."

The Cornhuskers racked up 184 points en route to their 16th consecutive Big Eight Indoor title. The Wildcats finished second with 131.

Nebraska made its move early on Saturday by taking first, third and fifth in the 20-pound weight throw and first, third and fourth in the shot put.

K-State was scoreless in both events.

"I looked at the throws and knew there wasn't a whole lot we could do about it," Rovelto said.

However, the women dominated some events as well.

Jill Montgomery and Gwen Wentland captured the top two spots in the pentathlon Friday.

Montgomery scored a career-best 4,093 points in the events to beat Wentland with 3,998.

"I couldn't have done it without Gwen," Montgomery said. "She really pushes me while we compete. It helps my mental psyche a lot."

Montgomery and Wentland tacked on three more events after they completed the pentathlon on Friday.

Montgomery finished eighth in the high jump, seventh in the 55-meter hurdles and fourth in the long jump with a distance of 18 feet 9 inches.

Wentland took third in the triple jump, eighth in the long jump and first in her marquee event, the high jump, with a leap of 6'1-1/4".

"I felt a little pressure at the end because I knew I had to make that jump to seal up the championship," Wentland said. "The crowd here obviously helps out, but I think what helped the most was I finally got my approach down."

Wentland beat teammate Wanita Dykstra, who finished second with a leap of 6'. Missouri's Hanne Skeilovstakken also cleared 6' but finished third.

K-State sprinter Karissa Owens turned in two outstanding performances and two wins in the 55-meter dash and the 200.

Owens blistered the field out of the blocks in the 55 and raced to a time of 6.85. The time automatically qualifies her for the NCAA Indoor Championships in Indianapolis, Ind., March 10-11.

Nebraska's Annette Hall finished second in the race with a time of 6.95.

"I've been working on my start a lot," Owens said. "I felt a lot of pressure coming in with the top time, but I just tried to go as hard as I could and just see what happened."

Owens took home her second gold of the day with a late charge in the last 50 meters of the 200. She won the event with a time of 24.26.

Teammate Belinda Hope took third in the race with a time of 24.57.

Earlier in the day, Hope solidified herself as the top runner in the conference in the 400. Hope won the race easily with a time of 54.32. Oklahoma's Tami Freeman finished second with a time of 56.15.

"I tried to get out hard and make up the stagger early in the race," Hope said. "I was a little scared before the race, but I think it helped me."

Nebraska Coach Gary Pepin said he was relieved after the meet was over and the title was in hand.

"I don't know of any other program at any level, junior high, high school or college, who has won this many titles in a row in their conference," Pepin said.

"It adds a lot of pressure, though, because no one wants to be on the team that finally loses one."

K-State high jumper Ed Broxterman leaps over the bar during the Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships at Ahearn Field House Saturday. Broxterman placed first in the high jump with a leap of 7 feet 4-1/2 inches. The jump qualified him for qualifies him for the indoor NCAA Championships.

The K-State men battled injuries and staggered to a sixth-place finish in the Big Eight Indoor Championships, but may have made history in the meet.

K-State finished sixth with 72-1/2 points, but they were only 26 points from finishing fourth.

Friday night, three K-State high jumpers cleared 7 feet 1 inch in the high jump and placed first, third and fifth in the event.

Junior Ed Broxterman took home his first Big Eight title with a leap of 7'4-1/2". Teammates Itai Margalit and Percell Gaskins finished third and fifth respectively.

"I was just having a good time," Broxterman said. "Last year, I was so worried about my technique that I didn't think enough about jumping high.

"This year I decided just to get back to the basics."

Broxterman said his mind wasn't on the event the night before or during the afternoon leading up to Friday night's competition. It proved to be good strategy.

"I stayed up pretty late studying for a test last night," Broxterman said. "It was the hardest test I've ever taken.

"I never started thinking about it until the test was over, about 1:30 in the afternoon."

Broxterman's clearance of 7'4-1/2" automatically qualifies him for the indoor NCAA championships.

"I just felt light all day," Broxterman said. "The sun and the air and everything just felt different today."

The team's hopes for success took a serious blow when all-America triple jumper Dante McGrew was unable to compete due to an ankle sprain.

Margalit also had to sit out of the triple jump. Both scored in the event at last year's meet.

Additionally, junior-college all-American Steve Duren was not up to par because of nagging hamstring injury.

"We're still short 1-1/2 scholarships on the men's side because of probation, plus we had two of our top athletes, Dante McGrew and Steve Duren, limited because of injuries," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"That's just too much for us to overcome. We have to have everybody ready to be one of the top three teams in the conference.

"But I'll tell you this," Rovelto said, "we'll be a much better team outdoors."

Bill Fields continued to improve by placing third in the 400-meter dash and the 200 with times of 48.7 seconds and 21.77 respectively.

It was the first time Fields ran the 400 this season.

"He competed very well," Rovelto said. "He never even ran the 400 this year. He went in with no time.

"I knew he could score in the event, but I didn't think third."

Marlone Davis entered the finals of the 600-yard run with the top time but placed second with a time of 1:11.58 behind Oklahoma's Ryan Kite.

Travis Livingston also entered the finals with the top time in the 55-meter hurdles. After hitting the last two hurdles, he dropped back to third in the race with a time of 7.37.

Three-hundredths of a second separated the top three runners in the event.

"I was trying to get an automatic qualifying time in the prelims so I wouldn't have to worry about the finals," Livingston said.

"I was just trying too hard at the end of the race, and I hit the last couple hurdles."

▶ TENNIS

Netters continue slide, lose to New Mexico

TODD STEWART
Collegian

After Saturday's 6-3 loss to New Mexico, K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau was not happy with his team's play.

"I didn't think we competed very well," he said. "I expected we'd play harder."

New Mexico put K-State away in singles play. The Cats went 1-5 in singles competition.

The lone victory came in No. 1 singles by junior Karina Kuregian, 5-7, 6-3, 6-3, over New Mexico's Alicia Meraz.

Bietau credited Kuregian's the victory that snapped her three-match singles losing streak to Kuregian's talent.

"Karina won yesterday because she's a better player," Bietau said.

The only other victories on the day for the Cats came in straight set victories in No. 1 and No. 3 doubles.

Kuregian and senior Martine Shrubsole won in No. 1 doubles, and freshman Chris Schulte and sophomore Nicole Lagerstrom were victorious in No. 3 doubles.

Even with the pair of doubles victories, Bietau focused on his team's poor play.

"We just got outplayed," he said.

"New Mexico deserves credit. They came out ready to play."

Up next for the team is a pair of weekend matches in Des Moines, Iowa, against Drake and Northern Illinois.

Even though his team has not won in almost a month, Bietau said he is positive about the future and said anything can happen from here on out.

"I think a team in any sport has to go onto the court ready to battle," Bietau said.

"If they don't, then you can just throw everything else out the window."

▶ WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Cats lose a close one to 3rd-ranked Buffaloes

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State had the shot it wanted. It just didn't fall.

With the Wildcats trailing by just three points against No. 3 Colorado, K-State's Shanele Stires had an opportunity to send Sunday's game into overtime.

However, with the clock running out, her shot hit the back side of the rim, went into the cylinder and bounced back aimlessly.

With the missed shot, the Cats dropped their second-straight Big Eight Conference game by a score of 77-74 to the Buffaloes in Bramlage Coliseum.

"I got a good look at it, let it go," Stires said.

"I thought that it was in — in and out.

"It was kind of a quick release. I think that I let it go a little quicker than I wanted to."

Stires' shot was a set play that K-State coach Brian Agler called a time-out to set up after Colorado extended its lead to three points with nine seconds left in the game.

"We wanted to get the ball to Shanele," Agler said.

"I just thought that she could make it. She's hit some before, and I just thought that she could make it.

"It would have counted if it went down."

With the win, the Buffs finished a perfect 14-0 in the Big Eight.

"I'm happy," Colorado coach Ceal Berry said.

"I feel like we'll have a big target on our back at the Big Eight Tournament."

Colorado guard Shelly Sheetz said the 14-0 record in the Big Eight is an impressive feat.

"We're only the second team in the Big Eight to go through 14-0," Sheetz said.

"It was a really big win."

In the first half, the Buffs jumped out to an early 12-point bulge with a 13-point run at the 10-minute mark.

However, K-State chipped away at the Colorado lead and narrowed it to three points. But Colorado then jumped back out to a 10-point lead at halftime.

The Cats came out of the break on fire and scored six straight points.

"I told them at halftime that we can beat this team," Agler said.

Agler's advice seemed to work as K-State continued to narrow the Colorado lead for the rest of the second half.

In fact, at the 10-minute mark, the Cats trailed by just one point, and they missed an opportunity to take the lead when a Stires shot crawled off the rim.

However, in the end, Colorado just made the plays when they had to, Agler said.

"We did a lot of good things," Agler said.

"It was a war out there. They did what they had to win. My opinion of them isn't anything different. I think that they are a Final Four team. They're as good as they want to be."

The loss put K-State in fifth place in the regular season with a 14-12 record and a 6-8 record in the Big Eight.

Missouri sweeps Big Eight season series against K-State

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

Missouri completed a season sweep of the Wildcats Friday with a 66-59 victory in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats scored first against Missouri, with freshmen Amanda Chamberlain and Brit Jacobson teaming up for a steal and layup.

But Missouri came back, scoring the next 10 points and holding off the Cats for the remainder of the half.

"I don't think we did a very good job of competing in the first half," K-State coach Brian Agler said. "I don't think we ran very good offense, and I think we broke down defensively."

K-State regained the lead early in the second half on a pair of free throws by senior Shanele Stires. But K-State didn't hit a field goal for the first 6:50 in the second period, allowing the Tigers back in the game.

"We had a lot of shots go in and out," Jacobson said. "We got the shots. We just didn't knock them down when we needed to."

A turnaround jumper by Missouri's Nikki Smith gave the Tigers a lead they would never surrender. Missouri stretched the lead to 13 on a turnaround by freshman Alison Lucy with just 4:03 remaining.

Though three-pointers by Stires and sophomore Missy Decker would cut the lead to four in the final minute, Missouri hit its free throws down the stretch to seal the victory.

"We just got beat tonight," Agler said. "They beat us the way we've been beating people all year. They came down and stuck us defensively, then ran their offense right down our throats."

Stires led all scorers with 21 points, while Jacobson and sophomore Andria Jones each contributed 13.

Brothers and Sisters to bowl for goal

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Bowling can make a difference.

Manhattan Big Brothers and Big Sisters is sponsoring the Big Brothers and Big Sisters Bowling Classic March 5-11 at Manhattan bowling alleys.

The Bowling Classic is the main fundraiser for Big Brothers and Big Sisters, Carol Babcock, assistant director of the program, said.

This year's goal is $40,000.

"We have the capacity for 200 bowlers," she said.

Money is raised by getting people to sponsor the bowlers for a flat rate or for a certain amount of money per pin, Babcock said.

"I know that my Little Sister's mother has her pledge sheet full already," Keri Konold, junior in history, said.

Konold will bowl Saturday, but she's not a very good bowler, she said.

Konold said this will be her first Bowling Classic because she has only been a Big Sister for a year.

"We'll see how I do," she said.

Babcock said they are still signing up teams. Teams are usually made up of five members, but if a team has fewer members, that's OK, too, she said.

Each bowler should have at least a couple of sponsors in order to bowl, Babcock said.

"The minimum is five dollars," Konold said.

One thing Konold said she likes about the setup of the Bowling Classic is that the bowlers don't have to go back out and collect the money themselves.

"I hate going around and collecting money," she said.

Konold said she had not started signing pledges yet, but she didn't think it would be difficult to get people to sign up.

Participants with 15 sponsors will receive a T-shirt, and participants with 25 sponsors will get a sweatshirt.

During bowling days, participants can win door prizes, and the top earners will receive prize money after the event.

The Bowling Classic kickoff is March 5 at Memory Lanes. Members of the community can come in and bowl for Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

"I think it's good because we get to be with our Little's family," Konold said.

She said she was looking forward to meeting her Little Sister's brother's Big Brother. Her Little Sister's brother was matched about 10 months after Konold was matched with her Little Sister. The Bowling Classic will be Konold's first chance to meet the Big Brother.

"My Little's family is really open," she said.

Her Little Sister's family includes Konold in things they do, and they always let her know what's going on.

Konold said having a Little Sister is like an extension of her family. The Big makes a commitment to be there for the Little. They children know their partner's are there for them, she said.

"They need people like us to do this kind of thing," she said.

The money raised in the Bowling Classic will go toward paying for the expenses the service incurs during screening and matching and the salaries of the full-time staff members, Babcock said.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters is a social-service organization that matches children from single parent homes with an adult screened and supervised by the program, Babcock said.

Although 120 pairs are matched currently, there are about 50 kids on the waiting list, she said.

Volunteers have to be at least 18 years old, have access to a car and be willing to make a year-long commitment, Babcock said.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters conduct three reference checks, a criminal-history check and two interviews with the volunteer. The volunteer must also take a personality test, she said.

The entire process takes one to two months, Babcock said. Then, the volunteer is matched with a child on the waiting list.

"The screening process is lengthy," she said.

Screening and matching take up a lot of their time. Big Brothers/Big Sisters has only four employees, counting the executive and assistant directors, Babcock said.

During the screening process, the staff tries to get to know the children as well as they can so successful matches can be made, she said.

center will be very important to the college and to our constituents," he said.

Galland said he assisted in writing a computer program for feed yard veterinary practitioners to help them provide new professional services to the feed yard.

"One of the missions of the center is to provide tools for graduates to earn a living," he said. "The practice of veterinary medicine is changing because of the changing economy and the change in the consumption of food animal products."

The center is also working to study antibiotic-resistant bacteria.

"We have sought funds to study the emergence and spread of antibiotic-resistant bacteria and for developing Hazard Analysis Critical Control Points to help assure the wholesomeness of food animal products," he said.

Dr. Neil Anderson, professor of clinical sciences and small-ruminant specialist, is also one of the center's faculty members.

"We face a big challenge in obtaining funding in the current competition climate, but that is what we are doing every day," Anderson said.

Faculty members of the center said they hope it will be funded by state allocations, government grants and contracts, industry gifts, grants and contracts, and revenue from consultation and contracts.

Miss Rodeo K-State says rider safety her goal

Italian Restaurant.

"We were given the topic of what rodeo and K-State have done for us," Christiansen said.

Lowe won the speech competition.

The third and final judging category was a queen's run, where the contestants were judged on riding their horses while welcoming the crowd to the rodeo.

As the 1995-96 Miss Rodeo K-State, Ratliff will receive a $200 scholarship and various other prizes from sponsors around town.

"It is a good experience for anyone because it helps you to become a better people-person and lets you know what kind of sport rodeo is," Schnoebelen said.

Schnoebelen said her most memorable event was the Kaw Valley Rodeo where she was paired up with a child and went through the children's rodeo with that child.

Ratliff became interested in rodeo by coming from a farm background and by her mother showing horses.

This helped her to start barrel racing as a little girl in 4-H.

Ratliff said she is sitting out from the rodeo team this semester because she is training a new horse, but she plans to go back on the team next fall.

"My goals as Miss Rodeo K-State include promoting horse and rider safety for kids and adults in the community because there is a way to prevent accidents," she said.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pre-tax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax-deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

As the nation's largest retirement system, we offer a wide range of allocation choices—from TIAA's traditional annuity, with its guarantees of principal and interest, to the seven diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity. What's more, our expenses are very low,* which means more of your money goes toward improving your future financial health.

To find out more, call our planning specialists at 1 800 842-2888. We'll send you a complete SRA information kit, plus a free slide-calculator that shows you how much SRAs can lower your taxes.

Call today—it couldn't hurt.

Bill introduced to lower student fees

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Senate Privilege Fee Committee introduced four bills that would decrease student fees by 90 cents next year.

In effect, the four interdependent bills will decrease the Student Publications Fee by $2.30, increase the Academic Competition Teams Fee by 15 cents, reduce student fees by 90 cents and create a line-item fee to support the Office of Student Activities and Services.

The fate of all four bills rides on the passage of the first bill, which will allow the Student Activity Fee to be reviewed before it runs out in 1996.

Bryndon Meinhardt, Privilege Fee Committee Chairman, introduced the bills.

One bill will decrease the Student Publications Equipment Fee from $3.90 to $1.60 a semester for full-time students.

Meinhardt said the original legislation passed in 1991 called for the fee to decrease to $1.60 in 1995.

The fee was set up so the $1.60 could be used to replace and repair the equipment purchased with the 1991 fee money, he said.

"What they purchase is up to them," Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said. "I wouldn't tell them what to spend."

The question would not be if there was going to be a fee, but how much the fee was going to be, he said.

"The bone of contention is going to be the dollar amount," LeDoux said.

The difference between the proposed and current fee is $2.30. Meinhardt said $1.40 of that difference will be put into the Student Activity Fee. The other 90 cents will be cut from student fees, he said.

The fate of the bill is dependent on the passage of a bill that would allow the Student Activity Fee to be reviewed out of cycle, Meinhardt said.

Every privilege fee has a cycle or term limit. When that cycle has ended, the fee is reviewed by the fee committee, and a recommendation is made to Senate for whether it should be continued or not.

The bill creates a way to review the Student Activity Fee out of cycle, but once it has been reviewed, it will come up again at the end of the regular cycle, he said.

"I think we should all take a value interest in the money we spend," he said.

The other $1.40 would be added to the $7.50 Student Activity Fee, Meinhardt said.

The fee would be reallocated and reduced to $4.90 per semester for full-time students upon the creation of a $4 line-item fee for the Office of Student Activities and Services, he said.

The Academic Competition Fee would be increased from 30 cents to 45 cents per semester for full-time students.

The bill in effect doubles the fee for academic competition teams, Meinhardt said.

The fourth bill Meinhardt introduced would create a line-item fee for the Office of Student Activities and Services, he said.

OSAS is currently funded at $3.90 per semester for full-time students. The line-item fee will increase its budget by 10 cents per full-time student per semester, Meinhardt said.

LeDoux said the four bills are great because by increasing the money for academic competition teams, students will get more from their money but pay less in fees.

In other new business, the proposed parking structure in Memorial Stadium was the target of two pieces of legislation.

Agriculture Sen. Paul Friedrichs proposed a resolution stating Senate opposes building the parking garage in Memorial Stadium.

Friedrichs said the unique and special atmosphere of the stadium, which is a memorial for World War I veterans, would be lost by building the garage there.

"It's unfortunate that the bill has to be reactive," he said.

Friedrichs spoke to the University architect about the parking garage before presenting his legislation. The architect asked Friedrichs not to tie his hands by placing restrictions on where the garage could be built, Friedrichs said.

"I would strongly encourage you to talk to your constituents about this," he said. "You'll get an earful either way."

Friedrichs said he proposed the legislation because of conversations he had with students in his classes who were upset about the parking garage.

"A student petition would really supplement this," he said. "I think we should go ahead with both."

Steve Weatherman, business senator, said the parking garage would be made of concrete, which is primarily sand. He asked Friedrichs if he would accept the parking garage in the stadium if it were made a memorial to the soldiers of Desert Storm.

Friedrichs said, "No."

The second bill concerning the parking garage proposed bringing the issue to a student body vote.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, introduced the bill calling for a plebiscite vote of the student body to determine the stance Senate would take on the parking garage issue.

Cassie says stand by, listen to friend

Dear Cassandra,

My friend of several years seems almost hopeless when it comes to relationships with women. He has gone out with some very nice women, but for some reason or another, has become their "good friend" because he is too polite and a little shy to try and be anything but friends. He is seeing a great girl now he has wanted to ask out for over a semester, and I really want this to work out for him. What can I do to help him for a change? Any advice?

Signed, Friend of a Great Guy

Dear Friend,

Yeah, be there. Listen. Encourage him if it sounds like his knees are banging together. But that's essentially all you can do. If you get too into playing Cupid, it will invariably backfire. So offer him a shoulder to cry on and a face to bitch at, but stay out of it otherwise.

Crowd has fun as Crow plays on antique set

STEPHANIE STEENBOCK
Collegian

A near capacity crowd gathered at Memorial Hall in Kansas City, Kan., Thursday night to listen to new music sensation Sheryl Crow.

All they wanted to do was have some fun.

And have fun they did.

Pete Droge, one of the opening acts, set the mood for the concert with his newest release "If You Don't Love Me (I'll Kill Myself)."

Fairly new to the popular music scene, Droge seemed to impress the audience.

Droge and his band seemed to enjoy their music, and the audience responded to his somewhat sarcastic personality.

The next act, Freedy Johnson, former Lawrence resident, performed selections from his album "This Perfect World."

This album includes folk/pop melodies with a message.

"He is a really good songwriter. All of his songs have a really deep meaning," Amy Anderson, Kansas City resident, said.

Johnson was a little dry as far as stage presence, but his lyrics and the smooth sound of his music is what made him special.

Crow then took the stage, which was set up to look like a parlor with antique furniture and lamps.

Crow performed songs from her double platinum album, "Tuesday Night Music Club," as well as songs from her new album which does not have a release date.

Crow spent the year before her album was released experimenting with a group of musicians on Tuesday nights, which gave her album its title.

This album didn't come easily for Crow. In 1991, she told A&M Records that she wanted to scrap the album that would have been her debut. A&M agreed to allow her to make her own album, her own way.

A former back-up singer for Michael Jackson, George Harrison, Rod Stewart and Don Henley, Crow has a vast background in music.

Crow is a classically trained pianist who also plays the guitar and an instrument that has become somewhat of a trademark for her — an accordion.

The crowd cheered as Crow strapped on her accordion.

"A girl and her accordion, what a turn on," Crow said.

Chris Street, Overland Park resident, said he was impressed with the number of instruments Crow can play.

"I'd never seen a steel guitar used by a pop band," he said.

Crow sang her hit song "All I Wanna Do" in an unplugged version with her band sitting on tapestry couches and Crow in an overstuffed chair. She also sang the song in its original form and the crowd went wild.

CD Review magazine said Crow was one of the most intriguing new artists — and maybe the most compelling singer of the year.

I think the audience would agree.

Crow put on a show that would be almost impossible for other artists to beat.

Firsthand knowledge of the human body

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

They stand over the bodies with scalpels, determined to slice open human flesh, examine the muscles, bones, and organs, and get the learning experience of a lifetime.

They are the cadaver team.

For a semester, these 40 K-State students spend four hours a week learning about the structure and function of the human body, not through textbooks but firsthand.

Anne Stalheim-Smith, associate professor of biology, said she started the cadaver-team program in 1976.

"I was trying to find a way to get some of the 150-200 students in the class to be able to get some dissection experience but have everyone in the class study anatomy from the cadaver," she said.

Stalheim-Smith said K-State used to have a separate anatomy and physiology course but combined them in 1974 to benefit the students.

Ron Gaines, professor of biology and adviser for the cadaver team, said the members of the cadaver team were selected on the basis of grade point average, class standing and lab schedules.

"They have to be intelligent and responsible," he said.

"They have to be intelligent because they have to get three weeks ahead of the class in less than three weeks. They have to be responsible because they have an extra four-hour course for the first few weeks, and they have to teach anatomy to everyone else."

Gaines said the students on the team are responsible for dissecting the body, cleaning it up and going into their labs and teaching the rest of the Human Body class what they've learned in dissection.

Seven students are allowed in the room with the cadavers at a time. While the students spend an hour in dissection, the other members of the team study in an adjacent room.

"It's the most valuable experience they could have," Gaines said. "Most of the time, they just jump right into it. I've only had one student who never became comfortable with the cadaver."

For the first few weeks of the class, the students were on a mission to remove the fat from the three cadavers located in a small room in Ackert Hall.

"When we saw them with their skin on, it was kind of weird because they had nails on, and they all had different facial expressions," Tammy Linenberger, sophomore in pre-occupational therapy, said. "When we first started cutting into him, it was gross because it was very juicy, and all of this juice spilled all over my gloves, and fat was everywhere."

Linenberger said the first day was overwhelming, but the next time she worked on the cadaver, she was so interested in the dissection that she didn't want to leave the lab.

"It was fun," Linenberger said. "I was so focused on what I was doing that it didn't seem like a human at all."

Brent Sorensen, junior in premedicine, said he thinks working on cadavers is more practical than dissecting frogs or pigs to learn the structure and function of the human body.

"You get extra experience with the human body," Sorenson said. "It takes a lot of time, but it's worth it. The first day it bothered me, but after that, they don't look like people anymore. Once you get past the smell, you're all right."

Sorenson said he has names for the cadavers, which are on loan from KU Medical Center.

"We named them Phil, Helen and Iris," he said.

"One of them had open heart surgery — I want to see what it looks like."

Stalheim-Smith said the cadavers, which cost $450 each, are currently funded by private donations, but the program could be supported by lab fees in the future.

Stalheim-Smith said the team had one or two cadavers and a team of 20-30 in the past, but because K-State has three cadavers, 40 students were selected as members of the team.

"Because of the generosity of the people in the health professions, we're able to have three cadavers this semester," Stalheim-Smith said.

Linenberger said she sees the cadaver team as a valuable experience that will help her in her career.

"The knowledge is so much more engrossing because it's right there in front of you," Linenberger said.

"I have a respect for people who donated their bodies because thanks to them, we get to acquire more knowledge."

Lisa Rhoden, sophomore in prephysical therapy, said being on the cadaver team is a unique experience.

"You learn more depth about the body than in pictures," Rhoden said.

"It's really good for people going into pre-health professions. I think this will really benefit us in the long run."

News Digest

▶CLANS BATTLE IN WAKE OF U.N. WITHDRAWAL

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Rival clans battled each other with mortars, machine guns and light arms near Mogadishu's airport Sunday in a possible preview of Somalia's future after the departure of U.N. peacekeepers.

With a U.S.-led military coalition poised offshore, the fighting also offered a taste of what American and Italian Marines might face in the coming days as they guard the withdrawal of the last soldiers.

About 50 U.S. Army special forces soldiers already are ashore to help the remaining Pakistani and Bangladeshi troops complete preparations to leave under the coalition shield.

"This is the the heaviest fighting since the second day after we got here," said Capt. Joe Bovy of Arlington, Va., as he watched the battle from a heavily sandbagged bunker.

▶2 MASS GRAVES DISCOVERED IN CHECHNYA

SHALI, Russia (AP) — Using the same tactic that pushed rebel fighters out of Grozny, Russian forces pounded southern Chechnya on Sunday with heavy artillery and rockets.

Also Sunday, a newspaper reported the discovery of two open mass graves in the capital of the breakaway republic. The Observer of London said the graves contained the bodies of more than 100 Chechens, most of them civilians, including women and children.

Bodies of the newly dead lay among a far larger number of decomposing corpses in open trenches between Grozny's central graveyard and a main road, the newspaper said. Some were clearly victims of exploding shells, but others looked relatively unscathed.

There was no suggestion that the victims had died in a mass killing. The graves were an indication of lack of burial space in the devastated Chechen capital.

Professor receives grants for cancer research

STEPHANIE STEENBOCK
Collegian

A K-State professor was awarded $90,500 by the American Cancer Society and a five-year grant for $350,000 by the National Institute of Health.

Monica Justice, professor of biology, is working on research to understand what causes leukemia and lymphoma in humans.

Justice has been at K-State for two years and said she has found that K-State has supported her research. The amount of classes that she teaches is limited, and committee work is reduced for her.

"K-State provided me with quite a bit of startup money and money from the NASA program and the Sloan Foundation," Justice said.

The award from the National Institute of Health will be used to pay for supplies to do the research.

The National Cancer Society award designated Justice as an outstanding researcher in the area. This money will be used to pay part of her salary so she can spend more time on her research.

Justice said without these awards she would be running out of money.

"Instead of forging ahead, I would be cutting back. This will provide me with money to build my research," Justice said.

Justice started her project, "The Molecular Genetic Basis of Mouse B-Cell Lymphoma," while working at the National Cancer Institute under a mentor.

The types of leukemia and the lymphomas found in mice are very similar to human leukemias and lymphomas. Lymphomas in mice have genetic characteristics that allow researchers to isolate the genes involved in the development of cancer.

Working with actual human tumors is the next step for Justice after identifying the cancer-causing genes.

Through this research it is possible to get a better understanding of the development of certain human cancers, which could help in earlier diagnosis and better treatment strategies.

"In the future it is possible that we could say, OK, you don't have a high risk for cancer because you don't have these specific genes," Justice said.

Being a teacher and a researcher is better for Justice than being a physician, she said.

"I like being with people and asking questions. You never run out of questions in research," she said.

Justice works in the lab with three graduate students, five undergraduate students, a technician and lots of mice.

"Right now, we only have 300 mice, and that is not nearly enough," Justice said.

The students who work in the lab said they have learned a lot and really enjoy it.

"From the hands-on experience, you learn a lot about what's going on," Antoine Perchellet, sophomore in microbiology and French, said.

Gwenn Hansen, graduate student in biology, said she puts in extra time sometimes.

"I enjoy it. That's why I'm here. I come on weekends if there's something interesting that I want to look for or find out," she said.

Justice said she is fortunate to have good students working for her.

"I'm lucky. Two of the students in my lab are candidates for Goldwater scholarships, and my technician is a very good veterinarian," she said.

Students can ask questions from inspectors

A plebiscite vote is a non-binding vote that would only express the opinion of the student body. The vote would not mandate any decision made by the administration, Otto said.

The administration must make a decision by April 1, but the Kansas Board of Regents will not decide until April 16, Otto said.

The deadline for the administration may make it impossible for the issue to be brought to a student body vote, he said.

The ballot would ask students if they were in favor of building a parking garage in Memorial Stadium and if they were in favor of building a parking garage at all.

The Student Affairs and Social Services committee presented a resolution promoting Safe Housing Week, today through Friday. City building inspectors and landlord representatives will be sitting at tables in the K-State Union to answer any questions students might have about the condition of their apartments or houses.

SASS also introduced a bill amending the recently passed revised Judicial Code.

The Judicial Code provided for representation of all the residence halls except Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile, which were grouped together as a single complex, Otto, chairman of SASS, said.

The bill amends the Judicial Code by-laws to give each of the 10 halls open next year a representative to the judicial board, he said.

"Each hall has its own governing board and judicial board," said Lin Bliss, Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls president.

Four special allocations also received first readings.

The first special allocation was for Metazine, which produces Passages In The Empire of Chaos, a student publication of writings and pictures. Metazine asked for $150 for publishing the magazine.

The Society for the Advancement of Management asked for $1,518 for contest entry fees and travel costs for the SAM International Management Conference in April.

The National Organization for Women requested $1,039 for advertising, printing and an honorarium for Sarah Weddington, the attorney who tried the Roe v. Wade case before the Supreme Court. Weddington will be speaking in conjunction with Women's History Month.

The final special allocation was proposed for the purchase of a notebook computer to be used by the Senate chairman, vice chairman and the Senate secretary before and during Senate meetings. The allocation is for $1,920.

Forum focuses on budget, community involvement

Hill said presently there is a fee schedule, and groups can rent facilities.

"Our facilities are for the community's use," she said.

But with extra hours come extra maintenance and safety expenses, she said.

Nuss is supportive of the idea of opening the schools more.

"We need to provide youth with places to go to do things," she said.

She also said open facilities might promote time for parent-child opportunities and increase parent involvement in schools.

She said some groups that have asked for the use of buildings have thought the current fee schedule prohibited them from taking advantage of building facilities.

Wells said if opening buildings can keep kids out of detention and off the street, she favors the plan over building an expensive city youth center.

"It can work — it is not that hard," she said.

Nichols said she is in favor of getting the community involved with schools. However, she said, it is hard to begin innovative programs when facing budget restraints.

Diversity and budgets were issues discussed at the Amanda Arnold forum.

Pearson said he hopes to use his experience as an accountant to ease the budget crunch.

He said he plans to sift through the budget and look for more ways to save money.

"I'm not convinced there isn't something more to be found," Pearson said.

Nichols said the decisions the board makes concerning the budget will not only affect the students but could endanger staff morale as well.

Morgan said teacher raises are an area the district needs to find more money for, but he said that no matter what, the focus of the board should be toward giving children the best education possible.

Hampton favors user fees, which would charge students a small amount to participate in activities such as band, art and athletics to offset costs.

She suggested scholarships could be established for students who would not be able to participate in such activities because of a fee.

Garretson is in favor of a local option tax to offset budget strain.

A local option tax is the ability for the district to raise the mill levy on property taxes.

He said the increase per household could equal only $42 a year, an expense, he said, equivalent to one evening at Le Palme, a local French restaurant.

On diversity, Nuss said acceptance of all people should be encouraged. She said similarities of different cultures should be pointed out and appreciated.

She said we need to get past the differences that only create a lack of sensitivity.

Weaver said the No. 1 thing that should be taught about diversity is that diversity is fun.

He said we must be accepting of living and working with people different than ourselves.

"This is the world our kids are going to be functioning in," he said.

Hill pointed out how diversity will continue to become part of everyone's lives as people become even more technologically advanced.

▶ TAXES

Taxpayers give to local wildlife

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Money donated through the Kansas State income tax forms to Kansas Wildlife and Parks is turning up locally.

Each year for the last 14 years, Kansas State income tax forms have included the Chickadee Checkoff box. If one checks this box, money will go to wildlife-related projects in Kansas.

Mark Shoup, news release editor for the program, said, "Both contributions and contributors peaked in 1987, when more than 250,000 taxpayers donated $209,000 to the program."

Last year, contributions totaled $148,000, Shoup said.

Ken Brunson, Chickadee Checkoff coordinator, said designated amounts are taken either from tax refunds or added to the amount of taxes owed.

The box as well as a bird appear on line 12 on this year's tax form.

Brunson said some money donated makes it back to the Manhattan area. Brunson said the Chickadee Checkoff has funded two local projects in Manhattan.

They are the Veterinary Medicine's Project Release program and an Outdoor Wildlife Learning Site at Roosevelt School.

In September, Joe Gelroth and Roger Gibson, teachers at Roosevelt, began working on a design plan for a learning site.

Gelroth said they had to submit the plan to be considered for a grant from Kansas Wildlife and Parks. In October 1994, Roosevelt received a $2,000 grant, which is the maximum grant given for a learning site.

No school-district money was used for the project. Without the money from the Chickadee Checkoff, there would be no project, Gelroth said.

"There is nowhere to go to get money for stuff like that," he said.

Although funds are not easily accessible, the project has an educational purpose.

"The site is trying to get kids involved with nature," he said. "Lots of kids don't have that opportunity. We hope it creates pride at the school."

Gelroth said Roosevelt is the first school in Manhattan to receive a grant for a learning site.

K-State's Veterinary Medicine uses its grant money to care for birds primarily from the Manhattan area.

Brunson said Project Release received a grant for a flight cage.

Kara Barrett, junior in veterinary medicine and Project Release volunteer, said the outdoor cage allows the birds an area in which they can exercise. She said smaller cages don't allow enough room for birds to fly around in.

The cage is about 60 feet long, 20 feet wide, 20 feet tall and made of soft netting.

"We're able to see if an animal can be released," Barrett said. "If birds have a big area to fly around in, they can rehabilitate themselves."

Candidates look at schools' future

The main ideas, Garretson said, behind Outcomes Based Education and the state's Quality Performance Accreditation procedures are ways for schools and students to prepare for the 21st century.

OBE is an educational practice designed to promote mastery of basic skills and for students to achieve certain academic outcomes.

QPA is a state-mandated program created to accredit districts by student performance on assessment tests instead of through more quantitative measurements of the district's worth, like the number of books in the library.

He said the district needs competitive standards.

"Students are not just competing in Manhattan. They are competing globally," he said.

Garretson said he doesn't think anyone would object to the ideas behind the OBE/QPA issues if they understood them, but said a few glitches may need to be worked out, like testing procedures and standards that are too high.

He said he believes state standards for basic skill scores should be at a level at least half of all students can reach.

Garretson is turning away all campaign contributions for ethical reasons. He said he believes a board member needs to be free to make independent judgments.

MICHAEL PEARSON

Michael Pearson, parent, K-State graduate and owner of a private business, isn't upset about anything the board has done.

He said he is just concerned about the future.

Pearson said he believes the need for OBE links back to students not being trained to face their futures. He said he does not have problems with the concept.

Pearson

"If students meet the outcomes the schools want," he said, "then they should be able to succeed in the work force."

He said he would like to see if the public's concerns about OBE are legitimate or just communication problems.

Budgets are also a concern of Pearson. He said the district needs to make sure it gets the best value possible for its dollar and is funding programs that need to be funded.

For the most part, he said he feels the district is on the right track.

"Overall, the district is doing a pretty good job educating students," Pearson said. "I just want to continue that."

KIMBERLY WELLS

Kimberly Wells, juvenile intake officer for Riley County, works in the same office that houses the alternative school.

Wells

The alternative school educates up to 10 expelled children from the middle or high schools, teaching them also about issues including how to handle anger, Wells said.

Wells said she believes the alternative school needs to be expanded. Right now, she said, it has become more or less a dumping ground.

She said she also believes pregnant teenagers should be taken out of the high school during their pregnancies and incorporated into the alternative school for safety.

"Teen mothers shouldn't be there," she said.

She said too many teenagers today have to worry just about surviving. With no regard for authority, she said, many turn to guns, bats and knives.

On the topic of QPA, Wells said students should be accountable for what they learn and what the teacher is teaching.

Bullriders describe riding as electric, challenging event

Jeff Gibson, junior in animal science, has been riding bulls for five years.

He said it started out as something he just wanted to do.

After he tried it, he fell in love with it, he said.

"A lot of people think bullriders are just wild and crazy people. But it's more than that. It's the bullrider and bull becoming one. I have to out-think and out-maneuver him to stay on and win," Gibson said.

Gibson said it's not money or fame that makes him want to continue riding.

He said it is the pride he gets from doing something that is a challenge.

"If it was for the money, I wouldn't still be doing it," he said.

Gibson said he hopes to take at least a year off from school to ride the circuit because school and work are holding him back right now.

"I want to dedicate the time to see how good I can actually become. It's kind of heartbreaking when I ride a weekend and then have to quit for a while. I can't think about anything but riding again," he said.

Tipping back and getting nasty is how Jimmy White, senior in animal science, describes bareback riding.

"It's the most electric event. You have to be aggressive and just try to rip that horse's head off. If you weaken, you'll be off in a second," he said.

White said the thing he likes about rodeo is that it's about friendship and comradery.

"Everybody is pulling for everybody else. You get done riding, hop up, and if somebody needs a hand, you give it to them," White said.

Katzer said saddle bronc riding gets in your blood.

Many people don't understand that it's not a sport but a way of life, he said.

"I can't imagine not doing it anymore. I'll ride bucking horses till I'm too old, I guess," he said.

Suderman said the crowd was very enthusiastic.

"There were a lot of students. That will really help get the word out about the rodeo in the next few years," he said.

Economic diversity needed, candidate says

Manhattan State," Crowder said. "Return K-State back to what it was. Leave the tax money out of it. The town is just money-hungry."

BRUCE SNEAD

As a member of the Urban Area Planning Board, Bruce Snead said he has had an inside view to what being a city commissioner involves.

Snead

"In over three years as a member and past chair of the Urban Area Planning Board, I have attempted to balance the potential enhancements from development and growth with the maintenance of community and neighborhood quality," he said.

Snead said two main issues of economic development and sales taxes will come out in the campaign.

"Forging our economic development path with the sales-tax resource, we have committed a key challenge that will tap all the creativity we can muster," he said.

The community will have to take part in Manhattan's economic development, he said.

"We're a regional community, and cooperation will also be something I want to talk about. Manhattan must diversify economically if it is to be stable and sustainable. Economic development efforts should reflect this, building a wider base of activity through investing in people and projects, which open or broaden the assets we have."

One of the assets Manhattan does have is Fort Riley, he said.

"Reductions at Fort Riley will have an impact because it has the features that it has," Snead said. "It's a big part of the community."

TIMOTHY SCHRAG

Although his name will appear on the ballot, Timothy Schrag said he is not participating in the race for city commission.

Schrag applied to be on the ballot and later found he could not withdraw his name. He has declined to comment on why he does not wish to run in the election.

Shannon Cox, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, talks about her experiences with people of other races Monday night in the basement of Goodnow Hall. Cox and about 15 other people participated in a Gripe Session, an informal meeting that took place to discuss issues such as discrimination, relationships and representation in campus affairs.

Hall residents talk about racism

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The first Gripe Session for students living in Goodnow Hall was Monday night.

"The original idea was to meet people that didn't know each other," Shannon Cox, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Cox said she organized the meeting to help minority students who live in Goodnow Hall meet each other and discuss some race-related incidents that have been bothering them.

"Sharing with other people can give you different perspective," Karen Martin, director of minority programs in engineering, said.

Martin led the discussion. A group of about 15 black, Hispanic and white students gathered for the meeting. Students were asked to talk about positive and negative experiences and perceptions among races.

Mike Bell, freshman in environmental design, said although he doesn't anger easily, he does get frustrated trying to cross the sidewalk in front of Goodnow Hall at night.

> "People will say I don't dress like a black person, or I don't act like a black person, and I confront them. I ask them what a black person is supposed to dress and act like."
> MARLONE DAVIS
> senior in nuclear engineering

"At night, I wait for a white person to come along, and then I cross the sidewalk," Bell said.

He said he feels safer crossing the sidewalk if a white person is crossing at the same time because the cars are less likely to hit a white person.

Marlone Davis, senior in nuclear engineering, is a black student from Memphis, Tenn., and said he likes to be seen as an individual.

"People will say I don't dress like a black person, or I don't act like a black person, and I confront them. I ask them what a black person is supposed to dress and act like," Davis said.

Jared May is a white student who recently dropped out of K-State. He said he realizes a lot of people make generalizations about different cultures and races.

He said people often have a preconceived idea of what people in certain races are going to act like because of the media.

"I think people will watch MTV and all the gangsters on it, and a lot of people will automatically make generalizations from that," May said.

Claudia Streeter, a secretary at the minority engineering office, said she agreed with the idea of preconceived notions. She said people often put a value on race.

"Race is not a value," she said.

Davis said he saw a big difference in the way different races were treated in the South as compared with the Midwest.

Davis also said he can't believe there are prejudices in today's society.

"Does this still exist? Does this really still exist?" he said.

Martin said a lot of stereotypes were disclosed during the Gripe Session. She said the most important thing for students to understand is that it is necessary to confront any negative feelings that may arise.

"If we could shed our skin, everybody would be the same," Martin said.

What's in a NAME?

Student strives to live up to his name, gets involved

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

His name stands for being open-handed and giving, well-educated and a servant of truth.

Jawwad Adib Abdulhaqq has more to live up to than most students.

He said he strives to live up to his name.

As Abdulhaqq, sophomore in political science and English and president of Black Student Union, finished a discussion about his own multi-faceted history, he admitted he is tired after all the Black History Month activities.

But he said he doesn't mind.

"I really love being busy. It is part of my character," he said.

Abdulhaqq grew up in St. Louis, graduating from Ritenour High School in the suburb of Overland, Mo. Then he joined the army and was stationed at Fort Riley.

Then war broke out in the desert, and the 13th Bravo Company, for which he was an artillery specialist, was sent to the Middle East.

It was there that Abdulhaqq said he found himself and his religion, Islam.

Without knowing anything about how the faith was practiced, he said, one day he left his tent and felt drawn to put his face to the ground, as Moslems do to pray. Abdulhaqq said that to him, this spiritual experience felt natural.

He said the experience was a confirmation of self. While he had been around certain aspects of Islam his entire life, he said, his experiences in the desert were like the cork in the bottle. It sealed his faith.

His time in Desert Storm made him think of his background and experiences as a circle. The center of that circle is God, he said, and it took that type of environment for him to realize it.

Upon his return to the states, Abdulhaqq said he was a totally different person. So he decided to change his name.

"I wanted a new name — of something I wanted to strive to be," he said.

So, when his time in the military ended, he pledged himself to being a giving person, to continually educate himself and to be a servant of the truth.

He decided to stay in Manhattan and enrolled at K-State.

Besides his studies and being president of BSU, Abdulhaqq owns his own investment business, Dis Is It, and is writing a book on his life, tentatively titled "From the Ghetto to Desert Storm."

To be a successful person in the different facets of his life, Abdulhaqq said he patterns himself after three mentors: the prophet Mohammed, his foster father Ahmad Abdulrahman and Assistant Provost for Multicultural Affairs Mordean Taylor-Archer.

He also said he patterns himself after this motto:

"Enjoin what is right and forbid what is wrong."

And on top of all these motivating factors, he said he approaches every situation with a single idea.

"How will this situation get me closer to God?"

A self-described get-involved-kind-of-person, he jumped right into BSU upon enrollment at K-State, serving last year as the club's publicist.

Marcy Burks, freshman in psychology and pre-law and BSU's administrative secretary, said Abdulhaqq is a role model for others.

"He sets a good example for everyone to follow," she said. "He takes a lot of responsibility on himself he shouldn't." He always wants to make sure things get done and done right, Burks said.

As far as getting things done, Abdulhaqq said his proudest accomplishment as BSU president is restoring the respect and credibility of the club on campus.

Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multi cultural affairs, said Abdulhaqq has been a motivation for BSU's growth.

"I'm impressed with his leadership as president of BSU," Taylor-Archer said.

BSU has 150 members, a number Abdulhaqq said he is proud of.

Taylor-Archer said it is Abdulhaqq's leadership skills, compassion and his savvy to work with others that motivate other students to join the club and be active.

"He's committed to social justice and issues to improve the quality of life for everyone in general," Taylor-Archer said.

Abdulhaqq said he is often looked to as a voice for the African American student body, but he doesn't mind expressing the concerns and goals of the group.

"I think in any group environment there always has to be a spokesman or leader," he said. "I

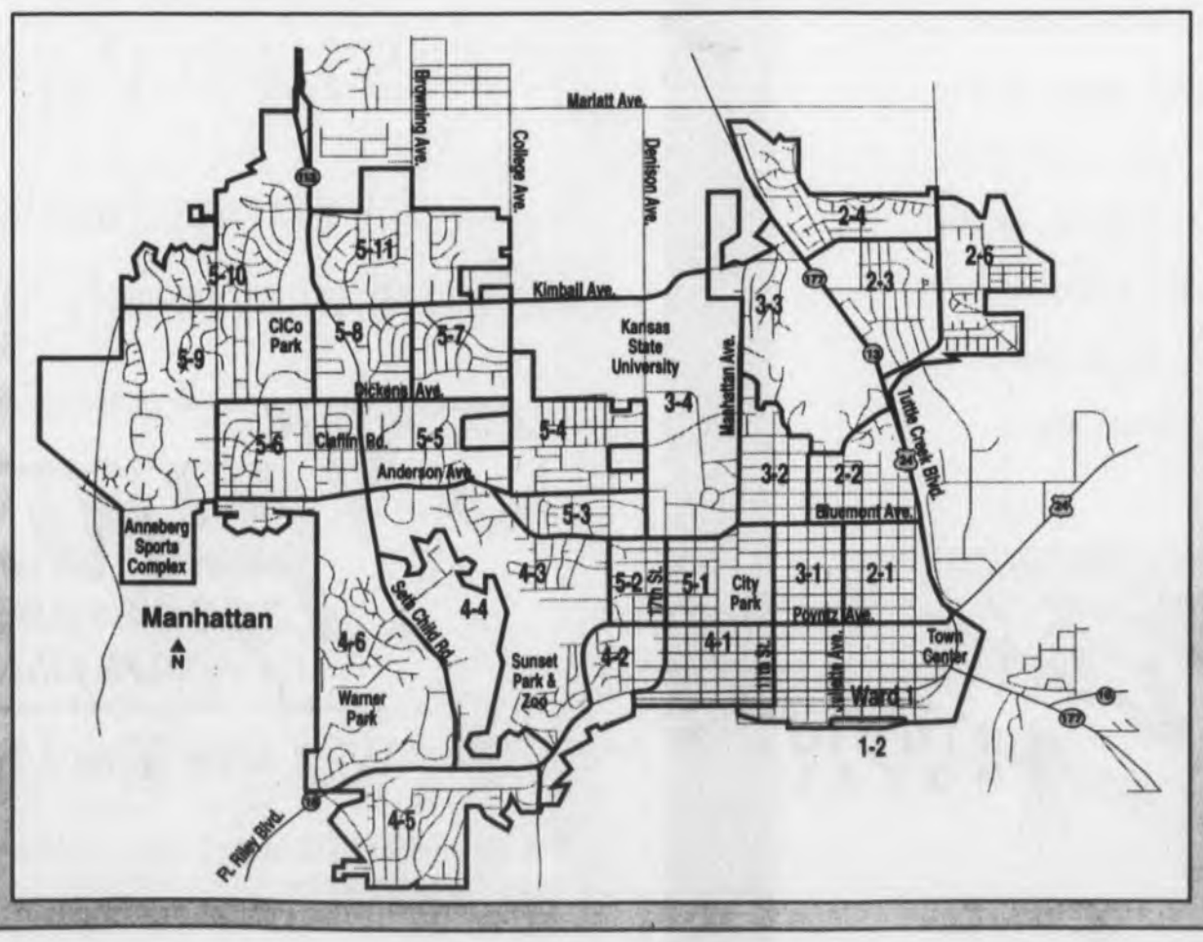
K-State educators tour state to debate bill with farmers

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

Three K-State economists and an agronomist are now touring the state, discussing the big issues for the 1995 farm bill debate with Kansas farmers.



Hans Kok, assistant professor of agronomy; Art Barnaby, professor of agriculture; Michael Langemeier, assistant professor of agriculture; and Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agriculture, are on the road conducting statewide seminars organized in conjunction with Kansas' county extension offices.

Barnaby said he believes there are three approaches likely to receive the most attention: continuing present policies, modifying current law to allow farmers more flexibility in planting, and adopting some form of revenue insurance.

The present farm bill policy requires farmers to plant a certain crop on a specified amount of acreage to receive their deficiency payments from the government.

"Right now, about half of the farmers' net income comes from deficiency payments. It's a

▶ K-STATE ALUMNUS APPOINTEE TO DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN RESOURCES

TOPEKA (AP) — A K-State alumnus seemed to please members of both parties during a Senate Commerce Committee confirmation hearing Monday.

Wayne Franklin, a Democrat, was named as Gov. Bill Graves' appointee to the office of secretary of the state Department of Human Resources.

Franklin, a former Southwestern Bell area manager for external affairs in Manhattan, said his biggest priority was to streamline the agency, making it more efficient.

The secretary of human resources oversees the administration of worker compensation and unemployment benefits.

The department also supervises all federally mandated job training programs.

Committee Chairwoman Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, said Franklin seemed to be a strong leader as he assured senators he would make some changes in human resources.

She said she was impressed by the fact that he wants to consolidate the large number of federal training programs and has already talked with federal officials about creating a one-stop career shopping system.

Franklin also said he wants to break down the barriers between applying for unemployment and federal training programs, Salisbury said.

"There seem to be artificial, if no real walls, between these federal programs," she said.

Franklin's insistence on following the administration laws of compensation and unemployment benefits was another plus, she said.

▶ 3 PEOPLE SHARE CASH LOTTO MONEY

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Lottery on Monday identified an Overland Park couple and a Kansas City, Kan., man as co-winners of last week's Cash Lotto jackpot, worth $420,508.

Lisa and Nick Finn of Overland Park and Steve Harrity of Kansas City each claimed half the jackpot at a news conference at lottery headquarters.

Finn is a finance manager with Xerox Corp., and his wife works part-time as a water aerobics coordinator. The couple have two children, age 4 and 7. They purchased their winning ticket at a supermarket at 11200 Antioch Road in Overland Park.

▶ ARCHITECT NAMED TO STATE OFFICE

TOPEKA (AP) — Lt. Gov. Sheila Frahm announced Monday the selection of Thaine Hoffman of Topeka as the new state architect.

Hoffman, a graduate of K-State, replaces acting director Gary Grimes.

As director of architectural services for the state, he will be responsible for planning the design and construction activity for state buildings.

Hoffman has spent 25 years with the Santa Fe Railway, joining that company in 1970 as a draftsman and working his way up to manager of architectural services, in charge of the entire Santa Fe system from Chicago to California.

▶ U.N. TROOPS PLAN TO LEAVE SOMALIA

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Rival clans battled each other with mortars, machine guns and light arms near Mogadishu's airport Sunday in a possible preview of Somalia's future after the departure of United Nations forces.

With a U.S.-led military coalition poised just offshore, the fighting also offered a taste of what American and Italian Marines might face in the coming days as they guard the withdrawal of the last U.N. soldiers.

About 50 U.S. Army special forces soldiers already are ashore to help the remaining Pakistani and Bangladeshi troops prepare to leave under the coalition shield.

▶ STATE ADVISES JUDGE TO DELAY ENACTMENT OF K-STATE TAX PLAN

TOPEKA (AP) — Judge Terry Bullock of Shawnee County District Court took under advisement Monday a request by the state to delay implementation of statewide reappraisal of agricultural land.

Bullock said he would have a decision within a matter of days on whether to grant the Property Valuation Division's motion to let county appraisers carry over 1994 appraisal figures on farmland to 1995. This motion is supported by the attorney general's office and the Kansas Livestock Association.

Bullock's comments during a hearing indicated he is uncomfortable with a year-long delay in correcting inequities in how agricultural land is valued and with the possibility of using a new set of proposed valuations on the various types of ag land developed by K-State.

According to the Kansas Constitution, agricultural land is supposed to be valued for property tax purposes on its ability to produce income. It has not been reappraised since 1992.

Late last year, the Kansas Board of Tax Appeals ordered that it be reappraised for 1995 based on the values K-State farm economists assigned to different types of farmland.

But the Property Valuation Division, which has changed leadership since Gov. Bill Graves was elected in November, now seeks a one-year delay until those figures can be checked for validity.

The issue of updating the agricultural land valuations has come to a head because of the 1992 school-finance law. That act established a uniform property-tax mill levy that is now assessed statewide to support public education.

Delaying reappraisal for another year only perpetuates the inequities now in the system, lawyers said.

Also, if the valuations are not uniform and equal statewide, Bullock said, it results in a tax shift.

Finding a way to COMPETE

Student overcomes injuries to play sports again

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

Joshua Bartel stopped playing soccer in the sixth grade. It was the day he woke up with a wrist swollen to the size of his hand.

The doctors diagnosed him with juvenile rheumatoid arthritis, a disease in which body joints become stiff and inflamed, immobile, weak and deformed.

They also told him he had rheumatic fever, which causes joint inflammation and sometimes permanent damage to the heart valves.

Doctors told him that any physical activity would be dangerous for his heart. They told him he would have to live a life devoid of all physical activity.

"They took me out of school and told me, 'You're not going to be right anymore,'" Bartel said.

He lay in bed for nine weeks before a doctor told him the rheumatic fever diagnosis hadn't been right.

The arthritis remained a reality, however, being active in Bartel's body from ages 12 to 14.

Through special training programs and a lot of hard work, he had gained most of his mobility back by the day before his 15th birthday. Then came the wreck.

"I was with a church group with a friend of mine," Bartel said. "We were going to Worlds of Fun to see a band or something."

A semi truck was also traveling Interstate 70, but it was moving at 55 mph which was slower than the van carrying the 10 church youths.

The van driver glanced away from the road for a second. It was one second too late.

"He didn't even hit the brakes," Bartel said. "He hit the back of the truck going 70 miles per hour."

Six of the children were killed. Bartel said he remembers parts of the accident.

"I remember I woke up in the van, and I noticed my leg had a new knee," he said. "It was bent and twisted in a new position.

"The only thing I felt was my lip. It was hurting."

He had broken every limb in his body. His leg was broken in four places. Thirty-pound weights were strung through his elbow to set his arm in place. Ropes, pulleys, tubes and six needles were holding him together.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Joshua Bartel, graduate student in mechanical engineering, has played table tennis for four years. Bartel has overcome juvenile rheumatoid arthritis and severe injuries sustained in a car accident to become one of K-State's Table Tennis Club's best players. Bartel made the Association of College Unions International team, which will compete at Georgia State University in April.

"I was in one position for two months," Bartel said. "That's where I lost my mobility — laying in that hospital bed."

When his parents came to visit him in the intensive-care unit, they thought they had entered the wrong room.

"It was me," Bartel said. "My parents didn't recognize me."

Taking up soccer again was hardly an option for Bartel — he couldn't move the joints in his mouth even far enough to eat a Big Mac.

"They'd have special-sauce-lettuce-cheese everywhere," he said with a laugh.

He was in a wheelchair for his sophomore year at Augusta High School. Six months later, he was walking on crutches, and by his junior year, he was walking without them, although with a significant loss of motion.

He graduated from high school in 1990 and began classes at K-State. During his freshman year, Bartel realized he missed the competition of sports.

He wanted something that would be fun and competitive, something he could play.

He tried golf, but because his hips don't move at all, it was difficult. Bartel saw a notice in the Collegian for the KSU Table Tennis Club and joined the following week.

"Probably the hardest thing was to start calling this thing 'table tennis,'" he said.

Students realize dreams, work on space shuttle

CARY CONOVER
Collegian

For three engineering students, dreams of working with the space shuttle are becoming reality.

Nicholas Holman, Brian Wika and Scott Woerpel, all seniors in electrical engineering, are living in Titusville, Fla., working with the Lockheed Space Operations Co. at Kennedy Space Center.

Their experiences have been made possible through the Cooperative Education Program, a program that pairs students and companies based on the students' major fields of study and allows them to take paid internships with the companies.

"The jobs they have must be related to the student's career objective or major field of study," Toni Herzog, coordinator of the Cooperative Education Program, said.

Herzog said there is a difference between internships and work done through a co-op agreement. In a co-op, there is a learning objective agreement, in which after two weeks, students mail in an interim report to Career and Employment Services in Holtz Hall. The report describes the job in terms of criteria such as work environment, employer expectations and employee attitudes.

Herzog said even if a student wasn't completely happy where he or she was working, at least the student had the foresight to know if it were something that would be a good lifetime career choice or not.

All three students said they are happy with Lockheed.

"I've always thought that working for the space program would be the ultimate engineering job. I had an internship with General Motors that I turned down. It was a tough call. I lost some sleep over that one," Wika said.

By paying a $7 registration fee at Career and Employment Services, students like Holman, Wika and Woerpel had their names put on a disk that, at Lockheed's request, was accessed to obtain a list of names of students meeting GPA requirements, status and major.

Then it was up to Lockheed to pick and choose prospective students.

"I knew absolutely nothing about these people wanting me until after I received the letter asking me if I wanted to interview with them," Woerpel said.

Holman, Woerpel and Wika were three of four K-State students flown to Florida to interview with Lockheed before Thanksgiving break last semester. They all started working at the

by the Collegian Editorial Board

Students need answers about garage

These forums provide an outlet to learn more about the proposed parking garage and to voice an opinion.

Good or bad, the proposed $12 million parking garage in Memorial Stadium will have two main repercussions.

First, the parking garage will dramatically alter the appearance of Memorial Stadium.

Second, the money to build the parking garage has to come from somewhere. More than likely, it could come directly from students' pocketbooks.

It's important that each student become educated about the issue before it's too late to voice an opinion.

Fortunately, there are two student forums planned for next week.

The first is scheduled at noon March 8 in the K-State Union courtyard. The second is scheduled at 5 p.m. March 9 at Lucky BrewGrille.

In addition, students can also attend the next Parking Council meeting at 3 p.m. March 16 in Union 205.

While there, students should ask the following unanswered questions:

Exactly how will the parking garage be funded? How much will the price of a parking permit increase? Why exactly is the price for metered parking tripling?

Often times, it is easy to criticize a decision after it is too late to make a difference. These forums provide an outlet to learn more about the proposed parking garage and to voice an opinion.

Act now while there's still time.

When men suffer like women do, they'll get a month of their own

I was talking with a group of women about International Women's Month, which begins March 1.

During the last few years, Women's Studies have come to have a great deal of meaning for me, and I had looked forward to writing a column about it for some time.

I came across a great many startling statistics in preparation for writing, when I chanced to overhear a remark made by one of my colleagues

"When," he grumbled a little angrily, "are men going to get a month?"

I'll admit when I heard this I became furious. It seemed to me a flip and immature response from a member of the dominate gender in our society, denigrating the small amount of respect paid to members of a gender considered, for far too many centuries, as subordinate.

But after a while, I began to think about what he had said and thought perhaps he was right. Maybe there should be a month dedicated to the celebration of manhood. Perhaps there should be a whole 31 days consecrated to looking at male political, religious and spiritual leaders, great men in history and male contributions to the arts.

When Eve is no longer blamed for giving the apple and Adam is for taking it, then there will be an International Men's Month.

And I'll tell you when that will happen.

When Eve is no longer blamed for giving over the apple and Adam is for taking it, then there will be an International Men's Month.

When the reproductive rights of men are whittled away, pushed by a radical few and sanctioned by a female-dominated Congress and Supreme Court, we will have a month for men.

When men are placed unfairly in "Daddy tracks," and legal sanctions are being seriously considered against teen-age boys exclusively for fathering a child out of wedlock, then we will have an International Men's month.

When 90 million boys are denied primary education around the world and 640 million men are illiterate, then we will have an International Men's Month.

When math and science are deemed "unmasculine," and little boys are unconsciously belittled and pushed away from those areas, then we should have an International Men's Month.

When men's genitals are mutilated to protect their virginity, when they are stoned to death for committing adultery, and when boy babies are strangled, smothered, or aborted simply by virtue of their sex, we should have an International Men's Month.

When children in grade school refer to John Adams as Abigail Adams' husband and ask in their history classes "what were the men doing?", then we will have an International Men's Month.

When the president, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Pope menstruate, and we refer to God with a feminine pronoun regularly, we will have International Men's Month.

When one in 11 men die every day as a result of domestic abuse, and we refer to 25-year-old males as "boys" and 25-year-old females as "women" almost exclusively, I'll introduce the bill myself.

When a man sleeping with 10 women in one night is considered a slut and not a stud, you-know-what will happen.

Let's be perfectly clear about the flip side as well.

When men pay lower insurance rates, and have "Men's Night" where they don't have to pay cover at the local bar: International Men's Month.

When a man has the right to let every emotion show without being deemed a weeping wuss, there will be an International Men's Month.

When men can take paternity leave for more than six weeks if they wish it, and are allowed to use "hormonal imbalances" as an excuse for bad behavior, we'll have International Men's Month.

When "man bashing" becomes as unacceptable, uncouth and incorrect as making sexist remarks about women, then there will be an International Men's Month.

When aggression just becomes stupid and not masculine, and being pro-woman doesn't insinuate being anti-man, then there will be a Men's Month.

When a man sleeping with ten women in one night is considered a slut and not a stud, you-know-what will happen.

In other words, when men are venerated, loathed, feared, loved and abused, as much, as badly and as often as women, then there will be an entire month strictly dedicated to their contributions in our society.

I hope to God, for their sakes, the pendulum never swings that far in the opposite direction.

▶ MORALITY

Right and wrong clearly defined

Dear editor,

After reading Kevyn Jacobs' column in the Feb. 20, 1995, issue, we were compelled and inspired to respond in some manner. We decided that the public forum that you and your staff provide would be one of the best opportunities to have our voices heard.

In today's society, it is becoming increasingly clear that we need to re-evaluate where the lines are being drawn between right and wrong. Mr. Jacobs demonstrates our concern about the rise of relativeness in our community. Moral decisions cannot be made with the idea that somehow that decision will land in a gray area.

We can no longer make decisions, form ideas and even make laws hoping not to step on anybody's toes. There has to be a definite, an absolute, that we, as a society, can turn to rely on. Jacobs fails to offer us that absolute. We can no longer accept this philosophy.

The goal of this letter is to offer that absolute. Right and wrong should be as clear as black and white. If we look to the right alternative, then this black and white picture of right and wrong will become clear. The Bible, God's revelation to man, is that alternative. Actually, it is the only alternative. The Bible reveals what love truly is. It becomes apparent that love cannot be an emotionally charged reaction. Love is much more than a "giddy, heart-thumping feeling." Love is an intellectual acceptance and commitment to an individual.

Love, as Mr. Jacobs describes it, is nothing more than a misplaced and mishandled tug of the heart strings. God is natural law.

Homosexuality falls well outside of what is natural and good. Homosexual feelings might not be a sin; that decision is better left to God. However, acting on those feelings is wrong. Certainly, we are not responsible for our feelings, but we are responsible for our actions. When we realize our own weaknesses and we turn to God, then we can overcome every feeling, every thought that we have, even the thoughts and feelings that Mr. Jacobs describes as his "homosexual orientation."

"Right and wrong is a black and white issue, and homosexuality falls outside of what we, as a society, can or should accept as an acceptable lifestyle."

LANCE COFFMAN, CHRIS REED

K-State, Manhattan Christian College

Right and wrong is a black and white issue, and homosexuality falls outside of what we, as a society, can or should accept as an acceptable lifestyle.

The downfall of every great civilization from the Greeks to the Romans to Nazi Germany to the Soviet Union has been the acceptance of deviating from God's absolute truth.

The only way for the United States to avoid an identical downfall is to turn back to God and the Truths that He has revealed to us.

▶ PARKING

Forget about garage idea

Dear editor,

I have reviewed the ideas of building a parking garage in Memorial Stadium. I feel a need to reflect on the origin of the memorial.

In June 1918, K-State was still under a different name and was a young college. The world at war was a new concept our nation had not yet experienced. Students still answered the call of protecting freedom abroad. On June 6, 1918, the United States engaged in an effort to force entrenched Germans out of place called Belleau Wood, a place of only one square mile. U.S. Marines fought through matted underbrush, rocky terrain and had to attack repeatedly. A great amount of the fighting was hand-to-hand, with fixed bayonets. After the fighting was over, 7,800 Americans lie dead, wounded and missing. It was one of the most savage battles the Marine Corps has fought, for one square mile. This raw combat was typical of the ground offensive during World War I.

Where did such men come from? The bravery and valor that was expressed, where did it come from? Their ideals and value of freedom must have been their highest priority. Men who left their families and farms went on to engage in a war with an outcome that could not be predicted. Some of these even left their pursuit of education behind.

I feel that it is an honor to attend a school that would dedicate a memorial to men with such courage. My family has had a participant in every war the United States fought, from World War I to Desert Storm. I have been taught great respect for memorials to those who have made the sacrifice. Degrading a memorial would be a slap in the face on the people to whom it is dedicated. Those men were from a country that places a high value on education. Students who fought in World War I probably received their primary education in a one-room schoolhouse. We must not forget the sacrifice they made. A memorial of their commitment to freedom placed at their university is all fitting and proper.

The Memorial Stadium is still in great use. I personally enjoy running there in the evening. Classes meet there, which I have attended. The stadium is a beautiful place that adds to the aesthetic value of K-State. We must not stand for any type of degrading construction that would hinder its use.

I am aware of a parking problem at K-State. There are better solutions than the gross remodeling of Memorial Stadium. The sacrifice those veterans made does not equal that of waiting for a place to park.

▶ PARKING

No one will buy garage permits

Dear editor,

Among the arguments being presented against building a multi-level garage to solve the parking problem at K-State, a big reason is being overlooked: price resistance.

In making the proposal, the Parking Task Force apparently thinks that employees and students will buy parking permits at any price the University cares to set.

Here's what is going to happen if the University builds this garage: everyone who lives within a half mile to a mile of campus will begin walking or riding a bike. They will find all kinds of things to do with the additional $165 or $115 a year.

Even those cooperative souls who use this parking garage will give up soon after spending untold minutes per day just waiting to get out onto one of the local streets. If you think traffic is busy at the two intersections of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue and Denison and Anderson avenues now, put a 1,200-stall parking garage in Memorial Stadium and turn all those cars loose at 5 p.m.

When people who can walk to campus stop buying parking permits, the cost of permits will rise again. Someone has to pay off those bonds. When that happens, even those who have to drive to campus will stop buying permits and start parking on streets in the surrounding neighborhoods.

The University has no moral right to take employees and students who must drive to campus with additional parking costs until it takes all the no-cost measures it can to maximize use of current parking spaces.

This would mean denying the sale of parking permits who live within a half mile of central campus and eliminating the elitist practice of selling reserved stalls. Filling the reserved stall that sits empty almost every day would help the present parking situation considerably. (Or move reserved stalls farther out in the lots so that when they sit empty they don't deprive others access to valuable space.) The University has to decide if its goal is to provide parking or to generate income by catering to the laziest of the lazy.

People should mind own business

Dear editor,

At the risk of being labeled a "totolerant" person, I don't understand how in one sentence John Hart in the Thursday Feb. 23 Collegian can say that he "find[s] homosexuality immoral," and in the same sentence say "but [I] treat gay people with the same, if not more, respect than the average person."

Why, Mr. Hart? Why bother to convey your respects if you find their lifestyle choice so immoral? You know what? I doubt they want your respect.

Why should something as deeply personal as sexual preference make any difference in what you think? Why is it any of your business, anyway?

It's ironic that you preach tolerance and say in the same article that homosexuality is immoral. I understand that it is just your opinion, but if you find it so repugnant, than why even bother to pretend tolerance?

It must be difficult for people like John Hart, being perfect and all, to try to convert the godless heathens.

If Hart does not wish to be labeled "intolerant, hateful, bigoted and homophobic," then perhaps he shouldn't say things that fit those definitions.

Locations exist for all occasions

Planning the perfect party, the best reunion or the most organized meeting can be a stressful event.

Finding the right place to have a party or function can be difficult and time-consuming.

The Manhattan area has a wide variety of creative location options for functions, meetings, parties, dances, family or class reunions and weddings.

All it takes to locate the perfect place for your party or function is a phone number and some creative ideas.

Barbara Leiker, banquet manager for Park Avenue Banquet and Catering in Manhattan, said she likes to work with her customers to design the perfect function.

"We are flexible with our customers' requests," Leiker said.

She said she has worked with parties smaller than 30 people and parties larger than 300 people.

"We have done a couple of fraternity and sorority parties and also some KSU retirements," Leiker said.

"For a real, real private, out-of-the-way place for a party, we can also use Valentino's side room, but it's not renovated yet," she said.

The price for a party arranged by Leiker and Park Avenue varies depending on the number of people and the type of party that is being planned, she said.

The Manhattan Holiday Inn Holidome and Days Inn also offer a variety of party and banquet options.

Wendy Jensen, general manager of Days Inn, said they have a banquet room that seats 150 people. It can be divided into two rooms or left as one large room.

"People can be very creative. Probably our most unique event is an upcoming wedding."

ANGIE FENSTERMACHER
Marketing and development director for Sunset Zoo

Days Inn does not offer a full-service restaurant, so whoever is having the party picks a caterer if one is needed, Jensen said.

The cost associated with renting the banquet rooms depends on the number of people, Jensen said.

Bob Hutchinson,food and beverage director for the Holidome, said the Holidome has 10 rooms available for rental.

"The biggest room can seat 810 people, where the smallest room seats 10 people," Hutchinson said.

"The price range for renting a banquet room ranges from $75 to $1,500, but it also depends on food or beverage," he said.

"We may either lower or drop the fee depending on the number of people and the menu they choose,"

For a different twist to the traditional function, why not try your local bar or zoo?

Lucky BrewGrille takes reservations for private parties, Tara Hunt, Lucky's hostess, said.

"We can do a fajita bar, barbecue bar or any food chosen by the customer," Hunt said.

An alternative to the typical banquet is a beer dinner, Hunt said.

This event takes place usually once a month.

"In the back room, we have soup and salad, and different beers from around the world," she said.

"The beer dinner usually costs around $25," Hunt said.

Manhattan's Sunset Zoo offers an open-air pavilion for a small rental fee, Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for the zoo, said.

The pavilion can accommodate as many as to 200 people, and the zoo has picnic tables that will seat about 40 people, she said.

"People are welcome to bring in tables and lawn chairs for more seating," she said.

The pavilion can be rented during zoo hours 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. beginning Wednesday, Fenstermacher said.

For an additional fee, it can be used in the evening from 6 to 8:30 p.m.

She said the zoo also offers barbecue grills, but zoo policy does not allow any alcoholic beverages in the park.

"People can be very creative," she said. "Probably our most unique event is an upcoming wedding."

Construction teams win regional competition

JILL TEGTMEIER
Collegian

Twelve K-State construction science and management students brought home two first-place trophies last weekend from the Associated Schools of Construction's second annual construction management competition in Nebraska City, Neb.

K-State won both the Commercial Division and the Heavy/Highway Division, winning a $250 prize by beating four other regional schools.

Each team was required to take the role of a traditional construction management firm and come up with a proposed solution for a construction project that is being worked on somewhere in the United States.

The competition's judges were facilities managers and contractors who participated in the original project.

The judges knew the solution and could fairly judge the teams, said Jim Goddard, assistant professor and coach for the Heavy/Highway Division team.

Dave Fritchen, assistant professor and Commercial Division team coach, said the Commercial Division project was a large-scale expansion to Fleming Corporation, a food distributor in Ohio.

"They had 24 hours to take the plans and specifics they were given and then create a written proposal of how they would complete the project," Fritchen said.

Jeff Bangs, Commercial Division team captain, said dealing with limited time was the tough part.

"I think we slept about two hours that first night. We had to get our written proposal done by Friday afternoon, and then Saturday morning, we gave a 25-minute presentation to the judges," he said.

Fritchen said the competition brings students as close to the real world of engineering and construction as possible.

Bangs said the team was pleased with its presentation.

"We did good. The judges really drill you with questions to catch you up on something, but we were calm and handled it well," he said.

The reconstruction of a bridge in Pasadena, Calif., was the project for the Heavy/Highway Division teams.

"The team was well prepared. They had a thorough analysis and proposal," Goddard said.

Solving problems is 90 percent of getting things done correctly, he said.

Aaron Wilcox, senior in construction science and team member of the Heavy/Highway Division, said he thinks a big factor in winning was that they all get along.

"For six people being cooped up in a small room for at least 48 hours, we did very good. I think everyone realized that to accomplish what we wanted, we had to work together as a team," he said.

Fritchen said he was pleased with the performance by both teams.

"I think our students achieve a high standard of performance and professionalism as a result of their construction education at KSU, and I think that was reflected in their Construction Management Competition," he said.

Cats take two of three during weekend

The wins weren't pretty, but the K-State baseball team will take them.

The Wildcats took two out of three games in weekend action at the Lake Area Classic Tournament in Lake Charles, La., improving their record to 4-3 on the season.

Friday night's game saw the Cats go extra innings against Oral Roberts before Mitch Running scored the winning run on a Golden Eagle error.

With the score locked at 2-2, K-State's Matt Miller started the 11th with a walk. Pinch runner Ryan Buell was sent in for Miller but was forced out at second base when Chris Hess grounded to third. After Hess was called out stealing second, the Cats were down to two outs.

Chris Bouchard made it to first after drawing the Cats' second walk of the inning. With the pressure on, it was freshman Heath Schesser to the rescue. Schesser came through for the Cats with a single to center, moving Bouchard to second.

With the Cats' Scott Poepard at the plate, Running was sent in to run for Bouchard. Poepard hit a line drive that glanced off the glove of Eagles' first baseman Doug Pearce. Running managed to score from second on the error, sealing the 3-2 victory for the Cats.

K-State starting pitcher Jon Oiseth had a good outing, giving up just two hits and one earned run in seven innings while striking out five and walking five. Dan Albrecht pitched the final four innings of relief for K-State, as he gave up just one hit and earned his first win of the year.

The Cats' Todd Fereday and Bouchard both had successful turns at the plate, as Fereday went 2-for-4 and Bouchard was 2-for-3. With one win under their belts, the Wildcats were looking for No. 2 going into Saturday's game against the Creighton Bluejays.

The Cats jumped out to an early lead, scoring two runs in the first inning of play. Creighton answered with a run of its own in the bottom of the first, making the score 2-1, K-State.

But the Cats were just getting started, as they put four runners across the plate in the second, increasing their lead to 6-1.

The Bluejays fought back, scoring two runs in the second and third innings to get within one run of K-State.

The Cats' Larry Walty came on in relief of starter Matt Koeman in the fourth but quickly gave up three Creighton runs, putting the Bluejays up, 8-6. Walty recovered to pitch five more innings of scoreless ball for the Cats, but the K-State batters were through for the night.

One of the bright spots for the Cats in the game was Hess, who extended his hitting streak to five games with a 2-for-4 outing against the Bluejays.

It was another nail-biter as K-State met the McNeese State Cowboys Sunday afternoon in the Cats' final game of the tournament.

The Cowboys struck first, scoring one run in the bottom of the first on a solo home run off K-State starter Jack Witt. But the Cats answered in the second on Brad Harker's second home run of the season to start the inning. After loading the bases, it was K-State's Schesser driving in run No. 2 with a fielder's choice ground ball.

The bottom of the second saw McNeese State score two additional runs to take a 3-2 advantage, but the Cats came back with a three-run third inning.

The lead continued to go back and forth, with the Cowboys adding one run in the fourth and the Cats managing a run in the fifth.

McNeese came through with another three runs in the fifth to take the lead again, 7-6.

That's when the K-State bats came back to life. The Cats tied it up in the sixth when Tim Decker led off with a double and scored on Adam Green's single.

It was Decker again helping the Cats in the seventh, as the Cats took a 10-7 lead on his three-run home run, his first of the season.

K-State added two insurance runs in the ninth, but the Cowboys weren't finished yet.

McNeese threatened in the bottom of the ninth after scoring three times off K-State reliever Jon Albrecht, but the Cats stopped them in time to ensure the 12-10 victory.

Recording the win for K-State was Eric Yanz, who improved to 2-0 on the year. Albrecht notched his first save of the season. Hess extended his hitting streak to six games with a 1-for-5 performance.

The Cats hit the field again this Wednesday night when they are host to the nationally ranked Wichita State Shockers at Dean Evans Field in Salina. Game time is 7 p.m.

Coaches ready for showdown

TODD STEWART
Collegian

The parity in this Big Eight season is evident with five conference teams ranked in the Associated Press Top 25, and with less than one week to go in the season, no seeds have been determined for the postseason tournament.

Kansas, currently ranked No. 3, saw its No. 1 ranking of a week ago removed courtesy of the No. 16 Oklahoma Sooners.

Kansas coach Roy Williams said he knows there is no rest in Big Eight play.

"You're not going to get any free ones," he said.

The Sooner victory on Feb. 20 helped set the stage for this weekend's championship showdown between Kansas and Oklahoma State.

The Cowboys played Iowa State last night as their final preparation for Saturday's battle.

"It's important for us to set up the showdown with Kansas this weekend for the Big Eight Championships," Cowboy coach Eddie Sutton said.

On the other end of the Big Eight standings, K-State is trying to stay out of the conference cellar with victories in its final two games.

The Cats will be host to Nebraska on Wednesday and Colorado on Saturday.

With the Big Eight tournament looming on the horizon, Asbury said his team must play well now.

"We try to stay sharp this time of the year where it is important to finish strong."

Sutton said he is looking forward to the upcoming postseason play, where his team is a little more of a mystery to the opposition.

"It's always exciting for me to get into the NCAA Tournament where every team doesn't know you so well," Sutton said.

Oklahoma, which has won three in a row — all against ranked opponents — appears to be setting its stage for an NCAA Tournament run.

Williams credited all of Oklahoma's success to their new Coach Sampson, whom Williams himself recommended for the job.

"I think Kelvin's the kind of guy we need in college basketball," Williams said.

The slightly superstitious Sampson is going to do all he can to keep the wins coming.

He was worn the same outfit in each of the last three wins.

"I'm not sure what I'm going to pack for Ames, but I'm sure it'll be in there." he said.

Soccer team making big strides this season

HEATHER BALLEW
Collegian

The women's soccer team is focusing on team effort after a recent victory over Kansas and with the Big Eight Tournament looming in the distance.

The team is composed of about 15 members ranging from freshmen to seniors.

Women's soccer is a club sport at K-State, which means it is only partially funded by the athletic department. It has been a club sport at K-State for 10 years, said Heather Hamilton, junior in biology and team coach for 1-1/2 years.

Because the team is only partially funded, the women on the team have to pay $20 in dues and also pay for some of the travel to away games, Hamilton said.

"We kind of have to pay to play," she said.

Hamilton said the team plays three or four games each semester plus three or four tournaments. She said tournaments usually consist of four to eight teams.

The fall and spring seasons both begin a couple of weeks after school has started.

The fall season ends in early November, and the spring season ends in late April.

The team practices at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday at Memorial Stadium.

Hamilton said the team has an informational meeting to recruit team members at the beginning of each semester.

"Then they come to practice and decide if it's for them or not," Hamilton said.

The team's most recent tournament was Feb. 10-12 at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln.

They won the five-team tournament by defeating KU 2-1 in the championship game.

Hamilton said the team had a rocky season last fall, so the win against KU was a very big deal to the team.

"It was more than just beating KU for the championship," Hamilton said.

"They pushed themselves their hardest and were rewarded for that. It was kind of a moral victory."

The five teams at the tournament were K-State, KU, University of Nebraska at Lincoln, Concordia College of Seward, Neb., and Nebraska Wesleyan.

The team entered the championship game in second seat behind KU.

Their only loss during the tournament was to Nebraska Wesleyan, 0-1.

Hamilton said KU scored right off the bat, but the K-State team was able to pull back to win the game and the tournament.

Hamilton said KU was the team's toughest competition during the tournament.

"They had more speed, and they were quick on the ball," Hamilton said.

"They also had good passing."

Stephanie Henson, sophomore in psychology and criminology, said the team got off to a good start.

"Hopefully, we'll do as good or better in the other ones," she said.

The Big Eight tournament is scheduled for April 22 at the University of Oklahoma.

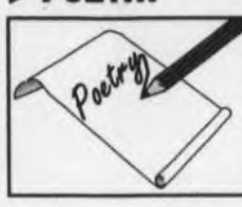
Student needs ice cream runs, talks with pals

Dear Cassie,

I have been getting massively into my studies, so I never get to see my friends. I have tried to set aside some special time once or twice a week with them, but with midterms coming up, that time has been sacrificed more than once for the sake of studying.

I know my friends understand, but this is our senior year and we don't have that much time together left. Help!

Signed, I Am An Island



Dear Island,

Take unscheduled study breaks. Go on ice-cream runs in the middle of the night and keep up regular phone conversations even if they are brief. Even though this is your senior year, you should take the time to be with friends. After all, no man (or woman) is an island.

Between Realities

Conversation with a man I thought to be someone else or maybe in a motive undertoe of unthoughts
I was desperate to be touched by a foreign voice calmer, less abrasive than my own
Each internal whisper like a whisker escaped by a dull razor that makes my reality flinch

A manic morning subsides into a slur of not yet
I'm not done with this one yet
Not ready to come down
Crashing into the barbed wire blanket of perception
Still absorbed in crooked vanity
Tangled, tangled, intervals of grasped and abandoned touchstones

How hard to keep an empty stomach down
Self pity wringing its laxative cold front through me
Climbs and surrenders,
Slides into regret
Another minute decomposingInto the ashes of every second spent sinking
Into thought — friendly fire
Still, it's fire

Too late to renegotiate with the shaman sandman
For another hour of wake
Too tired to fight an uninvited mantra
Jane Fonda said it first
Then the Guru
And yesterday I heard it from the only poet I know
"Just don't forget to breathe" and she smiled when she said it.

The (Un)common Drudgery

One time euphoria was all I knew.
My mind burst its bustle as she came by,
and now the needle's beckoning me too.

Sparkling sapphires fed this need of mine. Through her eyes, my delusions were clear. I'll try to forget the euphoria's all I knew.

Flesh sucks. I can't feel hers or mine now to calm, but I've fought too long to just cry; now I hear the needle beckoning too.

Looking through my glass eyes, I'm sure I flew too high. Control has escaped again. Why is that euphoria's all I knew?

His girl, my girl, who cares? Five, four, three, two..... my time is slipping away as I try to stand. I hear the needle beckoning me too.

Her strong lips sadly asked for truth. "Do you care?" I do, but I can't have her till I stop. Now, euphoria is all I know, and I know the needle beckons me too.

Support group offered for diabetics

JILL TEQTMEIER
Collegian

Diabetes is a disease millions of Americans have.

However, most people who have it aren't sick. They're just as healthy as everyone else; they only have to work a little harder at staying that way.

Maintaining good control is a continuous and often tiring process, especially for college students.

Manhattan's Memorial Hospital and Lafene Health Center are starting a special support group for college-age diabetics in hopes of making their lives a little easier. The meetings will be on the fourth Tuesday of each month. The first one is 7 p.m. today at Memorial Hospital, said Wini Schaedel, Clinical Nurse Specialist at Memorial.

College students often have irregular schedules and cannot always eat at the times they are supposed to, Schaedel said.

A lot of students put their classes and homework ahead of themselves. That is when their blood sugars go crazy, and control is not maintained, she said.

"We don't expect you to do it on your own. We want to help you adjust throughout your life by providing support and education," Schaedel said.

Matthew Barnes, freshman in geography and recently diagnosed diabetic, said the hardest thing to get used to is the fact that he can't eat whatever he wants whenever he feels like it.

"I can't just grab a bag of chips and start eating. I have to plan out what I'm going to eat for the day using a point system," he said.

Barnes said it can be kind of a drag to always have to plan.

It is important to keep tight control of blood sugars. Diabetics who maintain a blood sugar average below 160 milligrams per decimeter can significantly slow the onset and progression of long-term complications, including eye, kidney, heart and nerve disease, Schaedel said.

Diabetes is the No. 1 cause of blindness and amputation in the United States.

Schaedel said Lafene is not going to plan out a specific agenda for the college support group. "We want the students to tell us what they would most like to do," she said.

"They can sit and talk, work out in the exercise center or do whatever they think will benefit them most," Schaedel said.

Barnes said he would like to hear information and tips other diabetics have to share about new sugar-free foods, where they can be purchased, and the new equipment designed for blood glucose testing and daily insulin injections.

Barnes said he is looking forward to the college support group.

"I've never been to a support group before, but I think it will be nice to meet other people in the same situation as I am," he said.

Schaedel said she wants to help people enjoy life to its fullest. For some, that's fuller than others — it's totally up to them.

"It's the best, quote, chronic illness, to work with because it's the most hopeful," Schaedel said.

Education is the key, she said.

"We want to teach not only students, but everyone with diabetes how to take care of themselves," she said.

"That's all it takes to live a healthy and happy life."

Students watch shuttle launch, gain experience beginning of this semester.

Holman works in the communications and design department and has been putting targets on the space shuttle's rocket boosters for the video cameras at Kennedy Space Center.

Wika and Woerpel both work in the digital communications department working with engineers in completing design packages, such as parts lists and cable labels.

The students found many of the engineering classes at K-State prepared them well, although much of what they do at Lockheed was learned there.

"A lot of it's on-the-job training. It's applying a whole lot of theory we learned in school," Wika said.

In addition to working from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. every weekday, the three have managed to get to see firsthand what many people will only be able to see on television.

All three witnessed the takeoff of the Space Shuttle Discovery Mission STS-63 earlier this month, in which the space shuttle flew by the Russian space station, Mir. Holman watched from the Launch Control Center as Woerpel and Wika watched from the press site area. All three were only about three miles away.

Wika and Woerpel said they were surprised to see how bright the space shuttle was. It took off at night and was visible until it dropped over the horizon. When it dropped over the horizon about 10 minutes after takeoff, it was about 500 miles away.

"Hell, that's half the distance between here and Kansas, and you could still see it," Woerpel said.

Living in a warm place like Florida is nice when they could be like most other K-State students who have to cope with cold Kansas weather, but the three students said they definitely thought they were gaining valuable experience prior to graduation.

"Just being on the same launch pad as the shuttle for an engineering student is just heaven," Wika said.

Player dreams of international competition echo with Bartel's additions.

After buying a $130 paddle and attending a professional table-tennis camp, Josh got serious with the sport.

"I went to the camp, and they pretty much told me I'd better start over," he said.

In December, Bartel attended a national tournament in Las Vegas, along with 633 other players.

Out of 70 disabled members, 20 made it on the team. Twelve spots were available, and Bartel made it into one.

"Josh's skill development has been nothing short of meteoric," David Surowski, KSUTTC coach, said.

"In four short years, he has not only become one of the club's top players, but has also evolved into one of the sport's most visible players."

Such a feat doesn't come for free. Bartel drives to Oklahoma once a month for lessons, which cost $75 for three hours of coaching, he said.

Because he is classified as disabled in the table-tennis games, Bartel plays in a separate division. This helps to ensure parity in the contest.

"Now, I get to play other people who have been through the same thing I have," he said.

Bartel told of one contestant who has only one leg and half of one arm.

He plays by fixing a paddle to his arm.

Even so, this man has an 800 rating, Bartel said.

An 800 rating is roughly equivalent to your average basement table-tennis player, Surowski said.

Bartel has already made the Association of College Unions International team, which takes the top four regional players for the tournament on April 21-23 at Georgia State.

From there, Bartel has the chance to qualify for the Pan-American games in Argentina.

"If I do well there, there is the 1996 Disabled Olympic Games," he said. "The U.S. is usually very strong in that."

It will cost money to get him there, and funding from the University is not a guarantee, he said. He is accepting donations so that he can meet the $2,000 in expenses for each international event.

For more information on the donations, contact Surowski in the Department of Mathematics.

Bartel said he is happier now than he's been in the past.

"I'm married, we're moving to a bigger house, and I'm getting to play people who are in my class in table tennis," he said.

Bartel said his dream is to walk into a room at the Olympic tournament to see 80 tables set up — at $800 each.

"It's the neatest feeling in the world," he said. "There is so much more for me to do."

▶SIMPSON TRIAL TAKES TO THE AIRWAVES

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If a television is out of reach while the O.J. Simpson case is in session, trial enthusiasts turn to AM radio for a quick fix.

Whether they are on the road or in the office, the trial is never more than a twist of the knob away in this Simpson-saturated city.

While all-news station KNX in Los Angeles scraps its usual programming the moment Judge Lance Ito opens proceedings, radio stations across the nation satisfy the appetite for live coverage with feeds and commentary provided by radio networks.

"This one's got me fascinated," said Los Angeles taxi driver Noel Akametu, who like a soap opera fan can't bear to miss a single plot turn.

"The case is too complicated, and it's too interesting," Akametu said.

Farm bill might focus more on property rights very important program," Barnaby said.

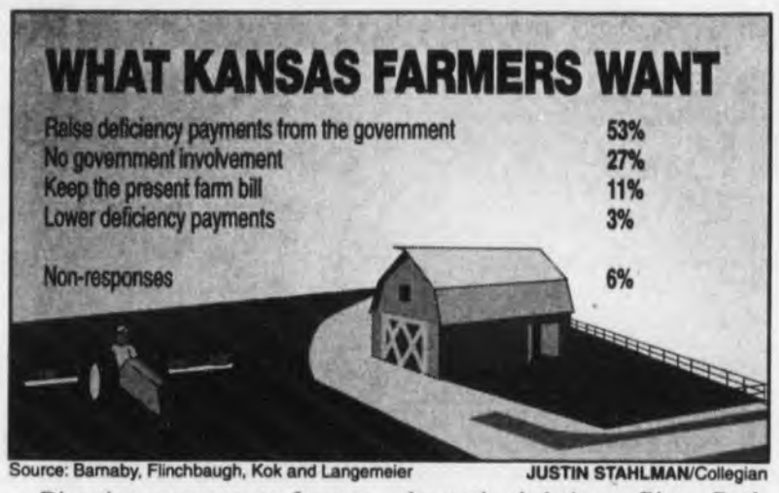
The present farm programs are a safety net for farm income. They provide some stability in a business environment that can change overnight due to everything from bugs to floods. In turn, they provide a stable U.S. food supply at reasonable prices, Flinchbaugh said.

Over the past 10 years, the payments have been cut in half. The push is coming, and the government wants to make more cuts, Barnaby said.

For the 1995 farm bill, some farmers are requesting more flexibility in planting. If the farmers had more lenient provisions, they could respond to the market and crop rotations.



"So now there is a trade-off between cuts in income or flexibility in planting," Barnaby said.

The revenue insurance is a new approach getting attention. This way, government ensures farm revenues will never fall below a certain level.

The group has been talking to farmers who run all sizes of farms because each farm is an individual case with individual needs.

Flinchbaugh said he doesn't support the idea that the government can reduce costs by eliminating commodity program payments to farmers with large-scale operations.

Large-scale farms not only produce the bulk of U.S. farm commodities and income but also encompass much of the acreage.

Source: Barnaby, Flinchbaugh, Kok and Langemeier JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

Directing payments to farmers with small- to mid-scale operations would eliminate most conservation efforts. It could greatly increase the instability of U.S. food output, Flinchbaugh said.

He also said crop rotation and flexibility of the farmers is better for the land and the farmers.

Environmental groups helped draft and support the 1985 and 1990 farm bills, he said.

"Of course, our new Congress is less environmentally friendly than the previous one. It's going to be giving more consideration to individual property rights," Flinchbaugh said.

Congress, farmers and the environmental groups have the same interests and goals — it is just a matter of working all the ideas into one bill, he said.

"Environmental and farm groups aren't natural enemies like sheep and coyotes. The media have overdramatized their conflicts. Both groups will be telling Congress they support much the same things," Flinchbaugh said.

Their research has shown that 27 percent of the farmers want no government involvement and want to phase out the deficiency payments. The majority, 53 percent, of the farmers want the deficiency payments raised, 11 percent want to keep the present bill, and 3 percent want it lowered. The other 6 percent was non-responsive.

Barnaby, Flinchbaugh, Kok and Langemeier are conducting seminars in about 20 cities all over the state. The group has traveled to Goodland, Hoxie, Hugoton, Beloit and several cities in the eastern region.

Congress will start to write the 1995 farm bill in a few months. Once the process gets started, the bill will become law by the end of the year, Barnaby said.

▶LIQUOR-SALES BILL DODGES CHANGES, MOVES CLOSER TO BEING LAW

TOPEKA (AP) — A Senate committee on Monday endorsed a Sunday liquor sales bill and steered clear of amendments, even though some lawmakers think the House-passed measure has a problem.

The Federal and State Affairs Committee sent to the Senate a measure that would allow liquor stores to be open on Sundays, as well as Memorial Day, Fourth of July, and Labor Day.

In addition, the bill would allow people to buy liquor with a lenders' card. That is a credit card issued by a bank, such as VISA or MasterCard. Credit cards offered by companies, such as Discover or American Express, could not be used.

The House passed the measure on a 63-61 vote, to the surprise of many observers.

While Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, the committee chairwoman, said she wanted to correct what she sees as a flaw in the measure and change lenders' card to credit card, supporters of Sunday liquor sales declined to offer an amendment.

Under the bill, county residents would have to vote to allow Sunday liquor sales. The earliest election could not be until 1996.

▶RESPONSIBILITY FOR SCHOOL-ACCREDITATION-SYSTEM UNDER REVIEW

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Board of Education received a clear message from the House Monday when it advanced two measures attempting to modify the state's controversial school-accreditation system.

The House advanced a bill designed to wash the Kansas Legislature's hands of responsibility for the board's Quality Performance Accreditation system, or QPA. There was no discussion before representatives approved the bill on voice vote.

The House also recommended changes to the system in the form of a resolution, which has no legal authority.

The two measures do not directly affect QPA because only the board has the constitutional authority to change or eliminate the system.

But the Legislature, which has heard hours of testimony from opponents of the system, can remove its endorsement of QPA from the 1992 School District Finance and Quality Performance Act, putting all responsibility for the system on the board. It also can ask the board by resolution to scrap or change QPA.

The board is scheduled to consider at its March meeting a Senate resolution adopted two weeks ago that asks it to abolish controversial Student Outcome V, which stresses student emotional and physical well-being.

The House resolution recommends that the board continue to streamline the paperwork required for accreditation and to judge schools on measurable academic standards.

think it is an honor."

Abdulhaqq said BSU is the biggest recruitment and retention tool of minority students the University has except for athletics. Taylor-Archer said she agreed the club gives African American students more visibility on campus.

However, Abdulhaqq said he feels the campus does not acknowledge the group for its recruiting and retention aspects, especially when it comes to financing.

"People don't realize how much time, energy and finances that it takes to put on a month of events like Black History Month," he said.

Although BSU did not directly sponsor all the events, it did work to promote them, he said, adding that he believes the entire month of events has been successful.

Abdulhaqq also said it is important for BSU to have scholarships to aid in the recruitment and retention of African American students.

With that in mind, BSU is gearing up for its next event, a campus-wide kick-ball tournament to raise money for its scholarship fund. The event will be April 22 at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

After college, Abdulhaqq plans to continue striving to be the person his name prescribes. Through politics, he said, he would like to represent this district on both the local and national levels.

"This is home," he said.

City-wide turnout fair; few on campus vote

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

City-wide turnout may have been average, but for those working the campus precinct at Derby Food Center, it was a long day.

Only 43 of the 335 registered campus voters turned out to cast their ballots — and that included President Jon Wefald's family, who live on campus, said Kara Bieberly, Ward 3, Precinct 4 chair and freshman in political science.

Besides the Wefalds, people eligible to vote in the campus precinct were locally registered voters living in residence halls and Jardine Terrace Apartments, Bieberly said.

City-wide turnout was 24 percent, 1 percent shy of what County Clerk Ilene Colbert had predicted.

"I was afraid it would be a lot less than that. I'm glad at least we had that many," Colbert said.

Colbert said the turnout was about average for a city primary.

Jody Mathews, campus precinct clerk and freshman in economics, said many students register in their hometowns, but she said they should vote in Manhattan because they live here nine months of the year.

Bieberly said she agreed.

"It only takes a couple of minutes to go down and register," she said.

Ruth Burk, supervising judge for Ward 3, Precinct 2, which voted at the UFM House, said that for her precinct, this election had more students vote than Manhattan citizens.

"I'm glad to see that students are taking an interest in it," Burk said.

Voting at the UFM House were registered voters living directly east of campus.

Gertrude Leppla, supervising judge at Ward 2, Precinct 2, which voted at Bluemont Elementary School, said she was surprised more students had not turned out, considering a student, Justin Kastner, was running for city commission.

Leppla attributed a lack of response to the numbers of elderly living in the district and the bad weather.

Kastner, Hall lead the pack

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Stanley Crowder was knocked off the list of city commission candidates when the results of primary elections were tallied on Tuesday night.

The 4,665 voters picked from six new candidates and one incumbent. Tim Shrag pulled out of the election early in the race but still received 136 votes. Incumbent Steve Hall came in second, just behind newcomer and K-State student Justin Kastner.

Hall said he feels good about his performance during the last two years and is trying to reconnect with that performance.

"I did what I said I was going to do, and I didn't do what I said I wasn't going to do," Hall said.

He said the important issues concerning the city are out there, and voters just need to know where the candidates stand on them.

Fourth-place candidate Edward Horne said an issue that needed to be focused on more was unity within the Manhattan community.

He said as a community, Manhattan needs to unify and think about preserving itself with a strong job base.

"It has been talked about, but it needs to be at the top of the list," Horne said.

Horne said it looks like an interesting race, and he is looking forward to getting his message out to voters.

Lex Pearson said he wants to get the message across that the city commission is there for the future.

"The commission is there for the good of the city and to think of the future — not just what's happening today and tomorrow, but for years to come," Pearson said.

He said one reason he thinks he didn't place high in the primary was because he needs to get his name out.

Attending all the forums, increasing advertising and shaking some more hands are ways Pearson said he was going to increase publicity.

Bruce Snead, third-place candidate, said he looks forward to going to more forums and meeting people over the next few weeks.

New techniques in his campaign will include putting out yard signs, which weren't available earlier, and continuing to meet with people.

Justin Kastner, junior in food science and industry, placed first in the polls Tuesday night and said one strategy he will take during the next weeks will be to have coffee meetings. He said he will be attending forums, and more walks are scheduled.

Fifth-place candidate Mike Manning was unavailable for comment. The final three city commissioners will be chosen by voters at the polls on April 4.

Preservation Board gets aid

MELISSA HOYT
Collegian

The Manhattan Community Preservation Board received an increase in support from the Manhattan City Commission.

Although there was no official vote taken in the city-commission work session, a general census was taken in favor of allowing the Preservation Board to take on more projects.

The Preservation Board was created to help maintain the historic structures in the downtown district.

Those structures located on Third Street and all structures located down Poyntz Avenue were in the board's jurisdiction.

The original role of the Preservation Board was to be an advisory board, but there were no provisions made to give to board any power over the groups it serves.

The Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance spoke in support of increasing the power of the Preservation Board.

Alliance President Dixie West spoke for the group.

West presented four main points:

■ The Preservation Board would be able to promote sensitive fillings of houses in older neighborhoods and regulate the quality of the fill-ins.

MAKING WAY FOR K-177

West said the older neighborhoods are having the old houses replaced with cheaply made duplexes that do not follow the architecture of the neighborhood.

■ The Preservation Board would be able to make quality housing affordable to workers in the industries that Manhattan is trying to attract.

"Not everyone that comes to Manhattan is going to be able to afford housing in Sharing Brook. We need to provide quality housing to those who make $25,000 a year and have families," West said.

"Trailer houses are not the answer," she said.

■ The Preservation Board could coordinate the moving of houses that no longer have homes to new neighborhoods.

West said because of construction projects, such as the Kansas Highway 177 bridge project, quality houses in Manhattan are being torn down.

"If we move these houses to the older neighborhoods, we can relocate the houses and assure that the quality and architecture are in accordance with the existing structures," West said.

Preservation Alliance fights to save train depot

LUKE WERHMAN
Collegian

The old Manhattan Depot sits desolate along Fort Riley Boulevard with no funding to keep it up.

The Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance would like to change that.

The depot is on the Kansas Register of Historic Places.

In order for the depot to stay on the register, the structure can't be altered.

"We are concerned about the structural integrity of the building," said Dixie West, president of the Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance.

"We would like to see the depot stay on the Kansas Historic Register," West said.

"We need to find a use for it before grant money can be applied for," she said.

The depot has fallen prey to vandalism, and some of the original brick that has fallen off the depot during the years has been stolen.

West said the city of Manhattan has secured the depot with a fence and removed the fallen brick to a safe area.

There have been many ideas for the depot, such as a meeting space, a museum, a gallery or a studio. Nothing has come of these ideas as of yet.

Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said there have been extensive architectural studies done on the old depot to determine possible uses.

Blaine Thomas, Manhattan resident, has an extensive collection of old music machines and slot machines.

Thomas said he would like to refurbish the old depot to its original state and use it as a museum for his old music machines and slot machines.

This may not be possible.

Problems that have plagued the old depot are limited parking and difficult access to the building.

"We have to wait and see how much parking is there," Thomas said.

McCallum said the new Kansas Highway 177 bridge will run adjacent to the depot but should not hamper access.

"Access has always been a problem," McCallum said.

Kitty Cool, Manhattan resident, said she would like to see the old depot preserved.

"It's been here longer than I have — and I've been here for 50 years," Cool said.

Cool said she was at the old depot to greet the K-State men's basketball team in 1951 after they lost the national championship game to the University of Kentucky.

"It holds a lot of memories for a lot of us," Cool said.

▶ RILEY COUNTY POLICE ARREST SUSPECTS IN HOOD ORNAMENT THEFTS

If your car has been broken into or vandalized in the last couple of days, file your report now.

The Riley County Police Department has recovered 28 stolen hood ornaments, several stolen stereos and radar detectors that it suspects were stolen from the Manhattan area. Several suspects have been arrested in connection with the thefts.

The police need people to call or come in to identify the stolen items so the juveniles can be charged, Detective Ryan Runyan said.

The recovered hood ornaments are from cars including Buick, Oldsmobile, Chrysler and Dodge models, Runyan said.

The items were taken from cars in Westchester Apartments and the surrounding areas of the K-State campus, including College View Road and Hunting Avenue.

"We think the majority of the cars burglarized belong to students," Runyan said.

Three juvenile subjects have been identified who are suspected of committing numerous burglaries and damaging vehicles.

The police department has arrested two of the subjects and hopes to have the third under arrest soon. All three subjects are in high school.

TO REPORT

To identify stolen property, contact Ryan Runyan at 115 N. Fourth St. or call 537-2108.

If your car has been burglarized within the past few days, contact Runyan at 115 N. Fourth St. or call 537-2108.

▶ MEETING TO DESCRIBE ELECTION GUIDELINES

Want to run for a Student Governing Association position, but not sure where to begin or what you want to do?

The Senate Elections Committee will be sponsoring an informational meeting at 4:30 p.m. today in Union 204. The meeting will be conducted a second time at 7 p.m. Thursday in Union 209.

The purpose of the meetings is to describe elected positions and responsibilities to students interested in becoming SGA candidates.

Students will be told what positions are available, as well as what the expectations and realistic time commitments are, Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said.

Some of the elected positions available include student body president and vice president, student senators, Board of Student Publications, Arts and Sciences Council, Agriculture Council, Fine Arts Council, Judicial Board and the Union Governing Board.

MEETINGS

Informal meetings to learn about running for Student Senate will be at 4:30 p.m. today in Union 204 and 7 p.m. Thursday in Union 209.

"These meetings are about the whole, big picture of student government and a precursor to the elections," Nolfi said.

▶ SENATE INCREASES FUNDING TO SCHOOLS

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate advanced a bill Tuesday that would increase state aid to all school districts by $21 a student, up from the present base budget rate of $3,600 a student.

In addition, larger school districts — those with more than 1,867 students — would receive an additional $43.15 per pupil under a "high-enrollment" weighting provision.

Some legislators contend that the larger schools have been shortchanged since the present school finance law was passed in 1992. Small districts receive low-enrollment funding under the law.

The smaller school districts receive more money per pupil because they qualify for the low-enrollment weighting.

▶ KANSAS SUPREME COURT RULES SENTENCE NOT CRUEL OR UNUSUAL

TOPEKA (AP) — Sentencing an armed robber to prison for a longer period of time than a murderer would get, virtually ensuring that he will die in prison, does not constitute cruel or unusual punishment, the Kansas Supreme Court decided Tuesday.

Michael McCloud appealed his sentence of 96 years to life after being convicted in Johnson County District Court of 12 counts of aggravated robbery on grounds that those convicted of multiple murders receive lesser sentences than he did and that he effectively was sentenced to death in prison.

The court rejected his arguments and affirmed his sentence. It said his sentence was not excessive or disproportionate to the offenses he committed.

McCloud was 37 when he committed the robberies and is 41 now. He had no prior criminal record.

"The fact that a minimum sentence imposed by a district judge exceeds the life expectancy of the defendant is not grounds, per se, for finding that the sentence is oppressive or constitutes an abuse of discretion," said the opinion written by Justice Tyler Lockett.

Justice Bob Abbott concurred with reluctance with the decision's result but noted that under Kansas' new sentencing guidelines, the maximum term McCloud would receive is 17 years.

Reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County police departments. Because of space constraints, we do not list wheellocks, calls for escorts and minor traffic violations.

K-STATE POLICE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27

At 10:38 a.m., a major-damage, non-injury vehicle accident involving Kimberly Miller and Eric Buskirk occurred at the drive between Lots A-29 and A-30.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27

At 9:08 a.m., Alvin M. Schuessler, Sedgwick, reported a vehicle was burglarized at 2411 Woodway Drive. Taken were a portable Realistic compact disc player, Whistler radar detector, Maxon CB radio, a CB antenna, 50 tapes and one CD. Loss was $953.

At 11:14 a.m., Corey Worthington, 401 Dixon Drive, was arrested for failure to appear in court. Bond was set at $500.

At 11:16, Todd A. Oswalt, 1011 Pottawottomie Court, was arrested for probation violation. Bond was set at $134.

At 2 p.m., Jerome A. Glaspie, 100 Courthouse Plaza, was arrested for parole violation. No bond was set.

CORRECTIONS

■ In Kevyn Jacobs' column on Monday, it was written that in 1973, the American Psychiatric Association finally concluded that homosexuality, while possibly resulting from environmental factors, was immutable once set — you could change it. It should have said you could not change it.

■ In Monday's Collegian, it was reported in the front-page story on Jawwad Abdulhaqq that one day Abdulhaqq left his tent and felt drawn to put his face to the ground, as Moslems do. Moslems should have been Muslims.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Kastner moves on

K-State junior receives most votes in city commission race

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

K-State student Justin Kastner led the race for city commission votes in the primary elections Tuesday night.

Kastner, junior in food science and industry and native of Manhattan, swept the ballots with 25-percent voter support.

"To get that many votes is indicative of the fact of having lived here all my life. I'm a local product," Kastner said.

The first tally of precinct votes that came out at about 7:30 p.m. showed Kastner to be in the lead and ahead of incumbent commissioner Steve Hall by 31 votes.

Overall, 2,469 of 4,665 voters supported Kastner in the primary elections.

"Something like this is incredible," Kastner said.

On-campus votes, not including greek houses and off-campus residents, totaled 43 out of 335 registered.

Kastner said the low campus voting shows that he is not depending on the University for votes.

However, he said the election is something the campus can really get involved in.

"If students recognize that we have a chance to win, they'll get out to register to vote," he said.

Voters can register to vote until March 20, he said.

Kastner said the voter support motivates him to work hard, continue pursuing debates and keep meeting people.

"It is all so real, and I recognize that," he said.

Kastner said he looks at the possible position as a city commissioner as a public service.

"I'd love to get a four-year term," he said.

The K-State student will graduate in less than four years, but said he already has several jobs in Manhattan lined up and is planning on staying in town as long as possible.

Kastner is pushing for economic development by emphasizing aid to businesses and offsetting predicted cuts in Fort Riley personnel with city government involvement.

He said the voter response definitely built his faith in people, his family and in God.

"This is by far the most faith-building experience I've been through," Kastner said.

Larry Becraft, treasurer for Kastner's campaign, said financial support from a large number people has been helpful throughout the campaign.

"People have handed me checks at church, at school, and they come to my house," he said.

One reason people support Kastner is because he really knows what he is talking about, Andy Davis, junior in business, said.

Helen Roser voted for Kastner and said the election results were exciting.

"This is the sort of thing that youth all across the country need to hear about," she said.

Roser said that if a person checked Kastner's grades and his leadership roles, they would be impressed. What he is doing is very courageous, she said.

The final vote for three city commissioners will take place April 3.

6 people advance in school board election

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

November's trend of replacing incumbents didn't take over Manhattan when voters went to the polls in the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board primary Tuesday.

Present board members Joleen Hill, Deb Nuss and Mary Nichols, along with K-State physics professor Larry Weaver, led the pack of 10 candidates in the primary election.

Rick Crow and Peter Garretson were eliminated.

Also surviving the primary were Phil Morgan, Michael Pearson, Kimberly Wells and Colleen Hampton.

Four candidates will be elected to the board April 4.

Hill, who received the most votes, said the board must begin to look at issues the new board will face.

"We have to advocate for our schools with our legislators and other legislators," Hill said.

Hill said one of the main issues, how to handle the district's budget crunch, will be cleared up before the general election in April.

Tonight, the board will discuss what to do about the budget, which has not had an increase from the state for three years. One of the options will be to raise the local option budget, which would raise property taxes.

Hill, who is a landowner, said it is always hard to make a decision about raising taxes.

"I'm a landlord and owner. I don't like the idea of raising taxes, nor do I want to sacrifice the level of education we have," she said.

Weaver, who placed second in the primary, said he felt really good about his position.

"That level of support means I must be supported across the community," he said. "I want to represent the whole district."

Nuss said she is feeling good after her position in the primary, adding that she is looking forward to talking to the public more and making them more aware of the issues.

Nichols said it has been hard to put her full attention on the election when the board presently is facing difficult decisions.

"So much has to be done the next few months," Nichols said.

Nichols said she wished more voters had turned out, but said she was happy to have survived the primary.

"I'd really like to be able to serve the public again," she said.

Morgan came in fifth in number of votes. He said he still has his eyes on the top four spots, adding that he hopes to catapult up into contention.

Pearson, an accountant, said he wasn't surprised he came in sixth.

"I really am not that well-known," he said.

Pearson said he hopes when people see the board face the decision about the local option budget, they will see that the board needs someone with his financial experience.

"I don't think people realize how much that will affect people's pocketbooks," Pearson said.

Garretson said he would like to see the remaining candidates look toward fixing the budget and not worry about issues that are settled.

Crow, Hampton and Wells could not be reached for comment.

Open-meetings act protects students, citizens

Public officials can attend the same social gatherings under the act, but the bill makes it clear that public business cannot be discussed.

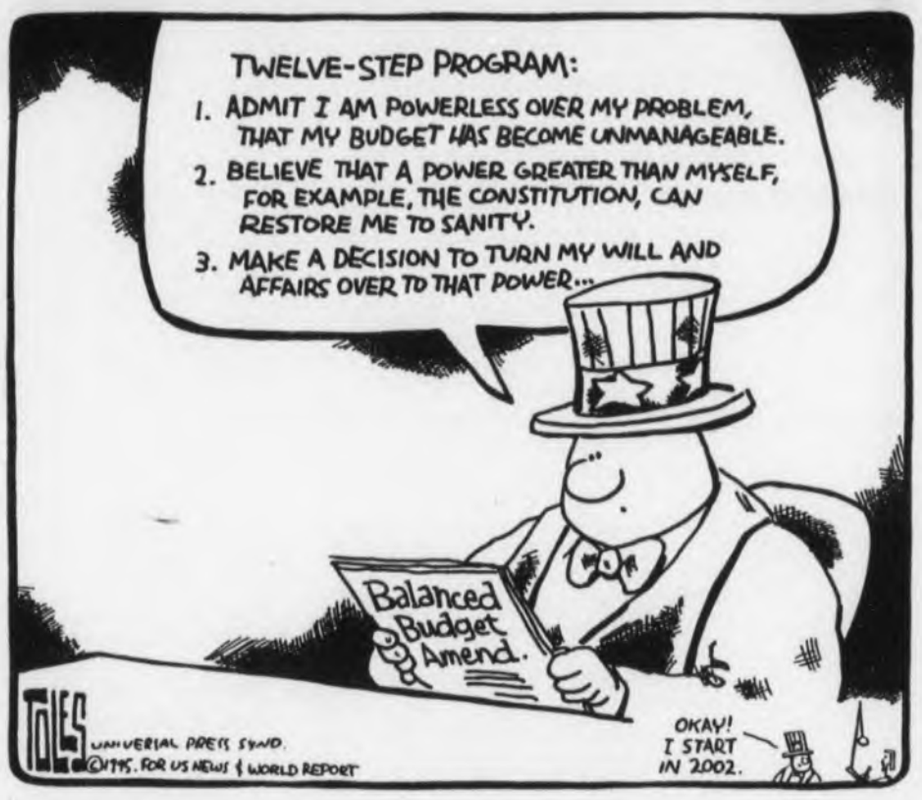
The Kansas House of Representatives passed a bill on Feb. 21 that would strengthen the Kansas Open Meetings Act. The bill would add quasi-public bodies, such as library or airport boards that have appointed members, to the list of groups that must meet and conduct business in public. It also encourages Kansas courts to broadly interpret the open-meetings act.

Public officials can attend the same social gatherings under the act, but the bill makes it clear that public business cannot be discussed.

What the open-meetings act means to you is that government bodies must let you in on the decision-making process.

Open-meetings laws give you the right to go to city-commission, Student Senate and Elections Committee meetings and have a say in how your tax money is spent and your community is run.

It gives you the right to be at Student Senate or Elections Committee meetings where people are making decisions that will affect you.



It is not just a cause for journalists. The open-meetings act protects everyone's right to know about and participate in government.

The open-meetings act is something that needs to be protected.

The bill will be considered by the Senate next.

We encourage you to call your legislators and support strong open-meetings laws.

Many lessons learned when adulthood hits

I turned 21 yesterday.

KADY MASSEY

Before you ask, no, I did not follow my adult brethren down to Aggieville to celebrate. I did enough of that when I was younger. Instead, I went out to dinner, had a glass of wine with my meal, counted my birthday checks and turned in early.

Why?

Because I have class today and don't enjoy squinting at my instructor with eyes that look like road maps of the eastern seaboard. Call me a goody-two-shoes.

Since I've reached the ripe old age of 21 and have officially reached the era of adulthood, I thought I'd look over what I've learned in the past few years, and months, just to see if any of it applies to my new status.

Surprisingly, a lot of it does.

Sift through what I've listed and see if any of it helps — if not, pass it on to a friend or an enemy.

I've learned that walking into a situation like you're supposed to be there generally means that people will treat you like you do.

Flunking a class is not the end of the world, although everyone else seems to think so.

Convincing my little brother that going to Africa is a good idea is a fantastic way to get him out of my hair for six months.

Speeding is fun; getting caught is not.

Talking someone else into speeding while they are driving is even more fun.

There's no such thing as a simple little wedding.

If you tell a readership of 20,000 people that you want a cat, you'll get one. (Her name is Max, and she's adorable. Ask me about her sometime.) You know, I've always wanted a Mustang convertible. ...

I've learned that sitting in front of a computer for three hours will get my homework done and will also make me see in black and white.

I've learned writer's block really is physically painful. Lying down helps.

Telling a crowd of people I'm from Hays invariably gets the response, "Hey, I've been to a party there." Yeah, me too.

People will tell you the most amazing stuff if you act interested. A guy in one of my literature classes felt the need to tell me just how he got his amazing scar — complete with sound effects.

Drinking coffee as soon as it comes out of the filter basket will burn your tongue.

Fresh basil thrown on a flame smells like marijuana.

The leather couch in the Collegian newsroom will sap your strength and suck out your brain if you sleep on it.

Learning to crack a bullwhip is an incredible feeling of empowerment.

Carrying a clipboard around makes people think you're in charge. My Mom taught me that.

Holding a pen while reading makes other people think that you are studying something very important and will leave you alone. That was one of my Dad's gems.

Temper tantrums are childish, and their effect is limited.

If you want to, take a dance class, even if you have no rhythm. Especially then, because you'll give everyone else in your class a complex.

Never mix vodka and ice cream.

Just because it's 70 degrees in February doesn't mean spring is here. This is Kansas — every possible weather combination can and will happen in the same week.

Always find out who "they" are.

The powers-that-be aren't always powerful, just intimidating.

When subtlety doesn't work, be loud. This applies to clothes, too.

Try to get it in writing, and if that doesn't work, get it in blood.

Question authority. I got that from an athletic-shoe ad, but it seems like good advice, nonetheless.

Most of this seems pretty obvious when it's written down, but a lot of the things I've learned are. Maybe that's what being an adult is — finally learning the lessons that have been beaten into me for the last 21 years.

I know I'm not done learning yet, but maybe now I can learn new stuff.

Kady Massey is a sophomore in mass communications and journalism.

Americans should study everyone's history

Black History Month may be over, but the struggle to give black people their rightful place in mainstream American history goes on.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Some people think that one month a year is sufficient enough to recognize the accomplishments of black Americans. They're only too happy to have black history in the "colored section" of the history books and give "regular" history free reign.

This isn't an attitude exclusive to white people. Afrocentrism has arisen as a reaction to the lack of attention America has historically paid to the people who came from Africa.

These two camps of philosophy are based on racism and ethnocentrism, two attitudes our educational system needs less of. What American schools need, from kindergarten to college, is pure history.

Right now, most Americans have no idea what they're truly celebrating every Fourth of July.

Here's some of what you celebrate in addition to your patriotism.

Manifest destiny was the term the religious conservatives of the 19th century used to justify genocide. Relative to the Nazis, who exterminated people and tried to conquer a continent while the cameras rolled, the extent to which America's self-granted manifest destiny was used as a license to conquer a continent and its people has gone undocumented for the most part.

Nonetheless, millions of Native Americans, blacks and Hispanics were slaughtered by whites as either obstacles to manifest destiny or were worked to death to bring it about.

By the same token, most people don't know that Helen Keller was a socialist.

Most people don't know that President Woodrow Wilson racially segregated the federal government and turned a blind eye to the abuse of the First-Amendment rights of anti-World War I protesters.

Charles Lindbergh was a Nazi sympathizer who was decorated by Hitler.

Thomas Jefferson held slaves (although perhaps begrudgingly) and had an adulterous relationship with one of them. He also grew pot for profit.

Walt Whitman was gay.

Ronald Reagan, the icon of traditional values for the late 20th century, rarely attended church.

If you're wondering why your high-school history teacher never told you this stuff, maybe you should.

You should realize how ignorant we all (including you) are about each other.

This is why an emphasis on black history in America is needed. While most white people can trace their roots to somewhere in Europe via family records, appearance, surname and religion, Africans were stripped of their tribal ties, names, religions and traditions when they were shipped to the new world. The children of slaves who were taken as mistresses or raped by their white masters lost much of the hereditary traits of their ancestors.

This isn't whining, revisionism or white-bashing.

These are some simple facts about history that a lot of history teachers aren't even comfortable with. Even if they taught these facts to students, parents would pressure the teachers to sweeten (mythify?) history.

What does this have to do with Black History Month? It goes to show that if most Americans are ignorant to white history, they would probably tend to be very ignorant about the contributions black people have made as well.

That's why Black History Month has to end. Instead of a paltry and patronizing month for black people to recognize their progenitors, the entire year must be for everyone's history for everyone.

Mainstream society isn't ready to accept that its history may be different than most people think. This is why it's about time for Black History Year.

Maybe K-State should designate next year as Black History Year. If the idea catches on, there would be no need for Black History Month/Year/etc. in a generation or so because it would be integrated into the American mainstream consciousness. There would only be pure history.

Then again, white people would have to drop the defensiveness we've had over the years about history. After all, none of us have ever enslaved anyone. Instead, our responsibility is to be open to including the histories of all Americans into our own individual perspectives.

We also have a responsibility to base our individual prejudices on wisdom, not ignorance.

Black people and other minorities would need to set aside some of the free-floating anger that leads to the tendency to create scapegoats and separate.

They would stop shedding the blood of their proud and wise ancestors that flow through their veins.

They must be shown by all Americans that they can succeed here.

As you can see, it would be easier to keep the histories separate and unequal.

It wouldn't be better.

Scott Allen Miller is a junior in interdisciplinary social sciences.

▶ CATTLE
Grazing under control

Dear editor,

I am writing in response to Mr. James Griffin's letter of Feb. 21. Therein, Americans are encouraged to abandon beef consumption based on his perception that grazing beef cattle are responsible for the degradation of federally owned western rangelands.

"Fortunately, science allows a clearer picture of the situation described in his letter."

K.C. OLSON research assistant animal sciences and industries

He claims that unless domestic livestock are removed from these areas, the wild horse population will suffer and certain plant species will become extinct.

Griffin relies on emotional language and rhetoric to make his point.

Fortunately, science allows a clearer picture of the situation described in his letter. First, no conclusive proof has ever been published in a peer-reviewed scientific journal to show that current grazing practices on public rangeland threaten native biodiversity on a regional scale. In fact, the condition of BLM land improved dramatically from 1936 to 1984 (U.S. Dept. of the Interior, 1984), indicating improved biodiversity.

Secondly, grazing management on public lands is a government mandate and not simply left to the discretion of the lease holder. While abuse of particular areas has occurred, problems have arisen due to short-sighted government policies (e.g. Homestead Act, 1862; Stockraising Homestead Act, 1916) during the late 19th and early 20th centuries and not due to the ominous "cattle lobby activities" Griffin refers to.

Third, the number of feral horses that inhabit the western United States has increased more than tenfold in the last 30 years (Journal of Animal Science 58:433). This could not have happened had domestic livestock been the menace described by Griffin. In fact, the reverse scenario may be true. Mustangs are among the most uneconomical grazers in the animal kingdom, accounting for roughly 30 percent more forage removal (through consumption and trampling) than cattle (Grazing Management, Academic Press, Inc. 1990).

In closing, a beef boycott will do nothing toward achieving the rangeland reform urged by Griffin. About 5 percent of American-grown beef originates in the seven westernmost states (Western Livestock Roundup, 1983).

As such, the importance of those lands in maintaining the supply of beef calves for the feedlot is certainly not enough to coerce the industry into complying with Griffin's ideas even had it the power to do so. I respectfully suggest to Griffin that he be more responsible when assigning blame for ecologically unsound management of public lands in the future.

▶ COFFEE
Thanks for the education

Dear editor,

I just wanted to thank the Collegian for informing us less-sophisticated Kansas folk about those new types of coffees called espresso, cappuccino, caffe latte and caffe mocha

Maybe now you can do a story on those funny-looking metal birds that make so much noise when they fly overhead.

I heard that people can actually ride in them and fly to far-off places all over the world.

I would also like to see a story on those newfangled horseless carriages I've heard so much about.

People say that they travel so fast that I can get from my parents' pig farm near Smith Center to K-State in a single afternoon instead of the two days it takes by covered wagon.

I think it would be very useful for the Collegian to continue presenting articles on new ideas and technologies so that when we graduate we'll be better prepared for the real world in the 20th century.

▶ ASIAN AWARENESS MONTH

Activities planned to inform students about Asian culture

JANICE MELIA
Collegian

Activities ranging from poetry readings to guest speakers will be conducted this month in honor of Asian-American Awareness Month.

"We want everyone to experience Asian American issues and be more culturally aware from our perspective," said Betty Low, senior in management systems and president of Asian American Students for Intercultural Awareness.

Vandy Paul, sophomore in computer science and vice president of Asian American Students for Intercultural Awareness, said the keynote speaker will be Jude Narita.

"She's one of five prominent Asian American comedians and a wonderful act," Paul said.

The one-person performance will feature a piece that Narita not only performs but wrote. Her act, "Coming into Passion," is a portrayal of the lives of Asian American women from various perspectives.

A Saigon bar girl, a Filipino bride and a troubled teen-ager are a few of the examples, Low said.

The performance, which tries to abolish sexual and racial stereotypes, will be 7 p.m. March 8 in Union Station, Paul said.

Also at noon on March 8, in the K-State Union Cottonwood Room, Janet Benson, associate professor of anthropology, will be giving a slide presentation. Her topic, "Rice and Beef: Growing Up Asian American in Southwest Kansas," will feature some of her research, Dina Bennett, coordinator of multicultural student organizations, said.

The luncheon will cost $7, and reservations need to be made by Friday to the multicultural organizations office in Holton 201 or by calling 532-6436, Bennett said.

Cultural night has been planned for 7 p.m. March 11 at the Ecumenical Campus Ministry building. The potluck meal will be accompanied with entertainment in the form of a fashion show and a piano solo.

But not all of the plans are finished.

"We are still working on the entertainment details," Paul said.

However, postcards were sent to Asian American alumni inviting them to cultural night.

"With each multicultural month, we try to involve the alumni in some way," Bennett said.

"Memories of the Vietnam War" will be presented at 7 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Little Theatre. Quoc Nguyen, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, will present selections from his writings.

After Nguyen's presentation, a haiku poetry reading will take place at the same location. Haiku is a style of poetry that only contains three lines.

"Anyone can do it. It's really easy, and it's a Japanese form," Bennett said.

Aikido, a form of a martial art, will be demonstrated at noon on Thursday in the K-State Union courtyard.

A display of cultural artifacts will be in Holton Hall and by the Stateroom in the Union through Friday.

The Asian-American Awareness Month activities will draw to an end as students from K-State travel to Champaign, Ill., March 23-26, to attend the Midwest Asian American Student Union Conference.

At the regional conference, the students will attend workshops as well as see the performing group Here and Now from California, Low said.

"It's a great way to network with other universities. It's usually three days, but now it's four," Paul said.

ASIAN-AMERICAN AWARENESS MONTH

- Thursday – Aikidō demonstration in the K-State Union Courtyard, noon.
- Monday – "Memories of the Vietnam War," 7 p.m., Union Little Theatre.
- March 5 – Asian-American Awareness Month luncheon, noon, Union Cottonwood Room.
- March 8 – One-woman performance by Jude Narita, 7 p.m., Union Station.
- March 11 – Asian-American Awareness cultural night, 7 p.m., Ecumenical Campus Ministry building.

The College of Education and the Women's Center are working together to help K-State celebrate Women's History Month.

Bob Shoop, professor of education and chair of the College of Education's diversity task force, said this is the third year K-State has officially celebrated Women's History Month.

"Many people go through a program without sitting down and thinking about how society has changed," Shoop said.

Marjorie Hancock, assistant professor of elementary education, coordinated the Celebration of Women Essay Contest, which was open to students in kindergarten through 12th grade in Manhattan and surrounding area schools.

Hancock said there were more than 200 entries for the contest.

"Most of them wrote about the women they admire most," she said. Contestants could also have written about the women they thought had the greatest effect on history.

Hancock said seven winners had been selected. The winners will be announced at noon March 10 in the Bluemont Hall Media Center.

Shoop said he encouraged students to attend the award ceremony for the contest.

"We will have a birthday cake there to celebrate Susan B. Anthony's birthday," Shoop said.

The featured speaker for the month is Sue Hostetler, a social documentary photographer from Manhattan, said Susan Allen, assistant director of the Women's Center.

"We heard about Sue's work in social documentary photography, and because she's from Manhattan, we thought it would be fun to bring her back and listen to her talk about her work," Allen said.

Hostetler will present a lecture and slide show of her work at 4 p.m. March 28 in Union 212.

In 1994, Hostetler, a graduate of Manhattan High School, focused on the wars and economic hardship that led her to travel to Rwanda, Cuba and Guatemala.

Hostetler has also chronicled the daily lives of women with AIDS in a series titled "Invisible Women."

Shoop also said an awareness month for women's history was necessary because of the way a lot of people have been educated.

"I think that most of us have been educated in a way that I believe is very narrow," he said.

oversee the non-renewable or potentially expensive resources, such as old bricks and lights, that can be used to repair existing historic structures.

"Bricks such as the ones that are going to be destroyed from the bridge project could be used to make repairs on the depot," West said.

Also, the Alliance proposed that the old lights on the existing K-177 bridge be used in either lighting up the area around the depot or be used to make Manhattan City Park a safer place.

The decision of the commissioners to increase the power of the Preservation Board was well received by the members of the Preservation Alliance.

"Preservation is even coming to Manhattan," West said.

WILDCAT RUNDOWN

BRIEFS & NOTES

HUSKERS to face Cats

K-State will try to crawl out of the Big Eight cellar tonight as the Wildcats entertain sixth-place Nebraska at Bramlage Coliseum.

"We've been having pretty good practices," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "We've had a couple minor injuries, but we're mentally alert of what we have to do against Nebraska. Whether we can physically do it — who knows."

The main concern for the Cats tonight will be the tempo and Nebraska's inside play. Nebraska's game includes pushing the ball upcourt.

"Sometimes they make mistakes trying to push the ball so much," Asbury said.

In the Cats' game earlier this season in Lincoln, Neb., K-State had its shots blocked or changed by the Huskers' Mikki Moore.

"He blocked six shots," Asbury said. "That means he changed at least a dozen."

K-State will close out the regular season against CU Saturday.

JEREMY CRABTREE

ROAD kind to baseball

Running

The K-State baseball team had its first successful road outing of 1995, picking up two wins in three games during weekend play at the Lake Area Classic Tournament in Lake Charles, La.

The Cats' first game of the tournament against Oral Roberts went down to the wire, with K-State pinch runner Mitch Running scoring the winning run in the 11th inning on an ORU error. K-State's Dan Albrecht picked up his first win of the season.

Saturday's action saw the Cats get an early lead against the Creighton Blue Jays, but in a disastrous fourth inning, K-State reliever Larry Walty gave up three Creighton runs to put the Jays up 8-6.

While Walty settled down and pitched five innings of scoreless ball, the Cat bats never recovered as the Jays tallied the 8-6 win.

K-State took another game down to the wire in Sunday's contest against the Cowboys of McNeese State, as the Cats racked up their second win of the tournament, 12-10.

K-State improved to 4-3 on the season and face Wichita State tonight in Salina.

NICOLE POELL

TENNIS drops to Lobos

After a weekend in which Coach Steve Bietau said his team was outplayed, the women's tennis team will travel to Des Moines, Iowa, this weekend in an attempt to get back to their winning ways.

Saturday's 6-3 loss to New Mexico at Cottonwood Racquetball Club in Manhattan caused Bietau to question his team's mentality.

"Overall, I didn't think the team was into this match mentally," he said. "We didn't want to fight a tough fight."

No. 1 singles player Karina Kuregian captured the only singles win for the day for the Cats.

Next for the women's tennis team are Drake and Northern Illinois. Both matches will be played in Iowa.

TODD STEWART

After taking the lead against Colorado last week, K-State coach Brian Agler raises his fist in excitement. However, the Cats' lead was short-lived, as CU came back and won 77-74. Agler said the Cats want another shot at the Buffs.

The Big Eight Tournament starts Saturday, leaving teams

Dreaming of a championship

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

You would think that a team that finishes with an undefeated record in conference play shouldn't have much trouble in the postseason tournament.

Think again.

After finishing the season with a perfect 14-0 record in the Big Eight Conference, Colorado coach Ceal Barry said her third-ranked Buffaloes will have a tough challenge at the Big Eight Tournament this week in Salina.

"It feels good to go 14-0," Barry said. "However, I now feel that we'll have a big target on our back."

No. 1-seeded Colorado will face the No. 8-seeded Iowa State in first-round play of the Big Eight Tournament.

This will be the third time the Buffs have faced the Cyclones — a fact that has Barry concerned.

"That's the hardest thing about the Big Eight Tournament," Barry said. "It's hard to beat a team for three times. I don't care who you are playing.

"We play Iowa State first, and you know it's hard. After 14 games, seven here and seven there, we're tired."

The Oklahoma Sooners have the No. 2 seed. Coach Burl Plunkett's squad will face off against the No. 7-seeded Nebraska Cornhuskers.

"It's going to be a tough ball game," Plunkett said. "It hard to believe thier record (13-13 overall). Nebraska can match up with anyone in the conference."

Kansas nailed down the No. 2 seed and will face defending Big Eight Tournament Champions Missouri.

"Last year's experience can't hurt us," Missouri coach Joann Rutherford said. "We've got to put 40 minutes together to win. We can't have breakdowns."

That leaves Oklahoma State and K-State. The Cowgirls are the fourth seed, and the Wildcats are the fifth seed.

This match-up could be the most interesting game in the first round. Last season, the Cowgirls, who were the No. 2 seed, defeated the seventh-seeded Cats to end their season.

Then, this season, the two teams split, as they both defeated each other on the road.

Oklahoma State coach Dick Harrington said he thinks the Cats-Cowgirls match-up is the best first-round game.

"K-State will be coming in with a lot of confidence," Harrington said. "We're going to have to challenge our kids to get up and get for ready for this game.

"I really believe that it's the best match-up of the first round."

K-State coach Brian Agler said the Cats are familiar with the Cowgirls.

"We always have to have really similar games with them," Agler said. "We played in the first round last year and got off to a real slow start. We got a win against them a week ago on their home floor, and I feel good about our basketball team right now.

"Whether we win or not on Saturday, I don't know."

However, if the Cats do win, they might get another crack at Colorado — an opportunity Agler said he hopes to get.

"We may play each other again Sunday, and I hope that we do," Agler said. "I think that we match up well with them. Our kids believe that they can beat them.

"We're capable of beating that team. Whether we do or not, I don't know."

■ Despite Colorado's record, almost all of the Big Eight coaches agree that any team can win the tournament.

"It's going to be a great tournament," Plunkett said. "It's going to take 40 full minutes. You've go to play 40 minutes and put three wins together to win."

Rutherford said there is very little that separates the third-place and the sixth-place teams in the conference.

"Top to bottom, this is one of the best conferences in the country," Rutherford said. "A couple of wins separate the third- through six-place teams.

"Anybody can win."

"We've played everybody incredibly tough, and I think we're a team people are scared of," K-State senior Shanele Stires said. "I think they see us as a dark horse — a threat."

If the rest of the Big Eight sees the Wildcats as a threat, they might be very observant.

Despite their 6-8 conference record, K-State might be one of the most threatening teams in the tournament, Big Eight, coaches said.

While Colorado is the obvious favorite going in, K-State has both the statistical strengths and intangibles to turn some heads in the Big Eight tournament, K-State coach Brian Agler said.

Count on Stires to score big. She's the conference's second-leading scorer, averaging 20.5 points per game. She can bang it up on the blocks or take it outside for the trey, where she's shooting 34.5 percent.

The Cats' primary scoring threats can keep a defense off balance. Sophomore Missy Decker is the second-most accurate three-point shooter in the conference and can take opponents off the dribble. Freshman Brit Jacobson can take anyone off the drive and is increasingly accurate from the outside.

With a strong post player, a quick slasher and a spot-up shooter, K-State's offense has the diversity it needs.

And the hits just keep on coming. Junior-college transfer Carlene Mitchell comes off the bench to shoot 32 percent from the arc. Sophomore Andria Jones has recorded two double-digit performances in the last three games, adding another inside scoring threat.

"We're capable of beating anyone in our conference when we can put a total game together," Agler said. "That means getting quality minutes from Andria Jones and Lisa Gaitor."

Last year, Oklahoma State defeated K-State in the first round of the tournament by falling back into a zone and Missy Decker signals an offensive play to her teammates in a game earlier this season. Decker has stepped in to replace Shawnda DeCamp to become the Cats' No. 1 three-point threat. After starting off cold during her first 18 games, she has made 10 out of 22 from behind the three-point arc. She has hit at least one trey in each of her last eight games.

DAN LEWERENZ

If a biography of sophomore Missy Decker were written, its title would be "My Heart is in Minnesota."

Despite her heart in Minnesota, her hands and sweet shooting touch belong here at K-State.

A native of Rochester, Minn., Decker was brought to K-State as a shooter.

"I was known as a shooter in high school, and (previous K-State coach Susan Yow's) staff recruited me. When they first contacted me, it wasn't really serious. But they became more serious as the recruiting process went on.

ONE on ONE

"I signed early, in the November signing period when I was a senior," Decker said.

"When I came to visit, I really liked the people. The facilities were wonderful, and I was looking to go to a big school."

Decker said she knew that K-State was a good fit for her.

"I just figured it would be a really great place for me," Decker said.

"And academically, too, it's been a great place for me."

That picture was temporarily shaken with news of Yow's departure and the hiring of Brian Agler.

However, Decker soon saw it as an opportunity to help rebuild a program.

"At first I was shocked. I didn't find out that the previous coaching staff was leaving until April of 1993, and I didn't know what to think," Decker said.

"All of a sudden, this picture of what it was supposed to be like was totally shattered. I had no clue what was going to happen.

"But I had confidence that the administration and the athletic department were looking to bring in someone who would be a positive step toward building a program. I was going to have to adapt, but I knew whoever got the job was looking to bring success."

Decker came off the bench as a freshman, catching fire toward the end of the season.

After hitting only one three-pointer in her first 18 games, Decker shot 10-of-22 from the arc down the stretch, connecting on at least one trey in each of her last eight games.

"When you come in as a freshman, people don't expect you to shoot. I think maybe I caught some people off guard last year in being able to come in and hit some perimeter shots.

"Last year, toward the end of the season, I was really happy with the way I was playing. I was able to contribute some good minutes."

Decker came into this season with questions about personnel and her own conditioning.

"I didn't know what to expect this year in terms of the team because we had so many people coming in. I tore cartilage in my knee during the season last year and had surgery when I went home at the end of May.

"I was really skeptical when I was out — I was all nervous about whether my game would be ready when I came back."

But Decker has answered all of the questions, shooting 41.3 percent from the field and leading the team in three-point percentage.

Decker's ability to shoot the ball earned her a starting spot after the departure of senior wing Shawnda DeCamp in January.

"I've tried not to do anything different," Decker said.

"When you're thrown into a situation, sometimes you think you have to do more. I've had to concentrate and tell myself to play within myself. I've just tried to play my role the best I can."

She has done that and more.

Decker has led the Big Eight in three-point shooting for much of the season and is currently hitting 46.3 percent of her attempts in conference play.

As a result, defenses are doing everything they can to keep her from shooting.

But from that, Decker has developed into more than just a spot-up shooter, often taking her opponents off the dribble.

"I knew that if I started scoring more points at the beginning of the Big Eight Conference schedule, people weren't going to let me sit out there and shoot.

"When I can put the ball on the floor, not only can I score, but I can look to pass, and it keeps our offense going. I can see openings in the defense better when I go with the dribble. I'm just trying not to be so one-dimensional."

Decker's ability to penetrate has enabled her to lead the team in assists in four Big Eight contests.

But getting attention as a shooter also has its down side.

Decker is coming off her first shooting slump.

Though she landed four of eight from three-point range last weekend, Decker hit just three of 16 attempts from behind the arc in the previous three games.

"I'm very hard on myself, very critical. It's hard sometimes, because when you're playing well and then you turn around and have a bad game or a bad weekend, you feel responsible. I've really had to tell myself that I'm doing the best I can, that I'm trying as hard as I can just like everyone else, because we're all in this together."

It helps that the team is becoming more balanced, she said.

"When you're balanced like we are, the defense can't just triple-team Shanele (Stires) or deny me on the wing. If they leave Carlene (Mitchell) open, she'll hit a three-pointer. If they leave Brit (Jacobson) open, she'll drive right to the middle."

"Our offense the system coach has implemented, really allows for a lot of creativity. A lot of different things can happen, so we're less predictable."

"This year, we're more of a unit on the floor. Last year, it seemed like everyone was in five different directions. But this year, in the games we've played well, everyone's thinking the same thing, doing the same thing, talking to each other. I think we do a better job of communicating this year."

And it shows.

The Cats have already secured their best Big Eight record since the 1990-91 season.

"It's been special. When it's all over, Andria (Jones), Kjersten (Larson) and I were here from the start," Decker said.

"We went through the peaks and valleys of the first couple seasons, and that's going to help us down the line as upperclassmen."

Jumps carry Cats in Big Eight indoor meet

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Welcome to high jump university.

K-State swept the top two spots of the women's high jump and three of the top five in the men's high jump at the Big Eight Tournament.

The events pushed the women's team ahead of Colorado for second place in the conference with 131 points. Nebraska won its 16th straight title with 184 total points.

The men finished in sixth with 72-1/2 points.

Wentland

Ed Broxterman and Gwen Wentland took home titles in the event with heights of 7 feet 4-1/2 inches and 6'1-1/2" respectively.

"I was just having a good time," Broxterman said.

"Last year, I was so worried about my technique that I didn't think enough about jumping high.

"This year, I decided just to get back to the basics."

Broxterman said his mind wasn't on the event the night before or during the afternoon leading up to Friday night's competition. It proved to be good strategy.

"I stayed up pretty late studying for a test last night," Broxterman said after the high jump Friday.

"It was the hardest test I've ever taken.

"I never started thinking about it until the test was over, about 1:30 in the afternoon."

Broxterman's clearance of 7'4-1/2" automatically qualifies him for the indoor NCAA championships.

"I just felt light all day," Broxterman said.

"The sun and the air and everything just felt different today."

Teammates Itai Margalit and Percell Gaskins placed third and fifth in the event.

Both cleared 7'1".

Wentland took second in the pentathlon, third in the triple jump and eighth in the long jump to go along with her high-jump win.

"I felt a little pressure at the end because I knew I had to make that jump to seal up the championship," Wentland said.

"The crowd here obviously helps out, but I think what helped the most was I finally got my approach down."

Wentland beat teammate Wanita Dykstra, who finished second with a leap of 6'.

Jill Montgomery captured the first title for the women Friday with a win in the pentathlon. Her total of 4,093 points was a personal best and the second-best score in the nation this season behind Wentland, who scored 4,115 points earlier this season.

"I couldn't have done it without Gwen," Montgomery said.

"She really pushes me while we compete. It helps my mental psyche a lot."

Karissa Owens established herself as the top female sprinter in the conference with gold medals in the 55-meter dash and the 200.

Her time of 6.85 in the 55 automatically qualified her for the NCAA indoor championships. Owens dominated the event, finishing ahead of Nebraska's Annette Hall with a time of 6.95.

"I've been working on my start a lot," Owens said.

"I felt a lot of pressure coming in with the top time, but I just tried to go as hard as I could and just see what happened."

The men's squad had some success despite injuries that hurt its point total.

Bill Fields continued to improve by placing third in the 400-meter dash and the 200 with times of 48.7 seconds and 21.77 respectively.

It was the first time Fields ran the 400 this season.

"He competed very well," Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "He never even ran the 400 this year. He went in with no time.

"I knew he could score in the event, but I didn't think third."

Marlone Davis entered the finals of the 600-yard run with the top time but placed second with a time of 1:11.58 behind Oklahoma's Ryan Kite.

The team's hopes for success took a serious blow when all-America triple jumper Dante McGrew was unable to compete due to an ankle sprain.

Margalit also had to lay out of the triple jump.

Both scored in the event at last year's meet.

Additionally, junior-college all-American Steve Duren wasn't up to par because of a nagging hamstring injury.

"We're still short 1-1/2 scholarships on the men's side because of probation, plus we had two of our top athletes, Dante McGrew and Steve Duren, limited because of injuries," Rovelto said. "That's just too much for us to overcome.

"We have to have everybody ready to be one of the top three teams in the conference."

TOP FINISHERS

- Gwen Wentland and Ed Broxterman captured first place in the high jump.
- Jill Montgomery captured first in the pentathlon.
- Karissa Owens captured first in the 55-meter dash and the 200m.

daring the Cats to shoot. That might not work as well this year.

The Cats rank third in the conference in scoring defense, allowing only 65.9 points per game, and despite their lack of size, the Cats have been successful defending the post.

Stires ranks 11th in steals in the conference, and Jacobson and fellow freshman Amanda Chamberlain are averaging at least one steal per game. Mitchell would lead the league in charges taken if they kept stats for that sort of thing.

But most important is the tendency for the Cats to help. Whether it's our guards collapsing on the post or a post player stepping in to stop a drive, you rarely see an uncontested shot by a K-State opponent.

"We've got to make them play at our tempo, and we've got to make them play against our defense," Agler said.

Though officially it's a neutral site, the Bicentennial Center is as much a home floor for the Cats as Kemper Arena is for the University of Kansas.

Only one hour away (as opposed to seven or more hours from Colorado and Iowa State), Salina boasts a strong K-State support system. And the Cats have already played there this season, defeating Wichita State 60-55 on Nov. 29.

"I think it's nice this year that we've played down there," Stires said.

Agler said he agreed.

"I don't think it hurts us at all," Agler said.

Several of the Cats have been successful in Salina. Jones recorded her best game of the year in last year's tournament, and Chamberlain won the 4A state championship there last March.

It doesn't hurt that Stires is playing in her hometown.

"We've been a team of momentum," Agler said. "We just need to get on a positive streak."

Although they have lost their last two games, K-State is playing as well now as they have all season. The Colorado game showed that K-State can play with anyone in the conference — if not in the country. Wins over Kansas and Oklahoma State late in the season were emotional boosts for the team.

Additionally, the Cats have proven their mettle in close games. K-State withstood late runs by Nebraska, Oklahoma State and KU.

"I feel a lot better right now than — going into the tournament — than I did a year ago, because we've been extremely competitive with every team we've played," Agler said.

No one expects the Cats to sweep through untouched. But among the challengers, they have as good a chance as anyone to write this year's Cinderella story.

BIG 8 CONFERENCE

Title or bust

Conference teams converge on Salina

Buffaloes are the No. 1 seed – again

Colorado was only the second team in Big Eight Conference history to go through league play undefeated.

However, the Buffaloes have bigger goals than the regular-season championship. CU wants a Big Eight Tournament title and a No. 1 seed in the NCAA Tournament.

"Prior to last week, a No. 1 seed wasn't our goal," CU coach Ceal Barry said in reference to the undefeated conference run. "Now that we are close to getting a No. 1 seed, we know that we have to continue to win to get that seed."

To do that, the Buffs will probably have to win in the Big Eight Tournament.

"It's difficult," Barry said. "There is an added incentive on our opponents. Winning the Big Eight Tournament is the road we want to go."

Leading the Buffs is all-conference player Shelly Sheetz.

Sheetz is leading the conference in assists while being the sixth-leading scorer in the conference.

"Words can't describe what she has accomplished here," Barry said. "She is a total team player."

The Buffs are riding a 19-game winning streak.

CU LEADERS
- Season record: 24-2
Big Eight record: 14-0
- Coach: Ceal Barry
- Floor leaders: Shelly Sheetz, DeCelle Thomas, Amy Palmer
- Strengths: Experience, senior leadership and inside play

Tigers hope for repeat of last year

Last year, Missouri came into Salina with the No. 7 seed and a first-round match-up with nationally ranked Kansas.

The Tigers upset the Jayhawks on their way to winning the tournament, becoming the lowest seed ever to do so.

What's different this year? The Tigers are coming in seeded sixth.

Senior center Nikki Smith, last year's tournament's most valuable player, ranks first in the Big Eight Conference in blocked shots (1.9), third in rebounds (8.0) and eighth in scoring (13.4).

Junior forward Erika Martin ranks third in scoring (19.7), fifth in rebounds (7.5) and seventh in assists (3.4). Smith and Martin tie for fifth in steals, each grabbing 2.5 per game.

Junior Andrea Siemer and freshman Tamika Bates will come off the bench to relieve Smith and Martin.

But the key to another Cinderella story in Salina will be the guard play of the Tigers.

Junior Mandy Bryan and freshmen Tanisha Johnson and Alison Lucy must hit their shots, or opposing defenses will simply collapse on the post.

MU LEADERS
- Season record: 15-11
Big Eight record: 5-9
- Coach: Joann Rutherford
- Floor leaders: Nikki Smith, Erika Martin and Andrea Siemer
- Strengths: Defending champion, tournament experience, strong inside game and good supporting cast on the bench

Sooners are surprise of Big Eight

Though Nebraska lost two games to the Sooners by a combined total of three points, the talent of the Oklahoma team is still troublesome for the Huskers.

"Oklahoma is so athletic, and they're also very deep," Nebraska assistant coach Amy Kramer said.

It's that depth and athleticism that has earned Oklahoma an 11-3 conference record and a No. 2 seed in the Big Eight Tournament this weekend in Salina.

With seniors Mandy Wade and Angi Guffy and juniors LaNae Jones and Etta Maytubby, the Sooners can boast one of the deepest front courts in a conference dominated by post play.

Jones and Guffy are both among the conference leaders in blocked shots.

But the key to Oklahoma's success is its guard play. Junior Pam Pennon leads the Big Eight in three-point percentage. Both Pennon and senior Sharee Mitchum are among the top five in assists.

With its depth and athleticism, look for Oklahoma to try to push the pace.

At 78.3 points per game, the Sooners have the second-most productive offense in the Big Eight.

OU LEADERS
- Season record: 19-7
Big Eight record: 11-3
- Coach: Burl Plunkett
- Floor leaders: Mandy Wade, Angi Guffy, Etta Maytubby and LaNae Jones
- Strengths: Experienced guard play, quickness, scoring punch and stingy defense

Huskers suffering in down season

Things aren't the same as they used to be in Lincoln, Neb.

After having a successful season last year, which included an invitation to the NIT tournament, Nebraska women's basketball has fallen on hard times.

This season, the Cornhuskers finished with a 13-13 record and a seventh-place finish in the Big Eight.

However, with the Big Eight Tournament this weekend, Husker coach Angela Beck said she thinks her team is playing confidently.

"I feel like we are playing the best ball of the season right now," Beck said. "This has been a real positive year.

"It has taught us a lot."

The Huskers' leader on the court this season has been freshman sensation Angie DeForge.

On the season, DeForge is averaging 13 points a game to lead her team.

NU LEADERS
- Season record: 13-13
Big Eight record: 4-10
- Coach: Angela Beck
- Floor leaders: Kate Galligan and Angie DeForge
- Strengths: Strong guard play, very deep bench and postseason experience

Cyclones learn from last season

JEREMY CRABTREE

Iowa State has the biggest task of any team at this weekend's Big Eight Tournament.

The Cyclones have to face No. 1-seeded Colorado. To make things even more difficult for Iowa State, the Buffaloes are on a 19-game winning streak.

"We're always chasing the teams at the top," Iowa State coach Theresa Becker said. "We welcome the invitation of playing the best."

Sounds like the Cyclones don't have a chance. But last season, Iowa State faced the nationally ranked Buffaloes in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament, and they were within five points in the final minutes.

"We make reference to that game last year," Becker said. "If you look at that game, we had five freshmen on the floor at that point, and now they are sophomores. But Colorado is a handful."

If the Cyclones are going to spring the season's biggest upset, they will need to dominate down low. That's where Janel Grimm and Jayne Olson come in.

Currently the freshman duo ranks ninth and 10th in conference rebounds. They also rank in the top 10 in field-goal percentage.

ISU LEADERS
- Season record: 8-18
Big Eight record: 1-13
- Coach: Theresa Becker
- Floor leaders: Janel Grim and Jayne Olson
- Strengths: Speed, inside play, rebounding, defense and ball-control offense

Jayhawks depend on Aycock

The Jayhawks' best shot at racking up postseason wins can be summed up in one name — Angela Aycock.

The all-America senior guard/forward is first in the Big Eight in scoring (22.7), second in steals (3.4), third in rebounds (8.0), fourth in assists (3.8) and eighth in three-point shots made (1.4).

"I'm not sure you can control her at all," said Missouri head coach Joann Rutherford.

Despite not having a true point guard, Kansas is a perimeter team. In addition to Aycock, sophomore Angie Halbleib leads the conference in three-pointers. Junior guard Charisse Sampson ranks fifth in the conference in scoring (14.2), and sophomore Tamecka Dixon is 13th (12.6).

The pressure defense of Kansas has been effective against first-round opponent Missouri, sweeping the Tigers this season.

But Kansas will need to overcome its poor showing on the boards to guarantee success in postseason play.

Look for junior-college transfer Keshana Ledet to come off the bench.

KU LEADERS
- Season record: 18-9
Big Eight record : 8-6
- Coach: Marian Washington
- Floor leaders: Angela Aycock and Charisse Sampson
- Strengths: Quickness at all positions, pressuring defense, good ball handlers.

Cowgirls lack strong inside force

Oklahoma State is one of the few Big Eight Conference teams not dominated by post play.

But its inside game is still to be feared, several Big Eight coaches said.

Junior center Amy Scales leads the team in scoring with 12.5 points per game, and junior forward Stacy Coffey is not far behind at 11.8.

Against K-State, freshman forward Renee Roberts put in 17 points to lead Oklahoma State in Stillwater.

Reserve center Gina Shaterkina can also pack a punch, scoring 13 points and grabbing 11 rebounds against the Wildcats in Manhattan.

But the guard play can make the difference for Oklahoma State. Senior Regi Smith nailed five three-pointers on her way to 17 points against K-State earlier this year.

OSU wins its games on defense with the second-best scoring defense in the conference. Coffey is leading the conference in steals for the third-straight year.

OSU LEADERS
- Season record: 16-10
Big Eight record: 7-7
- Coach: Dick Halterman
- Floor leaders: Stacy Coffey, Yogi York and Regi Smith
- Strengths: Defense and strongest group of forwards in league

The Duncan Files

A slain 1950s fraternity member is still on the prowl, terrorizing 1716 Fairchild

Story by Janice Melia

Being alone in the house may not be a good idea.

The ghost that lives at the house on 1614 Fairchild St. likes to do the typical ghost activities, especially when people are in the house by themselves.

"He likes to mess with you when you're alone," Drew Green, sophomore in biology, said.

But Duncan the ghost has also been the suspect in some unusual happenings that have involved the house.

A fire that took place in the sleeping dorms on Jan. 29 may have something to do with Duncan.

Shaun Pickering, freshman in business, woke up to see someone walk past him, then shut and lock the south window of the sleeping room. The person, whom Pickering at the time thought was Justin Bramlett, sophomore in park resource management, then turned and seemed to leave out the east side.

"I heard the window lock, and saw him go by," Pickering said.

But Bramlett denies he was up, and no one heard the person come up the stairs to get into the room, get into a bed, leave by the stairs or go down the wooden planks, which are just outside the east door.

> "I was scared to death and was up all night. I kept my head under the covers."
> MICHAEL CARSON
> Senior in accounting

The old heating blanket began giving off smoke shortly after that. The south window was stuck shut, and the house members could not open it to get any air circulation. When they opened the door to get out, fresh air fanned the smoldering mattress into flames.

The house members said there was no way someone could have come up the stairs without being heard.

"You can hear before anyone gets up there. It's pretty loud," Pickering said.

Pickering described the person as light-complected with blonde hair, light-colored clothing and facial features that were clear but not distinct.

"It was kind of spooky when he said someone was walking around," Drew Green said.

Duncan, a Theta Xi pledge in the house in the 1950s, was killed in the library during a hazing event. The fatal blow to Duncan's head came while he was being paddled.

The paddle was hung on the wall as a memorial to him. But when the Theta Xis moved out, and the paddle was taken off the wall, the shape of the paddle remained.

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternity tried painting the walls when they moved in during 1968. But, where blood had been, the walls would not take paint. Instead, the walls bled through red. In the paddle's position, there was a faint charcoal-colored outline, Green said.

Eventually, the Fijis covered the lower part of the wall with paneling and painted the top with a cream paint.

The Pi Kaps were told about the wall problems when they later moved to the house in 1993. They decided to take the paneling off and try painting it anyway. But when the paneling came off, the paddle showed through once again.

"Our parents were helping, and they freaked out," Brian Bowen, sophomore in engineering, said.

The Pi Kaps tried painting, wallpapering and repainting. Finally, in fall 1994, Jeremy Bauer and Mo Musy, architecture students in the house, redid the room.

On the wall where the blood showed through, they painted it a dark reddish-brown. Where the outline of the paddle showed through, they spackled heavily and used a cream paint to cover up the paddle image, Drew Green said.

Although the big events get a lot of attention, the little things that occur begin adding up as well.

"I'm not a big fan of ghosts," Larry Keller, junior in marketing, said.

Keller said he was brushing his teeth in the bathroom one night when the bathroom door suddenly went shut. Then, the bathroom fan turned on and went off again. When it happened a second time, he checked to see if the fuse was bad. But they found the fan was in the off position the entire time.

"Needless to say, we took off as fast as we could. I finished brushing my teeth in the kitchen," Keller said.

Musy, a former house member, had a personal fan on the headboard of his bunk bed. One morning, the fan, which had been plugged in, was unplugged with the cord wrapped neatly around the base of the fan.

No one could have done it without climbing up onto the bed and over the sleeping person.

"I never really believed in ghosts, but if there was one thing to convince me, that was it," Aaron Green, senior in horticulture, said.

Some of the Fiji members say they remember events that took place when they lived in the house.

One night, a guy got up to go to the bathroom downstairs, which only had one door. As the member entered, he bumped into someone. But when he turned on the light only a second later, no one was there. There wasn't anyone in the hallway or anywhere close either, Jerrod Burns, senior in industrial psychology, said.

Michael Carson, senior in accounting, was asleep upstairs one night when he awoke to hear someone coming up the stairs. A light shone in the room, and Carson followed the sound of the creaking floor.

"He was walking through the light and went past me, and I never saw anyone," he said.

"I was scared to death and was up all night. I kept my head under the covers. It was really, really scary," Carson said.

Mike Overbey, senior in mechanical engineering, said one of the guys stayed in the house during semester break by himself.

He left his room with the radio on low, but while he was in the bathroom, it got turned up all the way. After turning it down, he checked the house to see if anyone was around.

He returned to the bathroom only to have the radio turned up once again.

"I didn't have any personal experiences, but if anything went wrong, we blamed it on Duncan. He made a good scapegoat," Overbey said.

Andy Ohmes, freshman in engineering and a Pi Kap pledge, said his mirror was leaning against a wall at a sharp 45-degree angle when it just fell over.

But the way that it fell and the position that it landed in made it look as if it were pushed over, even though no one was near it, he said.

Two cups that were sitting on Ohmes' couch moved on their own as Ohmes watched. One glass flew off, then the remote to the television went across the room, and then the other glass flew off of the couch, he said.

"A lot of things that are weird happen that are unexplainable. But it doesn't really bother me," Drew Green said.

Video focuses on colorism

Beauty should not be defined by skin color

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

DEBBIE GILL
Collegian

African Americans should appreciate their diversity and themselves because of the essence of who they are, not because of an Eurocentric standard of beauty.

This is what Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for Multicultural Affairs, said after Tuesday night's video presentation of "The Color Complex," sponsored by the Black Student Union.

The video was a PBS documentary that addressed the question of colorism among African Americans. It examined attitudes about shades of color in the African American community.

Freeman Davis, adviser to the National Pan-Hellenic Council, and Olga Davis, assistant professor of speech, facilitated the discussion after the video as a part of Black History Month.

"Our intention of the discussion is to contemplate some questions that are raised in the film. We ask why we would look at someone's hair texture, complexion or facial features and be swayed toward an underlying prejudice against each other," Freeman Davis said.

According to the film, color-consciousness came out of slavery. Lighter-skinned people were chosen to work in the main house and were given more advantages, while darker-skinned people were relegated to field work. This caused divisions among people based on color.

Men and women interviewed in the film said that whether they were dark or light skinned, they had all experienced discrimination in the black community.

The film also noted that these attitudes can affect people's self-esteem and cause them to feel badly about their natural hair or undergo plastic surgery to change their facial features.

Beauty contests and the media feed into what is the acceptable standard and what is not, Freeman Davis said.

"We need to look at what is the basis for the choices we make about the way we look. We should be honest and truthful with ourselves about the way we treat other people," he said.

During the discussion, students shared personal experiences with colorism and gave possible solutions for dealing with the issue.

"I finally got comfortable with my color when I went to a NAACP convention in 1988 and saw so many different hues of people. I saw some dark-skinned sisters who really had it together," Syvette Davis, junior in English, said.

Monrovia Scott, senior in industrial engineering, said she thought colorism is an issue that must be dealt with on an individual level.

"It takes a lot of growth in one's self to be able to say you appreciate everyone whether they're blue, black or brown," Scott said.

BOB McMANIS/Collegian

Freeman Davis, facilitator of video and discussion group on "The Color Complex," spoke to students about why color-consciousness is important.

Land of Ahs foods marketed worldwide

LINDA HARVEY
Collegian

Brownies, popcorn and cheeses, oh my.

Foods produced in the Land of Ahs are being marketed worldwide.

By participating in the From the Land of Kansas program, Kansas food production and processing businesses are now getting the chance to market their products in Bloomingdale's, Harrod's of London and Mexico City.

"The program came from a homespun effort and is now into the international and national scene," said Eldon Sastrup, director of domestic and international marketing for the Kansas Board of Agriculture.

Since its inception in 1984, the program has grown from just 24 products represented to more than 400. Retailers in the program recently pitched products to QVC, a home-shopping network, in Wichita.

Brad and Karen Streeter, co-owners of the Vista restaurant franchise, put together a gift box titled the "Top 10 List From The Home Office In Manhattan, Kansas," to present to QVC in the hope of gaining Kansas products some exposure.

The Vista franchise was one of the first programs to join the Savor Food From the Land of Kansas food service program, a spinoff from the original program.

Vista has registered its homemade brownies and tries to use as many Kansas products as possible in their production.

"We believe very much in supporting the state," Karen Streeter said. "You can tell we believe in the program."

Eastside and Westside markets and the Country Gift Shop are both Manhattan businesses that also carry From the Land of Kansas products.

Taste the Heartland is a spinoff program that targets specialty shops and grocery stores year round.

"What Kansans do with their products shows how determined they are," said Deborah Hix, K-State alumna and manager of the foods and feed program for the Kansas Value Added Center.

The Kansas Value Added Center at K-State helps the food program by offering technical assistance and limited funding to Kansans developing new food products from Kansas commodities.

"Ninety to 95 percent of our clients utilize the From the Land of Kansas program," Hix said.

"It's very important to us for people to proudly put the program trademark on their products. It makes their products unique and provides pride for the state."

"We've had a lot of highly successful projects," Sastrup said.

Classes make adjustments to deter cheaters

CARRIE LININ
Collegian

Classes with histories of cheating problems are changing their curricula and testing procedures.

The instructors of Natural Disasters and Principles of Biology, two classes that had problems with cheating last semester, have taken steps trying to prevent cheating.

"This semester, I'm teaching the course entirely different," George Clark, professor in geology, said. "We also increased the number of monitors around the room."

Clark said the exams are now given as a group effort.

"The students bring their own answer cards to take the quiz. Questions are then displayed on a slide, one at a time, in front of the room. A group can then work together because it is an open-book test."

"The situation last fall was really overblown. Some people took advantage of it, and there were others that were really trying," he said. "You get the impression everyone was cheating."

Larry Williams, associate professor of biology, said things have changed more since last semester.

"We had some changes last semester, but we added more this semester," Williams said.

The biology department has also added a detailed description of academic honesty to the syllabus of Principles of Biology and made several changes when it comes to administering the tests.

Different forms of the exams are given for the early exam time and regular exam time.

"We have always given an early exam to the students who have conflicts at night with children and work. That is why there are three forms of exams — two alternate exams at night and one during the day," Williams said.

Students must sit in alternate rows, and there are two proctors for every 120 students per exam room. Students must show a picture ID and use their Social Security number on the tests.

House strengthens open-meetings laws

Bill would make more meetings open to the public

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

The Kansas House gave final approval Feb. 21 to a bill that would strengthen open-meetings laws.

The bill was introduced by Rep. Doug Lawrence, R-Burlington.

"Neither the United States Constitution nor the Kansas Constitution guarantee the people the right to open meetings," Lawrence said.

That right is protected only by statutes, which can be changed at any time, he said.

"We have to have it, and it has to be strong," Lawrence said.

The bill added quasi-public bodies to the list of groups that must have open meetings.

Quasi-public bodies are created or incorporated by public bodies. The members are appointed rather than elected.

"If a body is created by a public body, it is a public body," Lawrence said.

Under the current law, bodies created by a public body are exempt from the open-meetings law, but this provision would include them as public bodies, he said.

Lawrence also added the language from the open-records act that asks the courts to broadly interpret the open-meetings act.

"Either through legislation or court intervention, we have turned the law into something that doesn't protect the public's right to know," he said.

Lawrence said he tried to put a little life back into the open-meetings law by encouraging broad interpretation.

"I am concerned in general with a string of court cases eroding the law," he said.

The bill would also formalize the attorney general's interpretation of the law, which said public officials can attend the same social gatherings.

The interpretation was made when the first open-meetings bill was passed.

Mike Bates, president of the Kansas chapter of the Society for Professional Journalists, said SPJ has never been opposed to officials attending the same social gatherings.

The final provision of the bill would eliminate the constraints of notification by public bodies during state of emergency such as the 1993 flood, Lawrence said.

Although Lawrence said he did not think notification hindered a body's ability to respond to an emergency, some people were concerned about it, and the provision was added.

"I'd like to see it stronger, but I want it to pass," Lawrence said.

The House bill will be sent on to the Senate for approval.

The executive board for the professional chapter of SPJ met to write letters and make phone calls to senators requesting they vote in favor of the House bill.

The House introduced two versions of the open-meetings act, and the Senate introduced one version earlier this session. These bills did not advance.

The second House bill concerning open meetings would have allowed the majority of a quorum of any public body to gather and discuss business outside of a meeting without notifying the public, Bates said.

This bill did not advance.

SPJ members were most concerned about this section of the bill because public bodies would then be able to discuss everything outside of the public view and only vote at the meetings, Bates said.

The Senate bill would have allowed governing bodies to meet and discuss appointments to committees such as water boards in executive session, he said.

The Senate has no plans to go ahead with its bill, said Sen. Mark Parkinson, R-Olathe and chairman of the Local Government Committee.

Parkinson said the Senate was waiting to see what the House would do with open meetings.

"The Senate bill attempted to clarify that it is not a violation to have a social gathering, as long as official business isn't discussed," he said.

Once the Senate was sure the House bill was coming over, it decided to wait for it, Parkinson said.

Lawrence said he was optimistic the House bill would do well in the Senate.

"I think it's going to get a fair hearing," he said.

"I don't think there's overwhelming controversy."

Parkinson said he expected a bit of controversy because open-meetings laws always bring about controversy.

"In general, the press loves the open-meetings law," he said. "In general, the elected officials find the open-meetings law to be burdensome."

Parkinson said his committee won't start having hearings on it until the first half of the session is over and the houses exchange legislation.

"I think what we have is a real balanced bill," he said.

Base closings still keeping Fort Riley soldiers on edge

Fort Riley is not on the Base Realignment and Closure Commission's current base-closure list. More base closures will be announced May 17.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY — The communities around Fort Riley were relieved the post wasn't on a base-closure list released Tuesday, but officials plan to remain vigilant.

"If we're not added to the list by May 18, then we're out of the woods for now," said Casey Thomas, a Junction City veterinarian and chairman of Kansas for a Strong Fort Riley, a booster group of nearly 300 people.

The Base Realignment and Closure Commission has until May 17 to place additional installations on the list released by the Pentagon on Tuesday.

Thomas and others aren't expecting Fort Riley to be added to the list but are watching closely.

Officials in Kansas and lobbyists hired to look out for Fort Riley in Washington will monitor every hearing and action by the commission, said Fred Hepler, chairman of the Governor's Task Force in Support of Fort Riley and a retired colonel whose last duty was as garrison commander at the base.

Kansas overall was hardly touched in the latest round of base closures recommended by the Pentagon.

The only installation in Kansas scheduled for a shutdown was the Naval Air Reserve Center in Olathe, a remnant of what was a vibrant Navy air station from 1942 until 1970.

The Pentagon proposal would mean the loss of 10 military and four civilian jobs there.

No changes were made at McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita or at Fort Leavenworth, officials said.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole last week said Fort Riley had already "taken a pretty good hit" when the Army in 1994 recommended a one-third reduction in the base's forces and transfer of the 1st Infantry Division headquarters to Europe by 1996.

Dole, R-Kan., said he lobbied Defense Secretary William Perry heavily to keep Fort Riley, Fort Leavenworth and McConnell Air Force Base from closing or being cut back.

Dole said he told Perry that "military value should take priority over budget considerations."

"Fort Riley, Fort Leavenworth and McConnell Air Force Base all stand above the crowd," Dole said. "As we downsize our forces, Kansas' military installations are critical elements of our long-term security strategy."

Professor maps county's bedrock

JASON TYLER
Collegian

A K-State professor and graduate student helped compile information for a new, detailed map of the geology of Riley County.

The new geological map gives people an idea of what kind of bedrock is beneath the surface of the Riley County and is available from the Kansas Geological Survey.

The full-color map was compiled by Allen Archer, associate professor of geology, and Brian Smith, graduate student in geology.

The map shows the age and type of rocks and soils at the surface of Riley County.

These features range from relatively recent soils atop hills, to sands and gravels along rivers, to bedrock in southeastern Riley County deposited during the Pennsylvanian period of geologic history about 300 million years ago.

Because geologic maps provide basic information about an area's geology, they are useful in construction, city and county planning, and environmental activities.

"Since being introduced to the Riley County Planning Commission in January '95, the map has been very useful," Archer said.

"The map gives construction companies a good idea of what kind of bedrock is below the surface," Archer said. "The type of bedrock must be known before a construction company can start to build a foundation."

The map shows the location of a dozen kimberlites, or pipes of igneous rock, that exploded to the surface in western Riley County during the Cretaceous period about 100 million years ago.

"Flooding in 1993 exposed rock formations in the Tuttle Creek spillway, greatly increasing the interest in geology in Riley County," Archer said. "This map also provides additional information on the geology of all of Riley County."

Copies of the map are available for $15 plus $2 for postage and handling from the Kansas Geological Survey, West Campus, University of Kansas, Lawrence, KS 66047.

"The map is a little expensive right now because we are making each map on a computer one by one," Rex Buchanan, assistant director of public relation, said.

Country artist refreshes fans with '50s flare

MIKE BUNCH

Steve Kolander's self-titled debut album is a refreshing change of pace on the country-music scene.

New to the record scene, Kolander takes a fresh approach to his music. Lyrics, vocals and Kolander's appearance are a step back to '50s love songs and the old fashioned country look — very light, meaningful and carefree.

The first single from his album, "Listen to Your Woman," is a slow ballad about paying attention to the woman in your life.

Kolander has very fluid, smooth vocals and uses them to share lyrics offering advice to men, an excellent piece of romantic music.

"Black Dresses" is the second release off Kolander's debut.

This track has a bit of a traditional country twang and a strong beat behind the lyrics. Kolander tells the tale of a man who gives everything to his woman, who, in turn, runs around and paints the town — a typical country song presented in a very pleasing manner.

Kolander varies the style and tempo of his music in each track. The upbeat "Black Dresses" changes to a more mellow sound in several other tracks.

One of those tracks is "Drowning Man." Soft vocals move with a light beat to carry the song.

It is an interesting song full of the regrets of a man who made some poor decisions and now looks back on his life "... drowning in a pool of tears." It is a tale easy to relate to if you just take the time to listen to the words.

Something really different is "She's So Bad," a song from the '50s that has a bit of the Stray Cats sound to it.

The heavy bass line and simple phrasing keep lyrics about a woman that caught a man's heart moving right along.

"She's So Bad" offers the ear something a little out of the ordinary, making the album even stronger.

His self-titled debut is a refreshing change from the normal dance-mixed, pop-oriented sounds everyone has come to recognize as country music. Even though many of the lyrics follow the stereotypical image, Kolander presents every song in a new light.

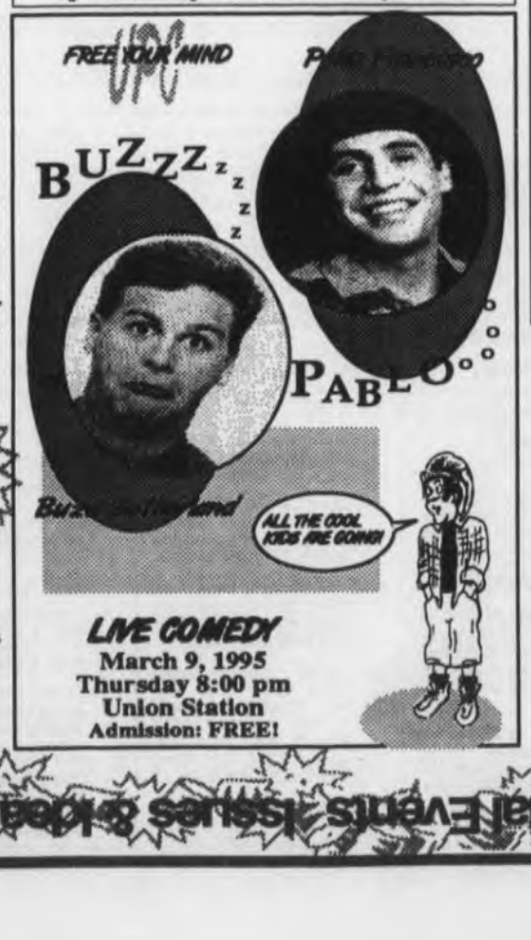
I think Steve Kolander has what it takes to be a success in today's mass-production music market. Definitely take a chance and try it out, it is worth the time and money.

Reader tired of routine, seeks new plan

Dear Cassie,

I have had the same major for the past three years and have a good GPA. This semester, I have become bored and unhappy. I'm graduating soon and have a job lined up. With my restlessness lately, I'm worried I'll go crazy after a while. My parents will kill me if they find out I want start something new so late in the game. What do I do?
Signed, Frank Lloyd Wright/ Andy Warhol Wannabe

Dear Frank,



I'd say you need to talk to your adviser about your restlessness. It could be a phase, or it may mean you need to consider a new vocation.

I'd be hesitant about dropping your major altogether, since you are close to the end. Consider a double major. Take the extra year and pursue something else that pleases you. A double major might also please your parents.

Docent program to involve art fans

MARIANNA KISTLER BEACH MUSEUM OF ART

Although the official opening of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art isn't until March 1996, you can get involved this week.

Two informational meetings for the recruitment of docents (volunteer tour guides) will be given from 9:30 to 11 a.m. and from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Thursday in room 148 of the KSU Foundation Building.

Kathrine Walker, education coordinator for the art museum, said Thursday's meetings will outline the goals and requirements of the docent program.

"It's a meeting for people to find out if they are interested or not," she said.

The meetings are open to K-State students and Manhattan community members.

Walker describes the docent program as a "kind of all-ages, all-background group."

The docent training program works as a course, meeting throughout the academic year.

Walker said the five classes planned for this spring will teach the language of art, 20th-century American art and the collection of the Beach. A prior knowledge of art is not necessary.

Walker's only prerequisite for the job is that you be a people person.

Students need not be wary of working over the summer or during spring break. Walker said the training course will operate around schedules.

There will be two times for training sessions, one in the morning and another in the evening.

The job of the docents will mainly include working with incoming school groups, giving tours of the museum to adults and working in an outreach program for schools or senior centers.

Walker said docents will have flexible schedules because it is a volunteer-based job.

The docents will receive museum perks in the form of bookstore discounts, special parties, field trips and letters of recommendation.

For more information, contact Kathrine Walker at 532-7220.

CHANG GALLERY

Evolution and construction seem to be reoccurring themes at the Chang Gallery this semester.

The last exhibit to fill this space traced the founding and building of the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art.

Currently, the exhibit, "The Grand American Avenue" explores the histories and architectural glories of six great avenues in American cities.

Among the streets chronicled are New York City's Fifth Avenue, Los Angeles' Wilshire Boulevard and Chicago's Prairie Avenue.

This exhibit harks back to the days when America's cities were virgin, before commercialism swept its nasty paw into their hearts.

Those were the days — roughly the middle 19th century through the early 20th century — when oil barons and railroad tycoons built glorious mansions along wide tree-lined avenues.

In the 20th century, thanks mostly to the upscale development of the areas and rising property values, many of these mansions fell prey to luxury hotels, apartments and department stores.

In concise, complete displays, this exhibit opens up a world of past splendor, which is related through biographies, architectural renderings and vintage photographs.

"The Grand American Avenue" is informative and revealing, if you don't get a crick in your neck after bending over to read some of the lower displays. Don't worry about sitting on the floor — the intimate Chang Gallery, with its mellow music, practically invites casual inspection.

This is a fine exhibit that will surely incite you to head upstairs two flights to the Weigel Library of Architecture and Design and learn more.

The Chang Gallery is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m, Monday through Friday.

STRECKER GALLERY

This Friday, the Strecker Gallery at 332 Poyntz Ave. will open its newest show featuring lithographs printed by Michael Sims at his Lawrence Lithography Workshop.

There will be a reception from 5 to 7 p.m. open to anyone who is interested. Preceding the reception at Strecker will be gallery talk given by Sims at 4:30 p.m. in Willard 202A.

Sims will discuss the printing process and the relationship of printer to artist.

Julie Strecker of the gallery said the print show will consist of about 30 pieces from artists all over the country.

She said she suggests people plan to attend the gallery talk in order to learn more about prints, because this can be confusing to the public.

"It will be very interesting," Strecker said.

The show will feature works by two K-State family members, Margo Kren, associate professor of art, and Teresa Schmidt, associate professor of art.

Other artists represented include Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton, Robert Sudlow, Luis Jimenez, Jaune Quick-to-See Smith and Miriam Shapiro.

The show runs from Friday though March 30. The Strecker Gallery is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

AMBRY GALLERY

A new show of ceramics, "Visions of Vessels," by Sonya Michelle Paukune will have its opening reception tonight from 7 to 9 in the Ambry Gallery, located in West Stadium.

The show runs through March 18. To see the works outside of the reception, contact Yoshiro Ikeda at 532-6033 or Paukune at 532-6613.

UNION ART GALLERY

The "Student Art Show," sponsored by the Union Program Council Arts Committee, is now showing through March 10.

The show features eclectic work by artists selected by the committee in an annual competition.

The gallery's hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m, Monday through Friday.

Social Services Day shows route of fees

DEBBIE GILL
Collegian

Social Services Day will provide K-State students with an opportunity to see how their student-fee money is being spent.

The event will be from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. today in the K-State Union courtyard.

Offices on campus that provide student fee-supported services will have displays and representatives present to provide information about programs.

"The purpose of Social Services Day is to educate students about where their money goes and what services are available to them," Tricia Nolfi, coordinator for student activities, said.

Nolfi said the event is sponsored by the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee of Student Senate.

"They haven't had an event like this for a couple of years. Aaron Otto, committee chair, felt it was the responsibility of the committee to bring it back. It lets the students know about programs they are partially or fully supporting through campus fees," Nolfi said.

University Counseling Services is just one of several campus offices that are student-supported.

"About half of our cost comes out of the student health-fee account," said Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services.

Counseling services will have self-help pamphlets on topics ranging from stress management to depression, Newton said.

"We also hope to have information about our new biofeedback lab and a machine out to demonstrate," he said.

Newton said the machine measures physiological responses like blood pressure. It gives an impression of a person's anxiety level and how to reduce it.

Dianne Urban, students' attorney, said she hopes the event will generate student interest in the services.

"I think that not many people know about the free legal services. I leave brochures and talk to groups, but most of our publicity is word-of-mouth. I hope students stop by, ask a few questions and tell their friends about it," she said.

NEWS DIGEST

▶KANSAS UNEMPLOYMENT RISES; JOBS SCARCE

TOPEKA (AP) — Kansas' unemployment rate rose moderately in January, the result of fewer jobs being available, the Department of Human Resources said Tuesday.

The agency said the state's jobless rate climbed from 4.9 percent in December to 5.3 percent in January.

It was 5.9 percent in January 1994.

There were 1,270,161 people working in the state in January, with 71,114 looking for work.

Department statistics showed there were 23,500 fewer jobs available in January than the prior month, with 4,500 fewer jobs in construction, 6,800 in wholesale and retail trade, 3,900 in services and 6,900 in government.

Senate gives preliminary nod to bill for liquor sales on Sunday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate gave a tentative nod Tuesday to a bill that would allow liquor stores to open on Sundays.

The measure appears to be on the verge of squeaking through the Legislature to go to Gov. Bill Graves' desk.

The Senate narrowly resisted amendments that were designed to effectively kill the bill, which the House passed 63-61.

The bill would allow voters to decide, county by county, if they want to allow liquor stores to be open on Sundays. It also would allow liquor stores to be open on Labor Day, Independence Day and Memorial Day.

People also would be able to buy liquor and beer with credit cards issued by banks, such as VISA or MasterCard. Credit cards issued by companies, such as Discover and American Express, could not be used.

The bill also spells out that liquor stores can only be open from 1 to 8 p.m. on Sunday.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, asked that people not vote for any amendments offered. He said another bill would be introduced to correct the problem with credit cards.

"The will of the House is the will of the people on this issue," said Sen. Mike Harris, R-Wichita. "At some point, some innocent person will be killed."

▶ KANSAS LEGISLATURE

House pushes state to follow national voter act

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House is expected to approve two measures on Wednesday that would let the federal government know it can't push Kansas around.

On Tuesday, representatives advanced to final action a bill and a resolution designed to show the federal government it will have to force the state to follow requirements set by the National Voter Registration Act of 1993.

The resolution instructs Attorney General Carla Stovall to file suit against the federal government declaring the federal registration law unenforceable and unconstitutional.

However, Rep. Jim Garner, D-Coffeyville, said he objected to the lawsuit because of the money it would require.

"We don't know that the attorney general even wants to get involved in this fight," he said.

The bill grudgingly brings Kansas voter registration laws into compliance with the federal law. It moved to final vote on a count of 81-21.

An amendment proposed by Majority Leader Vince Snowbarger, R-Olathe, and adopted during debate, states the bill won't take effect until a court orders Kansas to implement it, making a federal lawsuit against Kansas inevitable.

Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said he objected to the amendment because the House should support laws making it easier to register to vote.

"I don't know why some people are upset about registering voters," he said.

But Snowbarger said it wasn't easier voter registration laws he objected to.

"I just don't like the federal government telling us how to do it," he said.

Like many of the federal law's opponents, he said he sees it as an unfunded mandate.

The 26-page bill implements the administrative procedures needed to carry out the federal act. The Legislature has already been asked for $900,000 to fund the counties' initial start-up costs.

The majority of that money would be used for computer software and other electronic equipment needed to track voter registration.

The rest would be for new filing cabinets. The cabinets currently hold four-by-six inch registration cards. Federal law requires the cards to be six-by-eight.

The federal law puts many of the burdens of voter registration on government, not the citizen. It also makes it harder for voters to be removed from registration lists.

It requires all states to offer voter registration to members of the public when they apply for a driver's license or when they apply for governmental assistance at state agencies. Voters must also be allowed to register by mail.

California and South Carolina already have sued the federal government.

Kansas law already follows much of the federal act.

A bill requiring voluntary registration with a driver's license application was enacted last year, and governmental agencies have been asked to voluntarily pass out registration applications to their clients.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

A WINNING YEAR '95

Rec Report

Recreational Services, Kansas State University, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

Watch for our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

Wildcat Workout Spring Training

Make March the month to spring into shape with aerobic exercise. Regular exercise increases your energy level, decreases stress, increases cardiovascular endurance, decreases weight gain, increases self-esteem and decreases your risk of illness. Choose convenient times to work out from the 30 exercise sessions offered per week. Let your March exercise regimen make the difference for you this spring. Then plan to celebrate your exercise achievements with this month's special event, THE SPRING TRAINING WORKOUT, Tuesday, March 14, at 5:30 p.m. All afternoon sessions will be combined for this special event.

If you are interested in becoming an Exercise Leader, attend the Saturday, March 4, 9:30 a.m. workout and stay after for applying, orientation, and training. Tryouts will be Tuesday, March 14, at 3:15 p.m. Come to the Saturday training for more information or call 532-6980.

Pool Action

Swimmers exercise to a different beat. Your heart is a built-in monitor for aerobic exercise. Maintaining your training heart rate for 30 minutes, three times per week, increases oxygen demand, burns fat and improves cardiovascular endurance. To find your Training Heart Rate (THR), subtract your age from 220 (maximum heart rate) and multiply by 75. However, if swimming is your means of aerobic exercise, you must subtract the average 13 beats per minute difference there is between swimmers and runners. Subtract your age plus 13 from 220 and multiply by 75. A swimmers heart rate may be lower because of the body's horizontal position, the cooling affect of the water, or the heart not having to work as hard against gravity. Swim to a different beat and achieve the same great aerobic exercise benefits.

In February, all Rec Services lifeguards successfully completed a 15-hour training update in Lifeguard Training, First Aid, and CPR. Students employed as lifeguards for Rec Services, work approximately 15 hours/week as well as attend monthly meetings and in-service training. Applications for lifeguard positions are being taken now for Fall 1995.

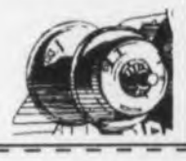
Who's Who at Rec Services

Joe Blasi, a native of Andale, Kansas, has been an intramural supervisor for Recreational Services for over three years. Blasi, senior in elementary education, worked as an intramural official for two years before becoming a supervisor. Blasi said that his job duties are similar in nature to what his responsibilities will be as a teacher. "I help train and evaluate the officials and deal directly with people as situations arise both during the intramural games and on the sideline," he said. His responsibilities also include the safety of the participants. Blasi will graduate in December, 1995, and said he hopes to find a job that will allow him to teach and coach. He feels his experiences as an intramural supervisor will help him in his future endeavors.

Marsha Stephenson, native of Bucklin, Kansas, has worked at Recreational Services for over a year. Stephenson, senior in kinesiology, said her duties as a building manager mostly pertain to the supervision of the facilities. She said she values her experience working for Recreational Services because it gives her a chance to interact with people. "My job has given me the opportunity to work with a diverse group of people," she said. Stephenson will graduate in May and wishes to continue her education in a physical therapy assistant program or find work that relates to the health field. Stephenson spends her free time planning her wedding, which will be this August.

My Favorite Workout

Josue "Rico" Hernandez, graduate teaching assistant in rhetoric communication, has been exercising at the Rec Complex since he came to K-State in September. When he is not busy coaching the debate team, he works out seven days a week. Hernandez said he is exercising now more than ever because he has a different mind set about his time spent at the Rec Complex. "I don't think of my workout as work, I think of it as fun," he said. His workout consists of many different exercises. "I do a variety of things so I don't get bored with any one activity," Hernandez said. He said one of his favorite activities is aerobics. "Many of the instructors are very motivating," he said. Hernandez is looking forward to the completion of the expansion because of the new fitness equipment and new aerobics facilities that will be provided.



CONSTRUCTION UPDATE

- We have opened in the new gymnasium.
- Opening of the new front entryway, service area, and offices should be during the first part of March.
- Construction will continue in the west half of the building and renovation will start in the existing gym.
- We should see the new track surface go down, as well as the completion of the new flooring in the lower level handball/racquetball courts in the latter part of March.

Job Opportunity--Weight/Fitness Room Supervisor, Assistant Building Managers, and Facility Maintance

Positions begin Fall '95. Application forms are available in the Recreational Services office. The application deadline is Friday, April 7. For more information contact Derek Walters at 532-6980.

Fitness Facts

Favoring one sport can cause problems as you are likely to strengthen certain muscles at the expense of others. This leaves tendons and ligaments unbalanced and thus vulnerable. Varying your activities is one way to prevent this, as well as strengthening the muscle groups you underuse, and stretching all muscles involved in your workout.

Softball

As spring approaches, we all look forward to moving our recreational activities outdoors. One way to do this is playing on an Intramural Softball team. Entries will be accepted March 6-9 in the Rec Services office and games begin after Spring Break. Information sheets are available in the Rec Services office. Get your friends together and organize a team!

Softball Officials Wanted

Recreational Services will be hiring and training Softball Officials for the upcoming season. Training sessions will be held Mon., March 13, at 6:30 p.m. in the Union, Room 212, and Tues., March 14, at 5 p.m. at the Rec Complex. You do not have to be experienced in softball officiating. We will train and prepare you to be the best official you can be.

Plants aid in therapy, rehabilitation

Planting a flower may not seem especially therapeutic, but research has proven that horticulture therapy can help people heal and relax.

Increasing social interaction and psychological improvement of people with special needs is just a glimpse of what horticultural therapy is about, said Richard Mattson, professor of horticultural therapy.

"A lot of times, the physically and mentally handicapped and the elderly have real low self-esteems. This is a chance for them to be successful at something and receive praise for it," he said.

The therapy is accomplished by using plants to provide people with social, psychological, physical and educational benefits under the direction of a horticultural therapist, Mattson said.

A horticultural therapist is a professional who uses activities with horticulture, nature and plant-related activities to assist in the therapy and rehabilitation of special population groups or individuals.

Horticultural therapy began at K-State in 1971, when the Department of Horticulture established the first bachelor of science degree in the field in the United States, Mattson said.

Mattson said the curriculum is preparing students for a rapidly changing job field while combining education and family studies.

"Almost all occupational therapists in England are horticultural therapists and recognize that plants are valuable," Mattson said.

To prepare senior students majoring in horticultural therapy, they participate in a pre-interning program where they coordinate activities in six different sites, Mattson said.

The program began as a way to improve their professional skills and receive hands-on experience, he said.

"The site visitations began in the early '70s with a visitation to St. Joseph Senior Community," he said.

The visitations now include St. Joseph, Wharton Manor Nursing Home, Amanda Arnold Elementary School, Manhattan Middle School, Lee School and Big Lakes Developmental Center, Inc.

"We have more requests for the program than we are able to fill," Mattson said.

Gabriela Harvey, senior in horticulture therapy, said the students design their own activities, and they reflect their different personalities.

Harvey works with a group of boys at Amanda Arnold who have attention deficit disorder.

"I get so annoyed with labels. They seem to me as perfectly normal boys — they just get a little distracted," Harvey said.

"This is a chance for the children to realize that we do share this world with other critters," Harvey said.

She said one of the activities they have completed was creating a topiary, a living sculpture made from wire frames and vines.

Although Harvey works with a special-education class, she said she believes that you don't need to be different to benefit from horticultural therapy.

"We are so stressed every minute. Our lives are full of stress and a lot of pressure. Gardening slows us down but is still physically demanding and makes us aware of nature

Haymaker unlocks front doors

CARRIE COX
Collegian

Haymaker Hall residents discovered their front doors unlocked Wednesday morning after a decision made by the Haymaker Hall Governing Board Tuesday night.

George Eisele, Haymaker HGB president, said Haymaker HGB passed a motion allowing the front doors of the residence hall to be locked from midnight to 6 a.m., with the back door remaining locked 24 hours.

Until Wednesday, all doors at Haymaker were being locked 24 hours because of a decision made in September.

"We believe this is what the majority of Haymaker residents want. We know a lot of people will be happy with this decision," Eisele, senior in sociology and criminology, said.

Eisele said the suggestion to unlock the doors permanently came after an idea to open the doors for a hall dance.

"A motion was made to open the doors from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m. on the night of the dance, and it passed unanimously. Then a motion was made to unlock the doors permanently. It was seconded, and we limited discussion to 10 minutes," Eisele said. "But I'd say the discussion took less than five minutes."

The motion to open the doors was passed 7-0 with three abstaining votes.

Brad Ratliff, Haymaker HGB vice president, said he voted for the motion because he feels this is what Haymaker residents want.

"I'd say the majority of residents were upset when we decided to lock the doors 24 hours. I

Students report being harassed over the phone

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

International students have been the target of some harassing phone calls.

Motaz Hourani, program coordinator at the foreign student office, said several students have reported the calls to his office.

"We've had maybe three or four actually report it, but there may have been more that weren't reported," he said.

The caller, whom one victim identified as a male with an American accent, told the victims he was from Immigration and Naturalization Services and told them they were living in this country illegally, Motaz said.

Investigator Richard Herrman of the K-State Police said there was also sexual content in the messages.

"This is different than the normal harassing phone calls, but it was not life-threatening," he said.

▶ RILEY COUNTY

Law board finds crime rate increasing in Riley County

MELINDA CARTER
Collegian

The occurrence of some crimes increased, and traffic accidents decreased in Riley County in 1994.

The Riley County law board met last week to discuss incidence of crime within the county last year.

"The bad news is that overall, the most frequently occurring of crimes have gone up 11 percent," Captain Allen Raynor said.

Raynor said this includes such crimes as aggravated assault and burglary. He said burglary has become a serious problem.

He said one-third of the people arrested by the police department are younger 18 years old.

Raynor said that figure was consistent with the national average for the percentage of teenagers arrested.

In addition to burglary, the number of assaults has increased over the past year.

"We've been having a real problem down in Aggieville with people getting beat up pretty bad," Raynor said.

He said the assaults could be partly attributed to alcohol consumption.

Furthermore, domestic battery has also increased.

Raynor said the police intend to make more arrests on offenses like domestic battery.

However, Capt. Steve French said there was a 5.6-percent decrease in all accidents, and the number of fatalities due to traffic accidents decreased 50 percent.

French said there were 75 fewer accidents countywide in 1994 than in 1993. This dropped the number to 1,569 from the 1993 figure of 1,644.

There has been an increase in enforcement in trouble areas, and this has aided the decrease in accidents, French said.

Outside of traffic accidents, French addressed the issue of drunken driving.

Telefund callers surpass goal, earn prizes

MELISSA HOYT
Collegian

Despite the rain, snow, sleet, wind and sometimes tropical weather, K-State students showed up to go beyond the 1995 goal for the Telefund.

For the past 16 years, students and faculty have been showing up to call K-State alumni and ask for donations.

The total amount raised by the 20 nights of volunteer effort this year was $826,083.

Gordon Dowell, KSU Foundation and director of the Telefund, said the total money raised from the past 15 years is in the neighborhood of 6.9 million.

This year's Telefund had the theme "Free Willie."

Dowell said the staff had tried to think of a theme but came up empty-handed. Then one day the theme just hit him.

Dowell said he attributes the success of the Telefund to the fact that most of the alumni who are giving now once sat at the telephones and volunteered when they were in college.

Another reason the Telefund is so successful is the prizes that are awarded, Dowell said.

"We have $15,000 worth of prizes donated to us from businesses in the Manhattan, Junction City, Topeka, Wichita and Clay Center areas," Dowell said.

One prize was a coupon for a free Big Mac from McDonald's for receiving a $100 pledge.

"We figured it all up, and we have two tons of food to give away," Dowell said.

Paul Fisher, K-State alumnus, donated 200 of the space pens he invented. The space pen is what astronauts use in space. Instead of using gravity to push the ink down, the pen is pressurized, and no air is put back into the pen. It has a shelf life of 100 years and can write underwater and upside-down.

McDonald's donated 1,000 Big Macs. Nike donated five certificates for $100 each to go to the caller getting the donation that puts the total amount donated over a 100,000 mark for each 100,000 increment. Pizza Hut also helped finance the mugs that were given to each caller who stayed the entire time.

This year's grand prize was a 1973 Plymouth Satellite.

Some colleges, such as the College of Engineering, gave sweatshirts to each student who helped out. "It is kind of a tradition," said Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶SCHOOL BOARD WILL ASK VOTERS FOR AN INCREASE IN OPTION TAX

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board approved a recommendation to propose to voters an increase in local property taxes.

In a unanimous vote Wednesday, the board agreed to request permission from the voters to give the board authority to add as much as 12 percent to the current 3-percent local option tax that is applied to property taxes.

The additional money will go to fill funding shortages in the current budget, for a salary increase of 3 percent to keep up with the cost of living for employees, and for technological improvements.

At 15 percent, the owners of a $70,000 house could expect the local option tax to go up from $25.55 to $175.17.

The district is facing budget difficulties for several reasons, Superintendent Dan Yunk said.

One need for extra money is to compensate for a lack of an increase in the base per-pupil funds from the state.

The state has failed to raise its per-pupil funding for three years, although current bills in the Kansas Legislature might increase funding.

Another reason the district's general fund will be facing more hurdles, Yunk said, has to do with the additional cost of opening the new Frank Bergman Elementary School next fall and the upcoming openings of two new middle schools.

A final reason Yunk cited for the need for additional income has to do with flaws in the current state finance law that give inequitable financial weight to smaller schools.

Yunk said the amount of money the district spends per student is $3,905, placing the district 19th to the bottom in the state.

"I don't think we can continue the quality with those kinds of odds," Yunk said.

However, even after voter approval, the district is not required to implement the 12-percent increase. This is only the maximum amount the district would be allowed to levy for the next two years.

Joleen Hill, board member, told the board she voted for the recommendation with every intention not to levy the full amount.

▶RESIDENCE HALL WITH HISTORY OF ARSON REPORTS BURNED POSTINGS

An aggravated arson was reported in Haymaker Hall Tuesday night.

"It was found by one of our staff members," Mateo Remsburg, assistant director of Haymaker, said.

About $150 damage was done to the central stairwell door when a posting hanging on the door was burned.

"I believe it was one of our no-smoking-in-the-stairwells signs," Remsburg said.

Fourth-floor staff member Dave Hasemann reported the incident to K-State Police at 9:28 p.m. Officer David Springer responded.

"I was told by a resident that he could smell smoke," Hasemann said.

The resident noticed the burned posting when he went from his room to tell Hasemann about the smell.

Hasemann said he could not tell what the posting was because it was almost completely destroyed.

"The police came and took a statement and the posting," Remsburg said.

Springer said the Manhattan Fire Department was not called because the fire was not noticed until after it had gone out.

"It apparently went out on its own," he said.

Haymaker has had trouble in the past with fires, including a fire in the ninth-floor lobby in February 1994. Another fire was reported in the trash chute, and the hall was evacuated later the same week.

Another fire in the ninth-floor lobby occurred in September 1993.

"They apparently had some at the beginning of the semester," Springer said.

Other instances of postings being set on fire while hanging on the walls were reported earlier this semester.

▶BOARD CONSIDERS PUBLIC'S NEEDS IN ADA SELF-EVALUATION PLAN

The Human Rights and Services Board received public comments Tuesday night in regard to the city's Americans with Disabilities Act Self-Evaluation Plan.

Lewis "Tobie" Tyler said the audio recordings he received of previous city meetings were not adequate for him to hear, and there were parts of the meetings missing from the tapes.

Tyler is not able to read or write because of an injury. He listens to recordings of city meetings.

"I thought wrong, but I thought we were going to tape all that was said. Not part of it, but all," Tyler said.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said he duplicated the tapes himself and was able to hear them without any problem.

Other recommendations from Manhattan residents included making a city policy requiring five-minute breaks during city meetings, and also to allow people attending city meetings to have adequate time to voice their opinions.

Individuals with disabilities require breaks, and many also need more time to say what they want to say, Delesa Rhoderman, Manhattan resident, said.

"Forgetting about the individual public's needs is insensitive, and this board is supposed to make things better for people with disabilities," Rhoderman said.

Mary Butler, Human Rights and Services Board member, said the comments would be noted, and the board would reconvene on March 16 and decide what complaints to recommend to the city commission for action.

Apartment ins and outs

House hunting should be started soon

If you think renting an apartment or house is easy, think twice. But you better hurry. March is prime time to start planning for your living arrangement next fall.

"You should start looking the beginning of March and have an apartment by spring break — unless you don't want to have a selection," Sandy Larkins, senior in finance, said.

There are several questions you need to answer before you even start looking.

To begin your search, there is a bulletin board that lists available rental units on the first floor of the K-State Union.

You can also check with the Office of Student Activities and Services for a list of larger apartment complexes, property-management companies and real-estate companies that handle rental properties.

"I talked to some friends and asked them about where they live when I was looking," Larkins said.

The next step is to sort through your options.

Decide what size of apartment or house you are looking for, whether you would like it furnished or unfurnished and how long you would like your lease to run.

Be aware of restrictions, such as no pets, no smoking, no children, no waterbeds or no subleasing.

When you have found a place you are interested in, check the owner or manager's track record. You can talk to present or former tenants, K-State's Consumer Relations Board or the Manhattan Department of Human Resources.

For safety purposes, be sure to ask how frequently the unit is inspected. Check to see there are smoke detectors, a fire extinguisher, the proper number of windows and exits for fire safety, and a place where you can seek shelter in the event of a tornado.

"Each year we have a fire inspection," said Charlie Busch, Manhattan properties supervisor for McCullough Development. "Students should look for issues of life safety, such as a good means of security."

In addition, check the locks on the doors and windows. A peephole in the door also provides added security.

"Our philosophy is that we want to provide safe housing," Busch said.

When you have decided on a location, the next step is to read and sign the lease.

"Read the lease carefully. Leases are so long that many people don't read them," said Marisa Brown, director of Student Activities and Services consumer relations board.

Students can take their leases into the Office of Student Activities and Services, and they will check them over.

"If you don't bring it into the office, at least take it home and look at it," Brown said.

You should be sure to get the lease in writing. Do not agree to oral terms. Once you have agreed to the terms of the lease, the signatures of the owner or manager and every roommate are necessary for the lease to be valid.

Within five days of moving in, tenants should do an inventory with the owner or manager to determine what damage exists in the apartment and what repairs need to be done.

"Doing a good inventory check with the landlord is the best way to make sure you retain your deposit," Brown said.

Student Senate promotes safe housing for students

"We want to make students aware that they have a right to ask for an inspection."
PAT BALL
code inspection officer

There are about 15,000 K-State students living in off-campus housing.

Student Senate organized Safe Housing Week to promote safe housing.

Senate has a responsibility to protect the health, safety and welfare of all students, David Winkler, human ecology senator, said.

"I felt it was important to have this week because many apartments and houses that are rented out are not up to code," he said.

Senate encourages students to take advantage of the services provided by the city of Manhattan to renters. This is why the Code Inspection Office and the Landlords of Manhattan Inc. were asked to set up a table in the K-State Union this week.

"Our biggest hope is that students will realize the help is here, and it's free," Mac Campbell, building official for the city of Manhattan, said.

The Code Inspection Office will come to a house or an apartment at the request of either individual students or landlords for an inspection.

Code Inspection Officers also walk the neighborhoods in Manhattan to look for properties they think might have problems.

"We especially look at buildings that look like they have basement apartments," Brad Claussen, code inspection officer, said.

Before an inspection, the owners or managers of the properties are contacted to let them know an inspection is going to be done.

If problems are found, a notice to repair is sent to the owner or manager, who has five days to respond with a plan of action and timetable.

"We can accept their time frame or impose our own," Claussen said. "Then we follow up with another inspection."

A typical inspection by the Code Inspection Office is looking at the inside and outside of the house as well as the area around the house.

"We look to make sure that there are smoke detectors, every room has two outlets, a working fire extinguisher and a safe venting system on the furnace," Pat Ball, code inspection officer, said.

The Manhattan guidelines state that housing must be safe, clean, in good repair and not overcrowded.

"We want to make students aware that they have a right to ask for an inspection," Ball said.

"We are especially concerned with students having two independent means of getting out of an apartment in a fire," she said.

The only mandatory inspection on rental properties is a fire inspection for buildings larger than triplexes.

"Some years ago, the issue of community-wide rental inspection was brought up," Edith Stunkel, city commissioner, said.

However, Stunkel said, this was not popular with some landlords.

She said the political compromise was that the Code Inspection Office would make free inspections.

To be sure an apartment is safe, you can look for compliance stickers, which are displayed on rental units that are in compliance with housing codes.

"We want students to look for safe housing and know that you don't have to have a problem to have your apartment or house inspected," Claussen said.

The Safe Housing Week table will be in the Union today from 11:15 to 1:00 p.m.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

K-State votes could mean a lot in Manhattan

Congratulations are in order for 43 students who live on campus.

We commend you for taking time out of your schedules Tuesday to vote.

Unfortunately, there are 292 registered voters on campus who didn't think their vote mattered, and there are countless other students who live on campus who didn't bother to get registered to vote.

Undoubtedly, there were many students who live off-campus who voted, and we commend you, too. But the problem of a majority of students on this campus being apathetic continues.

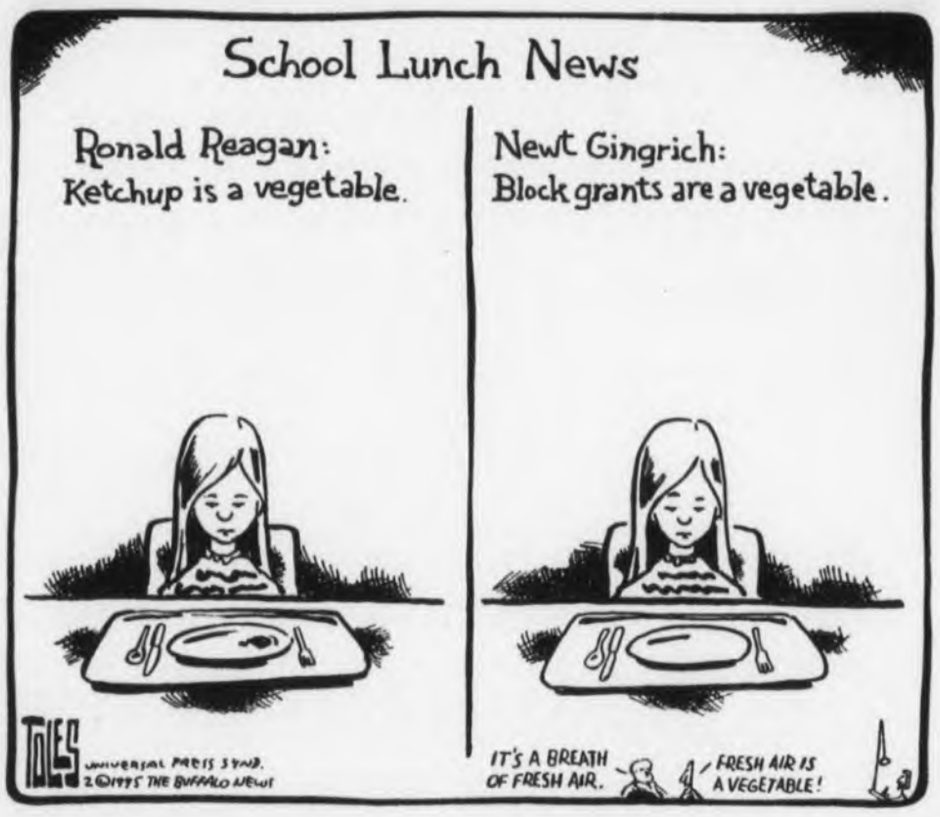
They just don't care what the city commission does, how our tax money collected at the K-State Union is spent or whether the streets surrounding campus are safe to walk home on.

If they cared, they would have voted.

If all 18,660 students voted, we would have the power to accomplish anything in the city of Manhattan.

So those of you who voted, grab a couple of friends, take them to the Union and show them how to register to vote in the Student Governing Association office.

Those of you who are staff in the residence halls: Have a floor function where the whole floor goes and registers to vote.



Leaders in greek houses: Make it a contest to see how many of your members can get registered in Riley County.

And for those who live off campus, take a few moments in between classes to get registered.

The deadline to register for the general election is March 20.

Let's stop the apathetic attitude that pervades this campus and try to make a difference.

BACK TO BACK

Today's topic: cultural relativism

"Back to Back" is a pros-and-cons column by John Hart and Dan Lewerenz that is featured bi-weekly on the Collegian opinion page. The feature represents the opinions of the columnists only.

Objective morality applies to all cultures

What do multiculturalism, diversity and tolerance have in common?

They all stem from the same source, cultural relativism — the mother lode from which various veins of contemporary liberal ideas flow.

In fact, this debate has raged for thousands of years. The idea of relativism has been a prominent force in western thought since the Greeks began to discuss it about 2,400 years ago.

Cultural relativism is the opposite of the belief that moral truth is objective and universal. There is no such thing as absolute right and wrong; right and wrong are merely defined by the moral code of each society. Since there is no objective moral truth that applies to all people at all times, one societal code is not any better than another. Therefore, we should not impose our values on other cultures but instead tolerate differences.

If we accept cultural relativism, we can no longer say that the practices of a culture are wrong, because each culture defines truth for itself.

Cultural relativism is a fancy way of saying that morality is a matter of opinion.

In this case, mass opinion, or culture, defines what is right and wrong.

The theory of cultural relativism might sound appealing at first glance, but further examination shows it to be implausible.

The first problem is that the argument for cultural relativism doesn't make sense logically. Relativists claim that because different cultures disagree about morality, then objective truth must not exist.

In doing so, they ignore the much more likely possibility that one of the parties is simply mistaken.

According to the cultural-relativist argument, if culture A says it is wrong to torture innocent people, but culture B says it is right to torture innocent people, then there can be no objective truth in the matter because the cultures disagree. The person who believes in objective truth has no problem condemning culture B. The cultural-relativist alternative is utter nonsense.

The consequences of taking cultural relativism seriously further undermines whatever credibility it might have left.

If we accept cultural relativism, we can no longer say the practices of a culture are wrong because each culture defines truth for itself.

Nor could we say one culture is superior to another.

This becomes a serious problem when we want to condemn the culture of Nazi Germany for killing millions of Jews.

We also wouldn't want to impose our values on China by criticizing them for crushing the skulls of pro-democracy demonstrators with tanks in Tiananmen Square.

Nor would we want to point our finger at South Africa during the years of apartheid.

The only way to condemn the actions of these cultures is to argue that they have violated an objective standard of moral truth that transcends culture.

Cultural relativism does not allow us that option, for if the majority of South Africans thought apartheid was right, then it was right for that culture, and who are we to judge them?

Accepting cultural relativism would not only prevent us from critiquing other cultures, it also prevents us from critiquing our own culture.

If I were a plantation owner in Alabama during the 1830s, and I wondered if slavery was right or wrong, I would obviously conclude it was right because my culture said it was right.

The issue would be resolved — my culture had spoken.

The final consequence of taking cultural relativism seriously is that the idea of social progress is called into doubt.

If truth is nothing more than what a culture says it is, then why should we improve anything?

The basic impetus for social reform is that our culture is somehow failing according to an objective moral standard and should be improved.

With slavery, for example, people were committed to ending it because it was objectively evil. Martin Luther King Jr. was committed to fighting racism because he believed it was objectively evil as well.

The idea of relativism is very old, but it is also very wrong. Instead of blindly accepting a popular idea, relativists should be honest about the fact that their standard of morality just doesn't make sense.

Dan's response

Truth can be kind of like a social disease. We hear about it when we grow up. We know the effects it can have.

At some point, most people think they have it (and some actually do).

But eventually, most come to realize that it's not quite what they had thought.

It's the people who keep on thinking they have something they don't who continually cause problems.

Condemning the Nazis does not require some objective moral standard. It can quite easily be done by demonstrating inconsistencies within the beliefs that spurred the Holocaust.

The Jews were made into scapegoats. Victims of religious oppression for centuries, they made easy targets for a regime looking for enemies. Once Jews were blamed for losing World War I, Nazi "scientists" proceeded to "prove" that Jews were genetically inferior, thus worth removing from society.

Although this played on the prejudices of the German people, leading many to accept what was being done, such cannot be linked to the morality of German culture. Rather, it was the result of lie upon lie perpetuated by a regime painting pictures.

Pictures in black and white.

Pictures which established an "objective" morality the world should adhere to.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

Morality relative to each culture

America has a problem, and it's one that we probably won't ever fact up to.

It's not unique to Americans, so I suppose we're not any worse off than anyone else. But we do have a responsibility to deal with it.

Americans always think they're right.

And in Western thought, with its tendency to place things within a dichotomous framework, that idea has a counterpart — everyone else is always wrong.

There are those who question these assumptions. They ask whether things must always be right or wrong, or if there might be shades of gray. They question whether being the most powerful nation on earth gives us moral authority. They wonder whether their belief in a God and a religion and a moral code necessarily imply universality.

And they are a threat to those who fail to ask.

We exist within a culture that says right and wrong are absolutes. We have a predominant religion and a predominant political ideology within this culture, and we grant those institutions moral authority.

But that doesn't mean we are right.

This is the question raised in the debate over cultural relativism and objective morality.

For example, a cultural relativist might believe that infanticide is not necessarily a bad thing.

How can this be? Children are the most precious members of our society. No one questions their right to live and play and love like everyone else.

But our society has the means to provide for our children (though unfortunately we don't always come through). Others aren't so fortunate.

Among many "primitive" cultures, the material means (food, shelter, etc.) to sustain population growth might not exist. To prevent the entire village (or tribe or culture or whatever) from starving, unwanted pregnancies are terminated, and children that cannot be supported are allowed to die.

But if some modern-day Moses came down from the mountain today with news that God prefers socialism over capitalism and doesn't eat red meat, how many Americans would listen?

Is this wrong? In Manhattan, Kansas, yes. In the heart of the Amazon rain forest, maybe not.

But suppose for a minute that there is an "objective" moral truth, one that applies to all people in all cultures.

Who's to say that it isn't Yanomami morality that's correct? Or Muslim morality? Or some standard that no one has discovered and everyone is violating every day of their lives?

Claiming that there is an objective moral standard is fine, as long as it's the one you subscribe to. But if some modern-day Moses came down from the mountain today with news that God prefers socialism over capitalism and doesn't eat red meat, how many Americans would listen?

The idea that there may not be an objective morality, or that such morality might not be what our culture thinks it is, is dangerous to some. There are people who are empowered by their sense of righteousness, and any challenge to the "right" part of that notion is an affront to their entire conceptual framework.

And so we are stuck in a world where almost everyone has their own "objective" moral standard. And we all know that we are right and everyone else is wrong.

In this world, how are we to interact? Do we tell everyone else that they're wrong and try to change them? Or do we just patronize them, let them think they're right and talk with our friends about how they'll burn in hell?

We don't live in the Kalahari Desert and can't fully understand the circumstances surrounding the lives of the people who do live there. So we can't impose our standard of morality on them.

In a world of differing opinions, the idea that others might have a legitimate basis for their beliefs is a must. Not only to ensure tranquility among disputing parties, but to afford the respect that all people deserve.

And if there is one moral standard that we may apply to all, it would consist of two statements. "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," and "Mean people suck."

John's response

A common mistake relativists make, especially politically correct relativists, is that people who believe in objective truth believe America is always right. This is simply not the case. America is often wrong and should be corrected in light of the objective moral standard we're violating, as in the cases of slavery and racism. It's important to note that since objective truth transcends culture, no single culture can have a monopoly on truth.

Who's to say that it isn't the Yanomami morality that's correct? Or Muslim morality? Or Nazi Germany morality? Or South African apartheid morality? Or Rwandan morality?

Well, some of these cultures are more wrong than others because it's wrong to kill several million Jews, for example. The point relativists won't face is that they can't say the Holocaust was wrong, for to do so would appeal to objective morality and contradict their position.

There are gray areas in life, but some issues are much darker and lighter than others. For example, where's the gray area when asking if it's OK to rape and sexually abuse a 5-year-old girl? What if an entire culture practiced this? Would that make it right?

We can call a moral choice objectively right when the weight of reason is behind it. For example, the weight of reason is much more behind the belief that the earth is round than that it is flat. Therefore, it is objectively true that the earth is round.

Similarly, the weight of reason is much more behind objective morality than relativism. The underdeveloped, random, and contradictory arguments of relativists attest to this fact. Universal, objective statements like "Do unto to others as you would have them do unto you" — spoken by Jesus, and "Mean people suck" contradict relativism, but are, nonetheless, good places to start in discerning objective truth.

Planning a wedding while MAKING THE GRADE

Finding time is a challenging effort for students who plan weddings while attending school.

Attending school, job interviews, student teaching and planning a wedding all at the same time could bring stress to anyone's life.

"Every extra minute I get, I think about things that need to be done for the wedding," Sheila Jeffers, senior in elementary education, said.

Jeffers and her fiancé, Lee Mueller, a 1994 K-State graduate, are planning their wedding while they are more than two hours apart.

"Lee has been very supportive of our wedding plans while I am away at college," she said.

Mueller is working as a travel agent in Hiawatha where the two will be married in July.

Jeffers is student teaching at Ogden.

"Time is scarce when you have commitments of student teaching, interviewing for jobs, being in a sorority and in various organizations such as Education Council," she said.

Jeffers said her fiancé is also helping out with the plans.

"He called the DJ and photographer and booked the church and reception hall for me," Jeffers said. "We decided together, and he made the arrangements.

"I go home every week possible," Jeffers said. "We try to make the most of the weekends by spending quality time together making wedding plans."

Like Jeffers, Kathy Kippes, senior in elementary education, is planning her wedding while going to school, student teaching and with her fiancé away.

"I wouldn't suggest planning your wedding with your fiancé more than 1,000 miles away," she said.

Kippes fiancé, Mike Ricke, a 1994 graduate in civil engineering, is working in Louisiana.

Kippes sister, Tammi, is also getting married this year.

"You have to manage your time effectively," Tammi Kippes, senior in elementary education, said. "It is hectic and hard."

The Kippeses are from Victoria, which is a little more than two hours from Manhattan.

"You learn to make good use of your breaks," Tammi said. "I did a lot of planning over the summer and plan to do more over spring break."

> "Girls today don't have time to cut through the red tape."
> JOLANA MONTGOMERY-MATNEY
> Bridal consultant in the Junction City -Manhattan area

Her roommate, Holly Marr, a senior in elementary education, is also getting married this summer.

"It is easier for Holly because she is getting married in Manhattan and is from Manhattan," Tammi said.

Tim Kessen, senior in animal science and industry, said he thought it would be easier on his fiancée, Shelly Fogle, junior in agricultural journalism, if she were not going to school.

"I go with what she wants," Kessen said. "I am really easy to get along with."

Like Fogle, T.A. Hays, sophomore in animal science and industry, and his fiancée, Jennifer Baugher, sophomore in special education, will continue to attend K-State after they are married.

"I think it will be easier being married," Hays said. "I'll be settled down more — I'll have more time to study."

Hays and Baugher have been engaged for more than a year.

"Don't stretch it out," Hays said. "It can be done quick.

"I have friends that got engaged and were married in four months."

Michelle Leseberg, sophomore in early childhood education, is also getting married this summer.

"The hardest part of planning the wedding is finding time to go home on weekends," Leseberg said.

Leseberg and her fiancé got an early start on planning their wedding.

"I couldn't imagine waiting till the last couple of months and try to plan," she said. "That would be very stressful."

Krista Keever, senior in elementary education, is making plans for her wedding this summer also.

Keever is planning to be married in Topeka.

"It is hard getting together in Topeka and planning," she said. "My parents have moved and are no longer in the Topeka area."

Student brides-to-be spend a lot of time trying to find that perfect place to have the reception, hiring the florists with the best deal and booking the perfect photographer.

"You have to be flexible," Keever said. "Don't be set on one thing. And the farther in advance you plan, the better off you are."

Some find it helpful to include a bridal consultant in the planning of their wedding.

Jolana Montgomery-Matney is a bridal consultant in the Junction City-Manhattan area.

Montgomery-Matney said there are ways to facilitate planning a wedding.

"Girls today don't have time to cut through the red tape," she said.

Wedding consultants specialize in reference services or total coordination of every aspect of the wedding.

"After setting your wedding budget, it is smart to save time and money by finding someone that can help you," she said.

"By getting a bridal consultant, you can save a whole bunch of headache," she said.

Karen Miller is Manhattan's Dillard's Department Store's bridal consultant.

"I register brides for wedding gifts," Miller said. "I work with them and help them pick out their gift items."

Their preferences are listed in a nationwide database available at more than 230 Dillard's stores.

Miller said couples should register at least three months before the wedding.

"Brides should have a wedding planner and plan ahead of time," Miller said. "If they wait till the last minute, they are shortchanging themselves."

The 1990s have brought a different approach to wedding planning, and today, students don't have a lot of extra time to plan their special day.

"Everything has been put on hold till I graduate," Kathy Kipper said. "Student teaching has to come first."

Students who plan weddings and attend school face the hardships of classes and homework. In addition to class, finalizing details of a wedding day can make extra stress for students.

March brings long-awaited Cats victory over Nebraska

K-State 75
Huskers 73

"We were 0 for February, so maybe March is going to be a little bit better for us."

TOM ASBURY
K--State basketball coach

TODD STEWART
Collegian

As a new page on the calendar was turned over Wednesday, the K-State basketball team decided to make a fresh start.

"We were 0 for February, so maybe March is going to go a little bit better for us," Wildcat coach Tom Asbury said.

The 75-73 victory over the Nebraska Cornhuskers in Bramlage Coliseum ended a six-game losing streak for the Cats that dated back to Jan. 25.

The Wildcats also got revenge after an earlier 22-point loss to the Cornhuskers in Lincoln, Neb.

Behind a career-high 31-point outburst from senior forward Belvis Noland, the Cats improved their record to 12-13 on the year, 3-10 in the Big Eight.

Nebraska dropped to 17-11 and 4-9 in Big Eight play.

Cornhusker coach Danny Nee said the Cats' shooting from three-point range was the difference.

"They shot 56 percent. That's a great percentage," Nee said. "The three-point shot was the difference in the ballgame."

For the game, the Cats made nine of their 16 attempts from behind the arc, including six of nine by Noland.

Noland, who has been inserted into the starting line-up because of an injury to senior forward Demond Davis, started his scoring early and often.

In the first five minutes of the game, Noland scored all 13 of the Cats' points.

After the early run by Noland, Nebraska came right back and had the Cats down 26-17 until a three-point bomb by junior guard Elliot Hatcher at the 6:04 mark.

Hatcher's three-pointer resurrected the slumping Cats, and the Cornhuskers' 11-point lead was down to three by halftime.

Asbury said making a dent in the Nebraska lead by halftime was a big momentum-builder for the Cats.

"That was huge because we kind of got our composure back," Asbury said.

The teams battled back and forth for the first 12 minutes of the second half before the Cats tied the game up at 57.

Nee said K-State's zone defense caused his team problems during that stretch.

"That was the first zone defense we've seen all season," Nee said. "We weren't comfortable against it all night because we haven't seen it."

Asbury agreed that Nebraska's unfamiliarity with the zone defense was key.

"Sometimes teams that have great perimeter shooting, everyone's afraid to zone, so they don't ever see zone," Asbury said. "So sometimes those are the kinds of teams that every now and then you just ought to go in there and see if it'll work."

With the Cat defense working well against the Cornhusker offense, Hatcher and junior forward Tyrone Davis stepped up on the offensive end to help the hot-shooting Noland.

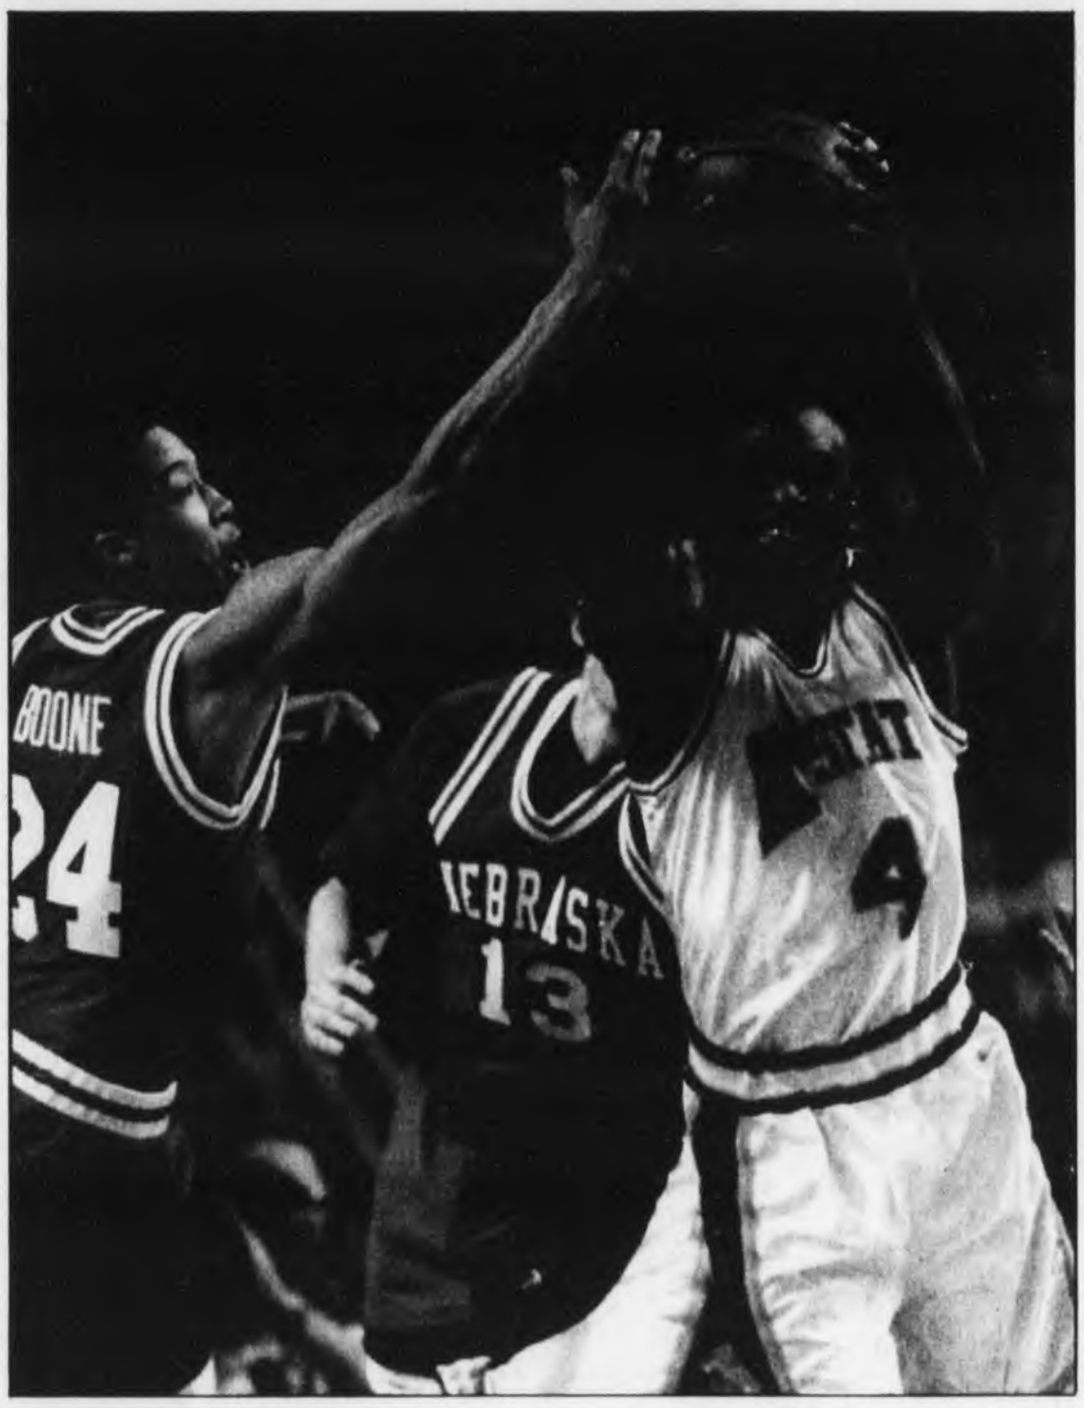
Davis scored 12 in the second half, and Hatcher added 11 of his own.

It was Hatcher's three-pointer at the 7:24 mark that gave the Cats their first lead of the second half.

K-State would never trail again.

Hatcher's four free throws in the final 35 seconds of the game sealed the Cat victory.

Cornhusker junior guard Jaron Boone lead the Nebraska cause with 26 points.



Up next for the Cats is a Saturday afternoon battle with the Colorado Buffaloes.

The winner will stay out of the conference cellar.

With the upcoming Big Eight Tournament and Colorado this weekend, Asbury said this victory was a necessity.

"We certainly needed a win," he said.

"We need another one on Saturday."

K-State forward Belvis Noland goes up for two of his career-high 31 points in the Cats' 75-73 victory at Bramlage Coliseum Wednesday night.

Noland explodes against NU

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Belvis Noland finally got to smile.

After suffering through an 11-13 season, the 6-foot 3-inch senior exploded for a career-high 31 points in K-State's 75-73 victory over Nebraska Wednesday.

"Yeah, for the first time in a long time," Noland said, "I had a little fun tonight — just a little bit."

Sounds like Noland had more than just a little fun with the Nebraska defense, and his stats reflect that.

Twelve out of 20 from the field, six of nine from three-point range, three steals and four rebounds.

"I think they did a pretty job trying at least," Noland said about how the Huskers defended him.

"I'm not saying that they didn't. I just had one of those games."

It didn't take long for Noland to catch fire from the field; he jumped right out of the gate and scored the Wildcats' first 13 points.

"I felt pretty good tonight coming into the game," Noland said. "I just felt like tonight is going to be one of those nights. I hit my first couple of shots, and I just wanted the ball more."

Included in Noland's 13-point tear was a four-point play, which occurred when Nebraska's Terrance Badgett fouled him after he sank a three-pointer. The following free throw capped the four-point play.

Noland didn't stop from there. By the end of the first half, he had tallied 20 points. In fact, at the half, Noland had out-scored the rest of the K-State team 20-14.

"I think tonight I used my screens really well tonight," Noland said.

Even with Noland's hot-shooting hand, the Cats were down by as many as eight points with 10 minutes left in the second half.

Enter Noland again.

As the Cats needed a spark to comeback, he stepped up and canned two three-pointers and nailed a leaning jumper. This gave K-State a lead that it would never give up.

"I didn't come out in the second half looking for a shot," Noland said. "It just came to me."

Noland's hot shooting impressed Nebraska's Erick Strickland.

"There's not much we can do. We did a pretty good job," Strickland said.

"It seems like everybody wants to have a career day against Nebraska."

K-State signs 3 high-school recruits

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

K-State has three new spikers.

The K-State volleyball team has signed three recruits to next fall's squad.

Signing letters of intent were Valerie Wieck and Linsey Luther, both of Grand Island, Neb., and Kim Zschau of Dunedin, Fla.

K-State coach Jim Moore said Wieck is the big catch.

"She was the primary one we were after," Moore said.

"We're excited she has signed with us."

Wieck's high-school career is the reason for this excitement.

She has been on the Grand Island Central Catholic high-school varsity volleyball team since the halfway point of her freshman year.

She has school records in ace blocks in a match (23), blocks in a season (201) and ace blocks in a season (81).

The 6-foot, 1-inch middle blocker's performances haven't gone unnoticed.

Wieck, who picked K-State over the University of Illinois, is listed in the Midwest Recruiting Report Magazine and is a member of the first-team all-state squad during her junior and senior years of high school.

"It's hard to judge. They have tremendous potential — but its up to them what is done with it."

JIM MOORE
K-State volleyball coach

Moore said Wieck has a lot of potential.

"She's quick. She's fast, and she's strong," Moore said.

"She may be one of the top middle blockers in the country."

Moore said he is considering redshirting Luther, who is a teammate of Wieck, next year.

"Nothing is set in stone, but that is our plan right now," Moore said.

Moore said he is redshirting Luther because she has been a middle blocker for most of her volleyball career, and he plans on making her a setter.

"She has tremendous ability in being a setter," he said. "She has a huge amount of untapped ability."

Moore said the process of changing an individual's position takes some time.

"It's like bringing in a defensive back and making him a quarterback," he said.

Moore said Zschau, a 6'2" middle setter from Clearwater Central Catholic High School, wasn't recruited by too many other schools.

"She's a kid that has been overlooked by other schools," Moore said.

Even though Zschau wasn't coveted by many schools, Moore said he thinks she could help the Cats as soon as next year.

"I think she could be a potential starter for us," Moore said.

The 1994 Class B State Player of the Year picked K-State over Florida State, Furman and South Florida.

After only signing one player last signing period due to the late hiring of a volleyball coach, Moore said this class is one that helps the Cats in some areas, but there are still things that need to be addressed.

"It's hard to judge. We still have a ways to go. They have tremendous potential — but it's up to them what is done with it," Moore said.

▶ SNYDER ANNOUNCES PROMOTIONS ON THE FOOTBALL STAFF

K-State football coach Bill Snyder announced the promotion of Bob Stoops to assistant head coach and Bruce Van De Velde to associate athletic director for football operations.

Stoops, who just completed his sixth year on the K-State staff, will continue in his current capacity as co-defensive coordinator and secondary coach while assuming the increased role as assistant head coach.

"Bob has been with us since we arrived at K-State in 1989 and has contributed heavily to the success and development of this program," Snyder said.

"Obviously, he's very deserving of this promotion."

Van De Velde is completing his third year on the K-State staff, where he oversees the daily administrative functions of the football program, including the budget, team travel, housing, training table, financial aid and facilities. He will continue in that capacity under the new title of associate athletic director.

"Bruce is a diligent administrator who has been an important part of this program's development," Snyder said. "His attention to detail in our day-to-day operations have made him very deserving of this promotion."

Reader needs to study more history

Dear Cassie,

We have Black History Month, when we celebrate such criminals and terrorists as Malcolm X who supported the genocide of all whites.

Why don't we have a White History Month, when we can celebrate such great Americans as Robert E. Lee, Jefferson Davis, John Wilkes Booth and David Duke?

Signed,
Equal Time

Dear Equal Time,

Whoever you are, you are an ignorant and ridiculous human being if you don't see how stupid, insensitive and feeble-minded that question was.

I want you to understand the only reason I gave ink to a crack like you is so I can show all of my readers what the work of a person who is a complete waste of skin sounds like.

Signed,
Cassandra

▶ COLUMN

K-State needs more liberals, more hep-cats

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Because this campus is so conservative and uptight (remember the Farrell Library wall scandal? Shocking!), I feel this column will aid in turning this into a real live liberal university.

There are many ways of going about becoming an artsy, underground-poetic beatnik, but our school obviously hasn't picked up on them.

So, for all you squares who yearn to be the cat's meow, let's talk.

First of all, no more inside-out sweatshirts. It wasn't cool in 1986, and it sure as hell isn't cool now. That goes doubly for the "I-wanna-be-preppy" tie, suit and logo outfit.

Second, if I see another Joey Lawrence-inspired coat and/or sweater tied around your waist or neck, I will throw things at you.

Now, that brings us to ways of making ourselves hep-catish. Learn about coffee. Drink espresso, cappuccino and caffe latte/mocha etc., until your roommate is Juan Valdez. This instantly makes you a swinger, or at least misunderstood.

It also helps to be an artist. Try collage with your old magazines. It's cheap and easy to get started, and hey, you're an artist.

If you can write (if you can't, that's minus 25 hip points), try getting your own column in the Collegian or a magazine of literary value.

When in doubt, stick to non-colors for your wardrobe. I consider non-colors to be shades of brown, khaki, white and the ultimate chic color, black. If you can shop at the Gap, please do so. But don't tell anyone you bought your clothes there. Say you picked them up in a vintage clothing shop that is run by a couple of drunken writers.

If you really want all the attention and glory that comes with being tragic, explain that you have very recently considered moving to Prague, Czechoslovakia, in order to fulfill your inner soul's desires of being a gypsy (this always works for me). Just don't tell them the reason you can't go is because your parents in Wichita are making you mow lawns all summer to pay for your trip to Grandma's in Boise, Idaho.

You don't necessarily have to smoke to be misunderstood. A good mustache (men only) or a Ethan Hawke-ish pair of sunglasses can make a statement just as well. Try body piercing. Though not in your ear, silly.

Oh, and one more thing, be careful what you talk about. Sure, anyone can talk about poetry (which a distinguished source has told me is pronounced "poultry").

If you at least attempt one of these suggestions, I will be so proud.

Just imagine — someday the hallowed halls will be filled to the brim with sandals, turtlenecks, berets and lots of twenty-somethings spouting off about how damned liberal this campus is.

Resident petition helped open door was getting so many complaints about how it was such a pain and an inconvenience," Ratliff, senior in social science, said.

Eisele said this is the fourth time a vote has been taken about whether to keep the doors locked 24 hours. In addition, a petition with 240 signatures suggesting the doors should be opened was brought to a hall meeting.

Nick Aberle, ninth-floor president, said the 24-hour policy was in need of change.

"The residents on my floor pretty much hate the doors being locked all the time. I voted for the change because I think this is what residents want, and it's my duty to represent them," Aberle, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

In addition to public opinion, Eisele said the decision to change the current policy was made because of convenience.

Eisele said the Department of Housing and Dining Services originally planned to set up the Validine identification system for the doors that were unattended.

This would include doors in the basement and doors leading to Derby Dining Complex. But residents are still waiting on the Validine system to be installed.

Eisele said he believes the original decision to lock the doors 24 hours was made too quickly.

"We made the decision without thinking about the residents. We should have waited until the Validine system was already installed," Eisele said.

Mark Anderson, freshman in elementary education and Haymaker resident, said he likes the new open-door policy.

"I think it's a lot easier for the residents. We all lock our room doors when we leave, so we feel safe. I don't think the main doors need to be locked too," Anderson said.

Eisele said more people than just residents will be happy with the policy.

"I know that friends, girlfriends, the mailman and the pizza guy are thrilled about this. Not everyone may be happy, but I think the majority of people are," Eisele said.

DUI arrests increase

He said the number of DUI arrests has increased 24.9 percent since 1993.

French said there were 477 arrests for DUIs in 1994 and only 382 arrests in 1993. This increase in arrests is a reflection of the police's interest in keeping drunken drivers off the road, French said.

French gave credit to local businesses for their efforts in assisting the designated-driver program, noting local businesses that give designated drivers free non-alcoholic drinks.

"All the taverns in Aggieville push that the designated driver drinks for free," he said.

Capt. Nick Edvy said the DUIs resulting in arrests contribute to the overcrowding of the jails, especially on the weekends.

"We have a significant increase in the total amount of prisoners," he said.

Edvy said the jail may have as many as 44 prisoners on a given day. However, the maximum number of prisoners is supposed to be 19.

Edvy said the overcrowding is not just a problem of space. It is also a problem for the staff.

The jail is not staffed with enough workers to handle the current number of people, he said.

Riley County hopes to be building a larger jail in the future.

Gardening can help healing process and that there is something bigger out there," she said.

There has been enough research to support that gardening makes blood pressure go down and people heal better, Harvey said.

A lot of hospitals are putting in gardens because of the effect it has on the healing process, she said.

"I strongly believe the physical part of gardening is almost mysterious — something happens," Harvey said.

Luretta Filberth, activities director for the St. Joseph Senior Community, said the residents are more talkative since participating in the activities.

"Before, they would only speak a few words, but now they are talking about the gardens they used to have and the things they used to grow," she said.

St. Joseph started a garden last year and plans on continuing it this year.

Filberth said at first the residents didn't want to get their hands dirty, and last year she did most of the labor. But this year, she said she thinks they will become more involved and do more of the work.

"They really enjoy the program, and I am really happy with it," Filberth said.

She said she tried to start a similar program herself but wasn't successful at getting the residents involved.

"Dr. Mattson and the students do a wonderful job of getting them involved," she said.

Mattson said besides the pre-interning students, student volunteers are also used in the programs, and sometimes students visiting K-State serve as assistants in the activities.

"I believe it is important that the University is part of the community and volunteers services," Mattson said.

This is an opportunity to give back to the community, he said.

The children lack a lot of social contact, and horticulture therapy can serve as a bright spot in their day, Mattson said.

"They know they can count on us to come and do something with them," he said.

An additional program directed by the horticultural therapy students and Mattson is the Manhattan Community Garden, located on Eighth Street and Riley Lane.

The garden usually begins in late March and continues through October, Mattson said. It involves Manhattan children who collect all the produce from the garden and also have their own individual plots.

The garden usually involves 25 to 30 children ranging in ages from 5 to 12, and no fee is required, he said.

Callers work, have fun

the Telefund were asked at the beginning of each night how many were first-time callers.

"We have about 80 percent of the callers being first-time callers. They are really nervous and act as if they are going to the dentist, but by the end of the night, they are having fun," Dowell said.

Students participating in the Telefund said they had a sense of obligation about the Telefund.

"I should be doing this, because I have a scholarship," Heidi Bielenberg, freshman in environmental design, said. "It is a lot of fun. If someone else hadn't have done this, I wouldn't be here. But I could really use the car."

One of the main reasons for the Telefund is to provide student scholarships.

"There is never a surplus of scholarships, so this project is incredibly important," Dowell said.

Other students can receive jobs, internships and career tips from alumni in the job market.

Robert Wheeler, senior in landscape architecture, said he got to talk to a friend who used to go to K-State, and he was reassured that there were jobs available, so his education was going to be useful to him when he graduated.

Dowell said they are always trying to update the Telefund.

"We used to have the Telefund in Union 213, but now we have 80 telephones," Dowell said.

The room in the K-State Union was small and only allowed for a limited amount of phones, Dowell said. The Hollis Telefund Center is also bigger and brighter than the Union.

This year, the telephones were updated to use headsets.

Source of calls not known

Motaz said the calls that have been reported to his office have all been made within the last month. The last one was made two days ago, and it was reported to the police Monday.

Herrman said he cannot make any connection between the calls because only one of them was reported.

There is a possibility that there could be more harassing phone calls made, Motaz said.

"We don't want to blow this out of proportion, but we do want to make other students aware that they could get these calls," he said.

Herrman said if anyone gets any kind of prank phone call, they should report it to the police immediately.

"It is a crime. We do follow up on the calls if they are continuous to the point where we can put a tap on the phone line," he said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

▶ BOARD OF REGENTS

State schools may lose $6 million

ANGIE STUMP
Collegian

Fewer class sections, faculty positions left open, higher tuition and less equipment may be the future of K-State and the other regent schools.

A House bill that would cut the Kansas Board of Regents general-use budget by $6 million was sent back to committee Wednesday night for further review.

"It would be a cut to the base budget that we will experience throughout the system," Stephen Jordan, executive director for the regents, said.

He said cutting the budget could cause various consequences at the six regent schools.

"Possibly, fewer class sections will be available," he said. "How it manifests will depend on the institution. It could cause further cuts in operating expenses and the curtailing of equipment expenses."

The bill will be reviewed by the committee and probably sent back to the House, Laura Howard, of the legislative research department, said.

If it passes in the House, it will go to the Senate Ways and Means Committee and then to the Senate floor.

The regents are scheduled to testify at a Ways and Means Committee hearing on Tuesday.

The two main sources of revenue that support higher education in Kansas are tuition and state tax dollars.

"If there is a significant cut in the budget, in reality, it puts pressure to increase tuition," Jeff Peterson, student body president, said.

"The Legislature is interested in cutting taxes for the public. We need to encourage them to invest in higher education with tax dollars to help keep education affordable in the future."

Students can be part of deciding what they will be paying in tuition in the future and what equipment will be available for their use.

"There are a number of things students can do to help," Jordan said. "They can call their hometown legislators or talk to their parents and have them call the legislators and tell them how the cuts will affect higher education."

Student Governing Association is drafting a letter that will be sent to students asking them to write, call or visit their legislators, Peterson said. It will include statistics for them to use in their discussions.

"Right now is the key time to contact legislators," Peterson said. "The message needs to be getting out there that students are concerned — it's rare when they hear from the students, so there is an opportunity now to make a difference in the process."

Russian leader's son focuses on relationships

ANNE HAZLETT
Collegian

Sergei Khrushchev, son of former Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev, joined the K-State faculty as a visiting distinguished professor of history and political science Thursday.

Khrushchev will lecture in various classes at K-State, Manhattan High School, Fort Riley, Fort Leavenworth and Marysville.

During his month-long visit, Khrushchev said he will focus on the transformation of Russia from a centralized to a decentralized economy.

"I came to Kansas to explain how the transformation of Russia is progressing," he said. "What is the reality that the free-market economy will be successful in Russia?"

Khrushchev said he will also discuss the relationship between his father and President Eisenhower.

"I want people to understand the relationship between these two men because they made the first steps to prevent a war between our two countries," he said.

Khrushchev is the editor of his father's memoirs and the author of two books discussing developments in the former Soviet Union. He is a senior researcher for the Watson Institute for Foreign Policy Development at Brown University.

Khrushchev said he also hopes to make people aware of the differences between American and Russian attitudes.

"I want students to understand the differences in the ways of thinking between our countries," he said.

"We are very different, but we are also very similar. It's not that we don't trust each other but that we don't understand each other."

Khrushchev said this is his third visit to Kansas.

"I really like this place," he said. "My first reaction when I came here was it had the same smell of dirt that we have in the Ukraine."

Winner takes Khrushchev

One chosen to be Russian's assistant

CARRIE COX
Collegian

Not everyone gets the chance to work for the topic of their possible dissertation.

But Ed Maier, graduate student in history, has been chosen to be an assistant for Sergei Khrushchev during his next few months in Kansas while gathering information to receive his doctorate.

Maier was chosen from a field of 12 people who applied hoping to become Khrushchev's personal assistant while at K-State. The applicants were selected by a panel of three professors who have Russian-related experience.

"It's an incredible opportunity to work with Khrushchev. This kind of opportunity wouldn't be possible at another university," Maier said.

During Khrushchev's stay, Maier will be assisting him in various ways.

"Mainly, I am here to help him around campus, organize his meetings, plan speech topics and make sure he is in the right place at the right time," Maier said.

Along with these duties, Maier said he will also be a personal assistant for Khrushchev and his wife. Maier said he is available to help the Khrushchevs find their way around town and find a supermarket for grocery shopping.

Maier said he thinks these are the little ways he will get to know Khrushchev better.

"By dealing with him on a day-to-day basis, I will be able to know him so much better. Just by listening to him and the stories he tells, I'd never be able to learn that in a history book."

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium and one of the panel members, said K-State decided to choose an assistant so the Khrushchevs could have someone available for them at any time.

Dale Herspring, head of the political science department, said he knows the benefits from being a personal assistant to Khrushchev are overwhelming.

"It's very hard for someone to come into another country and immediately understand everything without assistance. This is a fantastic opportunity for a student to take advantage of," Herspring said.

Maier said he was shocked to find out he was chosen for the job and knows it will be challenging.

"Dr. Khrushchev falls in so well with what I am studying, and I want to make his experience at K-State as positive as possible," Maier said.

Haymaker fires spark search for evidence

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Recent fires in Haymaker Hall have residents, staff members and the Manhattan Fire Department concerned and searching for answers.

A trash-chute fire, the most recent fire in Haymaker, occurred at 12:56 p.m. Wednesday.

The fire wasn't reported until an hour and a half after it occurred, and by that time the evidence had been removed, Chuck Tannehill, assistant director at the Manhattan Fire Department, said.

"At this point, we haven't been able to say that it was an arson," he said.

Carlin Kennedy, Haymaker resident, said the hallway still smells like smoke from the trash-chute fire.

"I think it's dumb," he said. "I don't think our parents back home would let us set our houses on fire."

Most people don't die from fire itself, but from smoke, Tannehill said.

He said a fire gives off heavy, thick smoke and is very dangerous, especially with all of the material in a structure.

Kennedy said he doesn't think a large number of people are responsible for the fires but that it's a small group that finds it humorous.

An aggravated arson was reported Tuesday night in Haymaker. Two fires were reported in Haymaker in spring 1994, and another one was reported in September 1993.

The trash-chute fire is under investigation, along with the other fires that occurred in Haymaker.

"We're looking for anyone who has any information on any past fires," Tannehill said.

Mateo Remsburg, assistant director of Haymaker, said a few weeks ago Haymaker organized a floor-to-floor presentation about arson conducted by the fire and police departments.

The presentation was conducted in the hope the fires would stop, he said.

"I think it did help a little bit because they showed pictures of previous fires in the hall," Kennedy said.

Equipment fee lowered to $1.90

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Students will be paying $1.90 for equipment next semester for the Collegian and Royal Purple.

Student Senate voted on this figure Thursday night after three separate considerations of the fee bill.

The Student Publications Equipment Fee is currently $3.90 per semester. This fee was to purchase a new computer system in 1991.

The Privileged Fee Committee recommended that this fee be reduced to $1.60 for maintenance and upgrade of computer equipment. This recommendation was raised to $1.90 in committee.

Senate voted to set the fee at $1.90. Bill Muir, faculty representative, moved to reconsider the bill, and the motion passed.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, then introduced an amendment to raise the fee to $2. This amendment failed 27-28, with the chair casting the deciding vote.

Bulk of the discussion on the issue came later, when Muir made a motion to amend the bill already passed. This amendment brought the full-time fee back to $2.

Dan Lewerenz, arts and sciences senator, said the additional $7,000 would allow Student Publications Inc. to put out the best paper possible.

Mike Zamrzla, chief of staff, said Senate must draw the line with funding.

"The Collegian will be a good paper with the funds we have allocated, and it could be a great paper," Zamrzla said, "but many groups can make this claim, and we have a limited amount of funds."

Patrick Carney, arts and sciences senator,

USD 383 authorizes 12-percent tax increase to meet budget demands

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

The Manhattan-Odgen USD 383 school board wants to raise local property taxes to rescue the district from its financial crunches.

The six board members present at Wednesday's meeting voted to authorize a 12-percent option-tax increase. The district's current option tax is 3 percent. The board's action could raise the option tax to 15 percent.

The board authorized an increase of 15 percent for the next two years. However, if the board finds it does not need the full increase, it does not have to impose the tax rate at that level.

Superintendent Dan Yunk said under a provision of the state finance law, a district can levy an option tax of up to 25 percent when opening new schools.

This money will be used to fill in the deficits present in the projected budget for the next two years, to provide a 3-percent increase in salaries to keep up with the cost of living, and for technological improvements.

The board also discussed, but did not vote on, implementing more user fees in the district.

These fees, on top of current book-rental costs, could be charged for students to participate in activities, for towel rental, to pay for consumable materials in specialized classes, or for driver's-education classes.

County Clerk Ilene Colbert said Thursday once the district publishes a legal notice in the paper, then citizens have 30 days to file a petition to put the tax to a vote.

If a petition is filed, Colbert said, then the district would want to have a special election within 60 days so they could figure its results into the budget.

Colbert said July 11 is when the district hopes to have the election.

When a special election is non-applicable to the entire county, Colbert said, the group having the election is responsible for the costs.

Colbert said it would cost the district an estimated $12,000 - 15,000 to conduct the election.

Jon Brake, editor of the Manhattan Free Press, spoke to the board at the time for public comment on the tax. He asked the board to put off making its decision.

"It's too quick," he said.

Brake said Thursday he will help draw up a petition against the tax.

The board was asked to make this decision during uncertain times.

Yunk said Wednesday that the district is at the mercy of many variables.

The Kansas Legislature is debating about whether to raise the base per-pupil funds. The per-pupil rate is $3,600 and has not changed for three years.

Although recent reports have indicated Fort Riley will not close this year, it is still uncertain how many students will be removed from the district because of downsizing.

The district, like many other larger districts, is facing financial problems because of its state classi-

▶ STUDENT ORGANIZATION TO PROMOTE INDIAN FOOD, ASIAN CULTURE

The Manhattan community has a chance to experience Asian culture from 5:30 to 9 p.m. Saturday at Manhattan Middle School.

Those attending will first experience the food of Indian culture with a dinner from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

The meal includes Indian spiced chicken, herb rice and fried tortillas, said Poonacha Machaiah, president of the India Students Association. Several types of Indian vegetables and desserts are also on the menu.

The meal is free to members of the India Students Association, Machaiah said. The cost is $6 for non-members.

During the dinner, Indian music will be playing. An exhibition of Indian art will also be displayed.

Entertainment will begin at 7:30 p.m. with performances of traditional Indian dances, Machaiah said.

This includes Indian classical and folk dances.

"There will be a total of nine dances from all regions of India," Machaiah said.

This event gives Indian students a chance to share their culture with other members of the Manhattan community.

Members of the India Students Association prepare the food, and Indian students perform the dances, Machaiah said.

The group organizes two Indian cultural nights each semester, Machaiah said.

The spring event is the largest, with 600 people expected to attend this weekend.

Approximately half the people expected to attend are from India, Machaiah said. Because of this, many of the people will experience a different culture.

"The purpose of this event is to promote cultural diversity and India's rich heritage," Machaiah said.

Machaiah also points out that this evening is a bargain compared to a trip to India.

"If you go to India, you will pay at least $2,000," he said.

▶ 2 KILLED IN FORT RILEY SHOOTING

Two male Fort Riley soldiers were killed and another soldier was wounded in a shooting incident Thursday evening.

The shooting occurred about 5:30 p.m. in the barracks area on Custer Hill.

Greg Binford, media relations officer, said one of the dead soldiers is believed to be the suspect in the incident.

"We can't release any details. The information is sketchy at this time," Binford said.

No military weapon was used in the incident, he said. The military police and criminal investigation division are investigating.

The injured soldier was transported to Irwin Army Community Hospital for treatment. His condition was stable Thursday night. Identification of the soldiers is being withheld until their next of kin have been notified.

▶ FINAL U.N. FORCES LEAVE MOGADISHU

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Guns trained to the rear, U.S. Marines backed out of Somalia Thursday with the remnants of a multinational force that fed starving thousands but failed to conquer chaos.

The Marines escorted the final U.N. forces from Mogadishu's shores, a quiet end to a two-year intervention that cost $2 billion and the lives of more than 100 peacekeepers.

The move of 1,500 American and 350 Italian marines from a small beach cove back to their ships was expected to take most of the night.

American Marines landed Monday to protect the evacuation of 2,400 Pakistani and Bangladeshi peacekeepers.

These are the last in a multinational force that once totaled 38,000 troops from 21 countries.

▶ GERMAN POLICE CATCH TRADER

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — The gambles of a British trader that led to the collapse of Britain's oldest investment bank caught up with him Thursday.

Nick Leeson was escorted off a flight from Malaysia and detained by German police while authorities waited for an extradition request and arrest warrant accusing him of mishandling money and other charges.

Leeson repeatedly told police he wanted to return to Britain, where his employer, Baring Brothers & Co., was trying to figure out how one man could lose an estimated $1 billion and bring down the 232-year-old bank in a matter of weeks.

In its first comment on the case, Singapore's fraud squad said Thursday it was investigating a complaint by Baring Futures that the 28-year-old Leeson "committed offenses of forgery."

▶ INTERACTIVE MEDIA PROGRAM SERIES TO PREPARE STUDENTS FOR JOBS

Students at K-State have the opportunity to gain firsthand knowledge about visual-medium computer programs today.

Students can hear the president of The Digital Village, an instructor at the Kansas City Art Institute and other students speak starting at 10:10 a.m. in the Willard Art Gallery.

Bob Hower, associate professor in art, said it is important to be aware of happenings in industry and art.

"We have to prepare students for jobs," Hower said.

The series will start with a student presentation of an interactive media compact-disc program.

The students have been working on the Mesa Verde National Park Educational Program's "The Fossil Life of the National Parks" CD.

The program is an interactive media program for fourth-grade students, Hower said.

Other speakers will be discussing interactive projects for the industry.

1st Big 12 conference opens communication

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

The first Big Twelve Student Leadership Conference will be at K-State today, Saturday and Sunday.

"It's very exciting," said Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator and co-director of the conference.

The Big Twelve Conference schools include Texas Tech, Texas A&M, Baylor, Texas and the Big Eight Conference schools.

It is the first time anyone has been able to bring the student body presidents from the Big Twelve schools together, he said.

Aubrey Abbot, senate intern, said Henry and Brandon Clark, former arts and sciences senator, each put in a bid for the conference last year.

Each school was allowed to bring four delegates, including the student body presidents, vice presidents, senate chairs, vice-chairs, finance officers and other officers from each of the Big Twelve schools.

Henry said one of the main purposes of the conference is to talk about important issues on the campuses and how the schools' student governments are addressing those issues.

"One of the big pushes of the student body presidents is to discuss the cuts being made in Washington," Henry said.

Henry said the student body presidents would be drafting a letter to the congressional leaders from each state to ask for proposed cuts in federal scholarship money to be reverted to the Pell Grant program for students with need.

Among the other topics are multicultural involvement in student activities, relations between student government and administration, ethical decision-making, student effects on national and state legislatures, and changes in leadership.

A special time is set aside each day for student body presidents to meet and discuss issues, and the other officers also get the same opportunity. Students with the same campus office will therefore be given three opportunities to discuss ideas and campus issues in small groups, Abbot said.

The state delegations, such as the four Texas schools, will also be able to talk about issues facing them in their state legislatures, Henry said.

The delegates will also attend the K-State vs. Colorado game and a dinner Saturday evening with Congressman Sam Brownback.

"This is pretty much the first event, student-wise, in the Big Twelve Conference," Henry said.

He said he hoped the leadership conference would help build a strong student-to-student tie in the Big Twelve.

Henry said some critics thought the athletics would be the strongest aspect of the conference, but some of the schools in the new conference have had more scholars individually than other conferences have had as a whole.

Stress relieved through aikido

COBY HESS
Collegian

Aikido is a martial art that stresses relaxation instead of confrontation.

The K-State Aikido Club gave a demonstration at the K-State Union Courtyard Thursday as part of Asian American Awareness Month.

Aikido is a classical Japanese martial art developed in the early part of this century.

"Aikido is not a technique to fight with or defeat the enemy. It is the way to reconcile the world and make human beings one family," Morihei Ueshiba, founder of K-State's Aikido Club, said.

Scott Sowers, graduate student in math and member of the club, said he uses aikido to relax.

"It is a good chance to clear everything out and exercise for purposes beyond that of just getting a workout," he said.

Jack Hayes, K-State aikido instructor, said it helps his spiritual life, too.

"For me, aikido is the highest level of ethics that represents a good mental and spiritual model for everyday life," he said.

Jayne Thompson, K-State aikido instructor, said aikido is a way of life for her.

"It enhances my life physically and mentally. It ties in with all of the fears and hesitations I have, and these conflicts come out on the mat," she said.

Hayes explained more about aikido during the demonstration.

"In aikido, we never clash with an attacker head-on. Instead, we use evasive, circular movements that we blend with the attack, leading the attacker into a variety of throws or joint-locking techniques," he said.

Thompson said aikido is about conflict and resolution.

"Whether it is physical or verbal, it allows you to think clearly when tempers and anger are involved," she said.

Sowers said aikido class is a great stress-reliever.

"I may go to class in a bad mood, but I always come out in a good mood," he said.

Aikido can be practiced by anyone because it uses the attacker's size and strength against them.

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

While visiting K-State, Scott Thompson gets a free aikido lesson from instructor Jayne Thompson of the KSU Aikido Club Thursday afternoon at the Union Courtyard. The aikido club was giving demonstrations for Asian American Awareness Month.

65-35 vote defeats balanced-budget bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Senate defeated the balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution Thursday.

The amendment is the cornerstone of a broader Republican drive to cut spending and shrink government.

Both sides sought instant political advantage.

The 65-35 vote that left the amendment just shy of the needed two-thirds majority followed Democratic accusations that the Republicans were threatening Social Security, a charge Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole denied.

At the White House, President Clinton challenged GOP leaders in Congress to detail how they are going to keep the promises of their Contract With America on balancing the budget and paying for their tax cuts.

Fifty-one Republicans and 14 Democrats voted for the amendment, while 33 Democrats and two Republicans, Mark Hatfield of Oregon and Dole, voted no.

Dole is a firm supporter, and his vote, after one final, futile attempt to sway Hatfield, was a parliamentary maneuver that kept the measure alive for another possible vote during the 1996 election season. To bring up the amendment again, Dole had to vote with the prevailing side this time.

"Let 'em try," Democratic leader Tom Daschle said defiantly a few hours before the vote.

By opposing the amendment, Daschle said, Democrats were saving Social Security trust funds from deficit cutters.

The amendment is designed to slow the increase of the national debt, which is approaching $5 trillion.

It calls for a balanced budget beginning in the year 2002, unless three-fifths of both houses vote otherwise.

The amendment cleared the GOP-controlled House in January on a vote of 300-132. Republicans had looked to the measure to provide discipline for votes ahead.

"It might make getting what we want to do harder," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M. and chairman of the Budget Committee, shortly after the vote. "For some senators, it might be easier to avoid the tough votes."

Moments before the vote, Dole accused Democrats of playing blatant politics.

Dole said Republicans would soon propose a five-year plan to put the budget on a path toward balance by 2002.

"Our plan will not raise taxes," he said. "Our plan will not touch Social Security."

Daschle said Democrats would gladly join in the deficit-cutting effort.

"It's the Republicans who are in the leadership here," he said. "We want to see what they've got."

When the roll call finally occurred after a month of debate, it was dramatic, yet scripted, because every senator's position was known in advance.

They voted in alphabetical order, rising at their desks by turn to answer the roll.

Aides and House members lined the back of the chamber, and all eyes turned to Hatfield when he rose from his seat on the center aisle to utter the "no" that sealed the measure's fate. Dole and other Republicans sharply attacked six Democrats for voting against the measure after supporting a virtually identical one last year.

In an indication of the measure's popularity, five other senators who face re-election next year — three Democrats and two Republicans — abandoned past opposition to vote in favor.

Don't miss K-State's last basketball game

Even though the season is pretty much over, K-State fans need to continue to show their support.

Saturday afternoon, K-State will close out the 1994-95 regular season against Colorado.

Although it has been a tough season, we think it has been an exciting one under first-year coach Tom Asbury.

Whether it was the wins against the Oklahoma schools or Coach Asbury calling another coach a turd, this season has been one to remember.

But this might be just the beginning. Asbury has brought fire and spirit to the K-State basketball program. It's almost as fun going to a game to see him rant and rave on the sidelines as it is to win.

But it's not just that. He has brought an exciting style of play to the Cats' program. Sure, there are times when the K-State team looks like something the cat dragged in. But there were also games in which the Cats looked unbeatable. Even though the season is pretty much over, K-State fans need to continue to show their support. So grab your purple, bundle up and drive out to Bramlage Coliseum to support the Cats Saturday.

Who knows, maybe Belvis Noland could score 63 points.

Small-scale composting produces big-time results

PAGE GETZ

Your diet may be good for you, but it may be better for the earth. Out of your own backyard, you can spoon-feed the earth from your table scraps and leftovers.

Composting is the natural process of the biodegradation of organic wastes that produce an ideal soil conditioner rich in minerals from the decomposition of food and yard wastes.

A compost can be as simple and effortless as just piling leaves, grass and weeds into a corner of your yard or just scraping your plates into the garden after dinner instead of into the garbage disposal or trash.

With 60 to 70 percent of the compilation of trash at Kramer and Derby food centers consisting exclusively of food waste, both send their production waste to swine farmers, while other efforts have been less supported.

At Van Zile Hall alone, which does not have a composting system, the average student produces 340 pounds of trash a semester just from food waste — the largest component of trash in all of the dining halls.

The Department of Hotel Restaurant Institution Management and Dietetics is involved in a waste stream analysis ascertaining the weight and volume of both production food waste and service waste.

The company's focus is now on alternative methods of incorporating wastes through dehydration and combining proteins to produce a viable film garbage bag.

They are currently looking into modifying both methods.

Outside the residence halls, the average American produces about 1,200 pounds of solid waste every year.

What is sad is that about 70 percent of the garbage Americans send to landfills is compostable material, including paper and wood as well as food and yard waste.

That's 35 billion tons of trash that could be used to replenish the earth that is suffocating in landfills.

Composting makes it easier to separate recyclable wastes as well. One town in California reduced garbage by 50 percent through composting and curbside collection.

Maybe we don't notice on a daily basis how much we each contribute to this massive trash heap the world is becoming, but if we began to separate our trash, we could see how tangible it is to recycle the majority of wastes we each produce.

Let me throw some numbers at you.

As Americans, we throw away enough iron and steel to supply all of the nation's automakers continuously.

The average American family produces about 5,200 pounds of trash a year.

Fourteen billion pounds of trash are dumped into the sea every year.

At the rate we produce garbage, we need 500 new dumps a year.

In your lifetime, you will generate about 600 times your adult weight in garbage.

A few years back, I heard a lot about the significance of the degradation of the environment. It doesn't seem that much has changed except that environmentalism doesn't seem to be as trendy as it was.

As you light a Marlboro, know that 500 million lighters will end up in landfills every year.

One town in California reduced garbage by 50 percent through composting and curbside collection.

As you discard your Dr Pepper can, know that every three months the United States could rebuild our commercial airfleet with the aluminum that continues to go unrecycled. And although it may have taken you 20 minutes to drink, that can be a souvenir for the next 500 years.

As you abandon an inconvenient empty plastic bottle, know that it is only one of the 2.5 million bottles trashed every hour.

If your "Save the Trees" T-shirt isn't quite faddish enough for you, I hope that you at least consider recycling it for a rag or something.

Environmental consciousness may be lacking in popularity these days, but environment pollution and deterioration is definitely still in style, so don't forget to stay "green-conscious."

Instead of tossing those Ramen noodles in the trash, drop them in the backyard.

Maybe a Ramen noodle tree will grow.

Parking Services does good deeds as well

This column is dedicated to all K-State students who have ever been blessed with that magic piece of paper known as a parking citation.

For all present, past and future students and even unborn babies that are destined to receive this gift from our lovely University, this one is for you.

First, I have a confession to make. I am not without motive in writing this column. I have received, to put it nicely, more than one ticket in the past month. I had intended to go discover some sort of blatant scandal down at Parking Services, expose it with all its graphic details and then wait for my Pulitzer Prize for excellence in journalism.

JEREMY STEPHENS

However, after making a trip to the office (in order to pay a ticket), I took it upon myself to speak with the powers-that-be and try to get them to come clean about the conspiracy to ticket me all the days of my life.

They came clean, but to my dismay, there is no conspiracy to report. Although Parking Services issued 19,174 tickets last semester, I only received one of them. The term "services" isn't misleading either. Although they don't assist students in backing out of parking stalls, they will change tires, jump dead batteries, open cars with locked-in keys and call wreckers for free. The Riley County police will charge you.

In an extremely unscientific poll I conducted, which incidentally had about the same response that the parking survey did last semester, it appeared that most people think that Parking Services is to blame for all the parking problems on campus, the proposal to place the garage in Memorial Stadium and civil unrest in most Third World countries.

However, according to the Parking Control Supervisor (a K-State graduate), Parking Services is only the enforcement and record-keeping branch of the policy-making Parking Council. Parking Services has one vote on the Council — the director of Parking and Fire Safety, Dwain Archer.

In an era when blame is passed out like coupon books from radio stations, don't forget the council makes the policies. Incidentally, it is also largely composed of student senators, so if you want to do something, find one of them and express yourself at least half as well as when you discover you've been ticketed.

This brings up the subject of how Parking Services operates. Ticketers are not paid on commission but receive hourly pay, starting at minimum wage. They have no quotas and receive no special favors if they are ticketed. Applicants are given a background check to prevent those who have more tickets than they should from getting hired.

This process is almost as good as privatizing the whole system, but then again, this is America.

The parking problems that this campus must deal with have received much attention, especially after the powers-that-be proposed building a parking garage in Memorial Stadium. While this idea defies logic by placing more parking right next to one of the biggest parking lots available and locating it at an extreme end of campus, it is also far from an example of fiscal effectiveness.

According to an official with Parking Services, the garage is projected to cost between $12 million and $14 million, of which $4-5 million will be spent on cosmetics to make it match the design of the stadium.

Who are we trying to kid here? Cost does not mean quality. Just look at Denver's new airport.

Other ideas for improving the parking situation are raising permit prices for lots closer to campus, starting a shuttle service, reducing the number of reserved stalls and adding pre-fabricated second stories to existing parking lots. Of these, raising permit prices for certain lots would be the easiest to implement, but it would need some sort of system to determine who gets the first chance to purchase these permits, which would create another source of conflict.

Starting a shuttle service would provide front-door service for those who wait hours, sometimes even days, for parking spaces to open up close to campus. By implementing the shuttle, Bramlage's parking lot could be used not only on game days, but for easing the parking problem.

A shuttle permit could also entitle the holder to park in Bramlage. No one with a regular parking permit would be displaced. If you don't believe me, go see how many students park at Bramlage and walk to campus.

You could count it on one hand, possibly just using the thumb.

KU's service is very popular and is supported by student-activity fees and an additional access fee, currently $55, a price I would gladly pay in place of a parking permit.

There is currently a limit of 450 reserved stalls on campus and a proposal to reduce this number to 200. While this may seem insignificant, 250 more possible stalls would reduce the number of people who need food and water to walk in from the far corners of certain lots.

Adding a pre-fabricated second story to existing parking lots would double parking space in those lots at a fraction of the cost of a garage. Yes, this would require some planning, but I think even the Parking Council could handle this.

The best advice to avoid getting a ticket is to park legally. If everyone did this, Parking Services might eventually reduce its staff to the point that you could park where you wanted.

I also recommend buying stock in gasoline companies, as long as people are content with burning up to one tank of gas or more per day while waiting for The Spot.

▶ MINORITIES

Being black is a privilege

Dear editor,

This letter is in response to Thursday's letter titled, "Minorities Complain Too Much."

There are many veils in the world, and there are many K-State students wearing them. One of them happens to be the veil of misguided opportunities. If a scholarship is given to a minority on this campus, and he or she didn't earn it, something is wrong. Financial aid and minority scholarships are set up around certain criteria. For example, you need a 2.5 to be considered for most minority scholarships and a 3.0 to receive money because they are competitive scholarships. A great deal of minority scholarships are set up by minority groups to help them achieve upward mobility. For example, there's the National Hispanic Scholarship Fund and the United Negro College Fund.

Speaking as a minority, I would have no problem with any other cultural group striving for the same upward mobility. Although helping other ethnic groups achieve higher standards should be cross-cultural.

The writer also makes the comment that minorities get their butts kissed because whites are afraid of being labeled racist. Well, I personally don't kiss butt, because I think butt stinks. If the majority is kissing ass, it's because he or she wants to. I'm sure there isn't a minority on this campus that goes around asking for their ass to be kissed.

The writer of "Minorities Complain Too Much" says that you can't base the black experience on Snoop Dogg's music video, and she is right. Not only can you not compare the two, but you can't base the black experience on being married to a black man, living around minorities in Florida or by having a bicultural child.

The black experience can only truly be seen through a black person's eyes, unless you are Jhon Howard Griffin or Josh Solomon, who turned themselves black by taking a derivative of the drug Psorlen orally and exposing themselves to ultraviolet rays. Jhon only lasted 28 days being black, and Josh lasted two. So as you can clearly see, there have been two white men that have tried to survive or live in our racist world as black men and failed. Double consciousness isn't for everyone to understand.

Blacks have to know the African American history as well as American history. Our roots have been buried for years, and now they are sprouting so the veil can be lifted and minorities can take advantage of their opportunities in every endeavor despite past struggles.

Feeling sorry for any cultural group is just another way of saying I'd rather not get involved. Being black to me is not a problem, it's a privilege, and one that I will use. There is no way to sugarcoat what you are; it always becomes visible when in print.

▶ WOMEN

Why do victims need months?

Dear editor,

I would like to comment on Erin Mansur-Smith's column on women's month. She has truly changed my thoughts of militant feminists, although I question her sincerity on the issue of women's suffering since she spouts off many atrocities burdened by women that she never herself has faced. How does she justify feeling anger that men don't understand why women deserve to have a month dedicated to them (when she herself is only related to these women that she finds to have been oppressed through the years by the fact that she also has two X chromosomes)?

I'm sorry, but I think that hardly gives her the right to stand on a platform and preach about the evils of a male-dominated society. Had it been up to her, she would flip the culture so it be female-dominated, which makes her just as bad and oppressive as the males she feels such misdirected anger toward. It was midway through her column that I found a reason why I (being a white male from a middle-class background) found her views of the situation different.

Mansur-Smith states that the reason for the month is not that women have come so far and accomplished so much for society, (because she acknowledges that based on what they have contributed to society, men also have the right to their own month) but on the fact that women have been such victims through the ages.

If the only thing that gives women the right to have next month dedicated to them is how much they have been abused, I'm glad I can't find a month to be mine. It's sad that she thinks this. If I were African American, female, Asian or any other culture that has a month dedicated to them, I would be very upset that Mansur-Smith would have the gall to state the only thing that makes them special enough as a group to have a month dedicated to them is that they make good victims.

I thought that you wanted equality. How is displaying the fact that you have been a victim for an entire month a step toward equality? You should really rethink your reasoning why women deserve a month more than men, because from what I heard, you sound just as bad as every male pig who spreads the untruths of female inferiority. But then again, how would I know? I don't have to face the woes that you do, even though I am constantly reminded of how terrible men are, how lazy my generation is and how stupid Polish people are. (Yes, I do know what it's like to have people tell jokes about your ethnicity).

But through all that I face, I'm darn glad you don't think I need a month dedicated to me, because I would find that very offensive.

Hillary shares her recipes with the lunch lady crowd

Hillary Rodham Clinton joined the first-grade lunch bunch at Long Branch Elementary School in Arlington, Va., on Wednesday as Democrats fanned out to protest GOP efforts to cut federal nutrition and education programs.

Her cardboard tray laden with a Sloppy Joe, yogurt, applesauce and an apple, Mrs. Clinton planted herself at a table of youngsters to chat about everything from Socks the cat to the difficulties of double jump-roping.

"It was a nice change from the little smokies I always get at home," said the first lady. "I'm always getting them stuck between my teeth."

"Don't like my highway plan? Take a look at this!"

Some people might not like their elected officials, but most of them don't have to deal with the antics of Spencer R. Schlosnagle, the exhibitionist mayor of Friendsville, Md.

Schlosnagle admitted Tuesday to exposing himself to another motorist while driving on Interstate 68 last summer. He already had been convicted twice of exposing himself.

Under a plea agreement, prosecutors will recommend a jail sentence of less than a year and dismiss indecent-exposure charges involving a similar incident.

Some residents say the indecent-exposure charges are a continuing source of embarrassment. But Schlosnagle, who was re-elected to a fifth term in February 1994, continues to enjoy support from most of the 577 people in Friendsville, a town along the Youghiogheny River in Maryland's westernmost county.

Apparently, the people of Friendsville seem to enjoy this guy. At least his campaign materials would be memorable, with bumper stickers like "Schlosnagle — He's Got Nothing to Hide."

Thank you, thank you very little.

Lose $1 billion of the queen's cash, and keep the yacht – here's how!

As the financial world reverberates from the collapse of Britain's oldest investment bank, the big question on everybody's mind is: Where did 28-year-old losing trader Nick Leeson go?

London's Baring Brothers & Co. is now under the control of court-appointed administrators who are trying to assess what can be salvaged after hundreds of millions of dollars of Leeson's losses in Asian futures markets ruined the bank.

Leeson disappeared from his home in Singapore's fashionable Orchard neighborhood as the irregularities became known.

It is rumored he took off from Singapore on his yacht, and if he's smart, he will head straight to the home of either former Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale or "Dukes of Hazzard" star Tom Wopat.

Potholes as social drama, only in Davis, Calif.

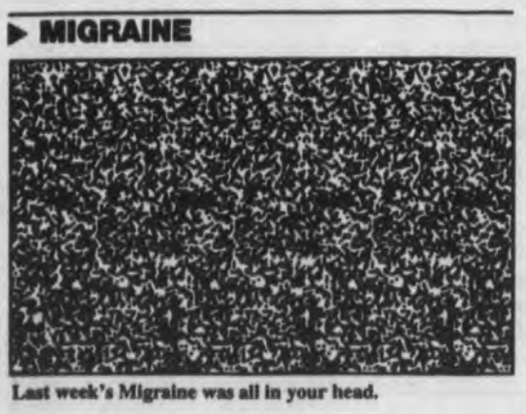
When is a pothole not just a pothole, but a "historical resource" to be preserved?

When it's in Davis, Calif., the town so politically correct that smoking is restricted even outdoors.

Twelve residents asked the city to repave a one-block alley, contending its potholes were a hazard to drivers and a breeding ground for mosquitoes.

But Councilwoman Julie Partansky invoked the California Environmental Quality Act last week to stop any repaving based on the grounds that the alley is a "historical resource."

"They are the original material used when the neighborhood was built. It's part of the fabric of the neighborhood as originally conceived," Partansky said.



"The alleys have a wonderful ambience. To pave them would make a world of difference. It's real mellow in the alley now."

The alley behind my house could be used in a 4X4 commercial, but I would hesitate to call it "mellow."

HANGING OUT

Are you a minor? Of legal age but not interested in the bar scene? Finding something to do on the weekends isn't as hard as you might think.

by Rebecca Schulz

It's Friday. A decision must be made. A weekend activity must be chosen. There's Aggieville, but for minors and those not interested in the bars, Aggieville isn't always the answer.

The answer could be as simple as renting an old comedy with a group of friends, taking a road trip to a nearby town or going to the K-State Union.

"I think for minors, the best thing to do is to hang out with your friends at their house," Pamela Leiker, sophomore in business, said.

"In college you finally have a place of your own, a place where you can go and hang out," she said. "The funny thing is when you turn 21, for a couple of months, you go out to the bars, and then you're back to saying there's nothing to do."

An inexpensive idea is to rent a movie and watch it with a group of friends.

Chiquita Miller-Henry, senior in social work and a customer-service representative at Blockbuster Video, said groups like to rent action and comedy videos and rent warped movies like Dazed and Confused and PCU (the "Animal House" of the 1990s).

Miller-Henry said lately the Monty Python and Cheech and Chong videos have been popular weekend rentals.

"On the weekends, they just love those guys," she said.

Other popular rentals are "The Mask," "Speed" and "With Honors." Miller-Henry said these movies are popular because the action is constant and the story line keeps moving, which maintains the attention of the audience.

Because hanging out at the same place and watching the same movies can get monotonous, students can also pack their bags and go on weekend getaways.

Leiker said when she lived in Kansas City, she and her friends would get together and take road trips.

"We would just pick a place we've never been to," Leiker said. "Find somewhere on the map that's close and go to it. It's like taking a mini vacation."

Taking road trips doesn't have to be expensive. It just requires a car that works and gas money.

Leiker said getting out of town and doing a little sightseeing is a cure for cabin fever.

Students can go out of town, but they can also find places to go right here in Manhattan.

Neal Axton, senior in philosphy, said students can go to Wamego or head out to Tuttle Creek Recreational Area like his friends.

"I try to do that a couple of weekends a month," Axton said.

Axton and his friends spend time at the Spillway and the "rocks."

The place called the "rocks" is located down Spillway Road. It's the first road on the left past the Spillway area. This windy road leads to a picnic area overlooking the Tuttle Creek Reservoir. A series of terraced limestone cliffs line the water's edge.

Axton said he and his friends like to go to Tuttle to build fires on the rocks and hang out.

For those college students who don't own reliable cars for long-distance traveling, there are other activities within walking distances on and off campus.

The Union has a lot to offer at inexpensive prices. It's also within walking distance from the residence halls and apartments surrounding campus.

"I think it's a nice area because you can play pool and bowl and hang out," Levi Hunter, junior in graphic design, said.

On the weekend, the Union transforms Forum Hall into a movie theater and the Union Station into a dance club. You can also play pool, bowl and play video games in the basement.

"This is the Union Recreational Area — this is the place that everybody cheers about," Hunter said.

Forum Hall presents movies Friday through Sunday evenings for $1.75 each, and the Union sells a pass for six movies for $7.

"I go to the movies there a lot because they're so cheap," Jill Astamendi, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Astamendi said she also goes to the Varsity and Campus theaters in Aggieville because of their inexpensive prices.

The Union not only offers movies but also has theme nights on weekends in Union Station.

On Friday and Saturday nights, Union Station turns up the music and the dance lights. The Station plays host to a variety of dance mixes, such as Country Night, Christian Rock Myx, African-American Nite and Latino Nite.

"There's a lot of money put into the dance floor and equipment. It's one of the nicest systems that I've seen in town," Jamey Weiss, junior in management information systems, said.

Between the equipment and variety of music, Union Station creates a mock club atmosphere, offering unleaded drinks and grill items. Weiss said if they could get enough people to come to the Station, it could be fun.

"People walk in here, see only a few people in here and turn and walk back out," he said.

Christian Dance Myx draws the biggest dance crowd.

"When people come back here for Christian rock night, they seem to have a good time," Weiss said.

Astamendi said she's been to all the dance nights. She said she enjoys coming to them all, but her favorite is Latino Nite.

"I just wish people would try it. They know it's there, but they just don't go," she said.

Things will come easy for you this week. Make sure to thank your friends for all their great deeds this week. It's time to put all your heart into doing what you truly love. For the weekend: Be creative about entertainment methods.

ARIES (March 21-April 20)

It's your turn to cheer up everyone around you. Private action is going to get you high recognition. Be on the lookout for terrific financial breakthroughs. For the weekend: It's OK to splurge. The planets are on your side.

TAURUS (April 21-May 21)

Don't take everything so personally. Lighten up. You bulls aren't usually known for being uptight, but this week has people thinking otherwise. Keep educational matters your top priority. For the weekend: Try something new and exciting.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21)

Start saving your pennies for that wonderful adventure you've been longing for. It's very important this week to think things through carefully. Let that special romantic interest know you're single. How else will they find out? For the weekend: Be playful.

CANCER (June 22-July 23)

Take a deep breath. You feel as though you've been on a mission with absolutely no point. Sorry, but Mercury's tailspin has poor Cancer feeling a little lost. Use your spare time to find a new source of income. For the weekend: Stay home and balance your checkbook.

LEO (July 24-Aug. 23)

You're feeling a lot more peaceful this week. Work hard on keeping a slippery relationship together. All that hard work has you drained, so make major decisions next week. For the weekend: Relax.

VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 23)

The work load is getting ready to pile up again, so watch out. A roommate or co-worker offers excellent advice, so take it. A new romantic possibility jumps out of the blue. It could be what you're looking for. For the weekend: Your treat.

LIBRA (Sept. 24-Oct. 23)

Last week was a time for you to collect your thoughts and relax. Now much work lies ahead, so be prepared. Venus has you feeling extremely romantic. Just follow your heart. For the weekend: Be your flirtatious self.

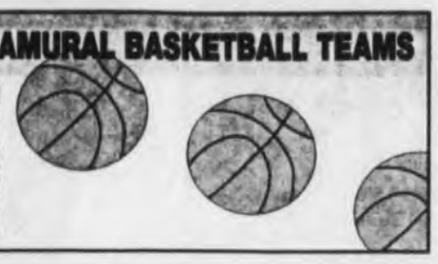
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)

It's time for solo Scorpio to learn to work with others. Although you're not known for this, it's important you do so this week. Romance is prime from Monday to Wednesday. Use your head when financial blunders pop up this week. For the weekend: You'll be upbeat and energetic.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)

Watch out for a sneaky Aquarius. Sometimes things aren't as simple as they seem. Spend some time working ahead this week. You'll be so happy that you did. Romance looks keen. Just be patient. For the weekend: You take the lead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)



This is a good week to wrap up a lingering project. It will seem as though you are working twice as hard as usual to keep from falling behind. Don't worry — that will soon vanish. Your energy level is low, so this is a good time to be alone. For the weekend: Take it easy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)

You've been moving in every direction lately, so slow down. Romance is heating up and looks better than ever. Because you're so caught up in work, you're feeling bored. Start that new project. For the weekend: Cheap has never looked so chic.

K-State opens tourney play against OSU

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

It's a brand-new season, but this time if a team loses, they're done.

K-State (14-12, 6-8 in conference play) will get its last shot at a possible NCAA tournament bid this weekend in the Big Eight tournament.

The fifth-seeded Cats will open play against fourth-seeded Oklahoma State (16-10, 7-7) Saturday.

Tip-off will be at noon at the Bicentennial Center in Salina.

The Wildcats split two regular season meetings with the Cowgirls, with each team winning on the road.

Oklahoma State defeated the Cats 72-63 in Bramlage, and K-State held off a late run in Stillwater to win 57-56.

"They know us pretty well, and we feel like we know what they're going to do," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

One reason for the competitiveness of the series may be the similarity of styles.

Both teams stress tenacious defense, with the Cowgirls boasting the second-best scoring defense in the conference and K-State ranking third.

"Oklahoma State has always been really competitive — very competitive in terms of their defense," Agler said.

That defensive intensity was the key to Oklahoma State's victory in Manhattan, when they stifled K-State's motion offense.

"OSU had us standing, and that's one thing we can't do offensively," Wildcat sophomore Missy Decker said.

But it was K-State's defense that dominated in Stillwater, allowing the Cats to control the tempo and set up their offense.

K-State never trailed, winning a low-scoring game behind 47.7-percent shooting from the field.

Agler said the Cats need another good effort to win in Salina.

"We've got to make them play at our tempo," Agler said.

"We've got to make them play against our offense."

Oklahoma State coach Dick Halterman said he fears K-State might have an emotional advantage over his team going into the tournament.

"K-State came into our place and beat us late in the season, and I think they'll play with a lot of confidence," he said.

"I think we're a team that has our heads down right now. That may be one of our biggest challenges."

The Cowgirls lost three of their last four games in what Halterman described as a disappointing season.

"I think our players are disappointed in the kind of season they've had," Halterman said.

"One of our weaknesses might be our balance. When things aren't going well, most teams have a go-to player who'll respond and get you the win. We really don't have a go-to player."

But Agler said he disagreed, noting that 11 Cowgirls have played in the NCAA tournament.

"Oklahoma State is a veteran team," he said.

"They're very balanced."

Tigers beat the odds last year

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Anything can happen in the Big Eight Tournament — just ask the Missouri Tigers.

After entering the tournament as the No. 7 seed, the Tigers swept through two top 10-ranked opponents and captured the Big Eight title.

The road for the Tigers was a bumpy one as the Tigers dismantled the Kansas Jayhawks in the first round and the Oklahoma State Cowgirls in the semifinals.

That left the Tigers a date with No. 2-ranked and No. 1-seeded Colorado.

After battling through 39 minutes and 58 seconds of close basketball, Colorado had a two-point lead.

But the Tigers had one last chance to tie the game, when sophomore Erika Martin was fouled.

With the fate of the Missouri squad's season on Martin's shoulders, she stepped up to the line and coolly swished both ends of the one-and-one.

"No pressure at all," Martin said.

"I just stepped up to the line, and I made them. However, I did realize that I had to make them. My teammates told me before I shot that I had to make them. They went in, and I knew it all the way."

With Martin's free throws, the game went into overtime, where Martin continued to dominate.

She scored four points in the extra period to lead the Tigers to the 79-71 upset victory over the Buffs.

"This was a special win for our seniors," Missouri coach Joann Rutherford said.

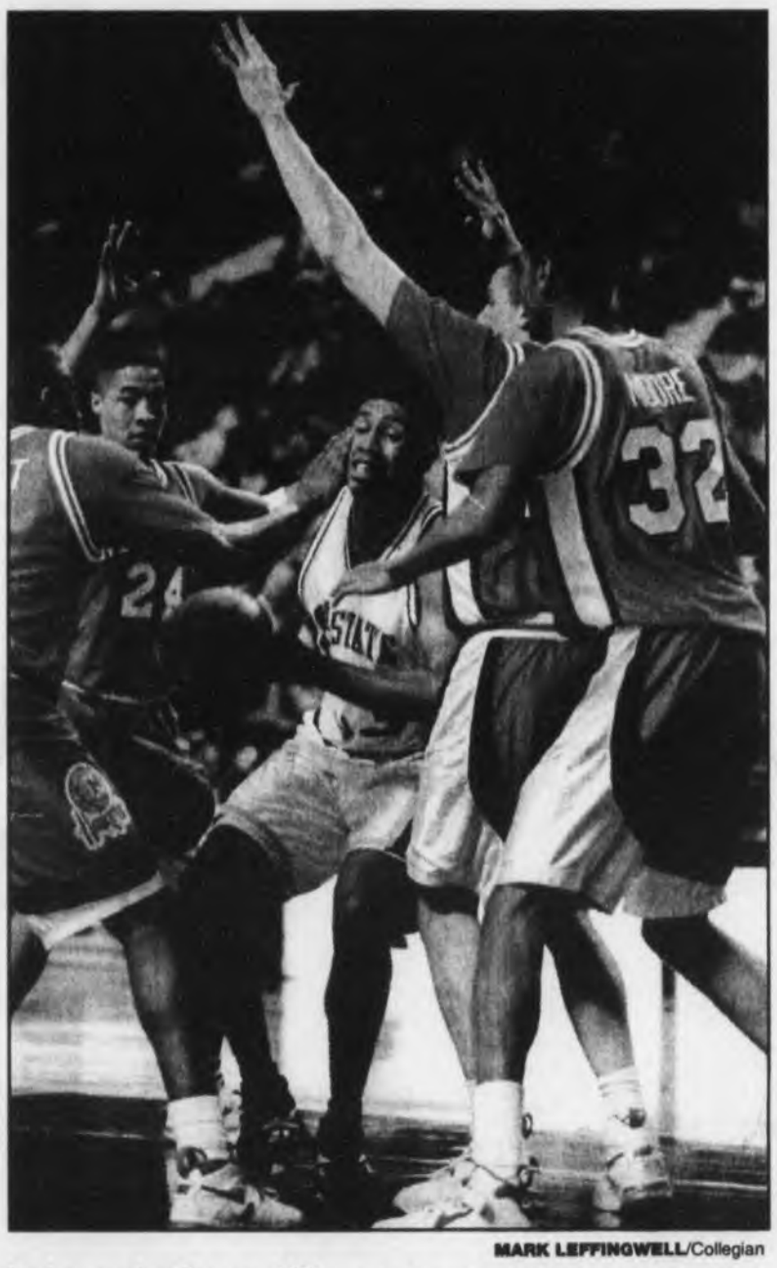
"We were counted out at the beginning, but we were in all of our games throughout the regular season."

"We were counted out at the beginning, but we were in all the games throughout the season."
JOANN RUTHERFORD
Missouri basketball coach

People probably had a good reason to overlook the Tigers, since they were a No. 7-seed team.

They entered the tournament with only a 9-17 record, but with the win, the Tigers are going to the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1986.

It was the lowest-seeded team in the Big Eight Tournament history to win the championship.



Missouri's Nikki Smith was selected as the Tournament's Most Valuable Player after scoring 18 points in the championship game, along with a combined 36 points in the Tigers' two previous games.

"It hasn't sunk in on me yet," Smith said. "I'm happy for the whole team. I guess that I'm in a zone now. I didn't even feel like I was shooting.

"I hope I don't have to leave the zone."

Colorado coach Ceal Barry explained the Buffaloes' loss in just one sentence.

"The difference in the game was that we got out-rebounded," Barry said.

Cats look to close season with a win

TODD STEWART
Collegian

Wednesday night, the Belvis Noland Show was center-stage at Bramlage Coliseum.

With the regular season finale against Colorado Saturday, K-State head basketball coach Tom Asbury is hoping that the show has not left town yet.

The senior forward's career-high 31-point outburst in Wednesday's 75-73 victory led the Wildcats to their first victory in more than a month. With one game left on the docket, Asbury said he is hoping that another win would serve as a confidence-builder going into the Big Eight Tournament.

"Obviously, we needed a win desperately, and we need another one on Saturday and see if we can't go into the Big Eight Tournament with some momentum," Asbury said.

Colorado comes to Manhattan standing seventh in the Big Eight Conference, one place ahead of the cellar-dwelling Cats.

The Buffaloes have never won in Bramlage Coliseum and haven't won in Manhattan since 1964.

But even with their success against Colorado at home and after Wednesday's victory over NCAA Tournament hopeful Nebraska, the Cats are in no way looking past the Buffaloes.

Colorado thrashed the Cats in Boulder, Colo., earlier this season 84-68.

In that 16-point loss, the Buffaloes limited Noland to 10 points.

Even though Asbury contends this is not a one-man team, he said Noland's play is a gauge of his team's success.

"As he's gone, we've gone," Asbury said. "When he's played well this year, we've been a fighter."

In fact, after the Nebraska game, Asbury said Noland could be taking even more shots.

"As a matter of fact, I thought he passed up some shots he normally wouldn't — taking 20, though, he didn't pass up a whole lot of 'em."

Asbury said he is not going to rely on Noland to carry the Cats.

"We don't want to be a one-man team," Asbury said. "It's never been a design of ours."

Wednesday's Noland-led victory was a measure of redemption for the Cats.

Asbury said the first Colorado game and the 22-point loss earlier this season to Nebraska in Lincoln are the two low points for the team this season.

"Those were both stinkers. They were both on the road, and they were both real bad games for us," Asbury said. "We got an opportunity to pay one back, and now we get a chance to do the other."

Netters look to stop losing streak

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

The K-State women's tennis team has fallen on some hard times.

After going 3-1 to start the season, the Wildcats are now 3-4 and will try to break a three-game losing streak this weekend as they travel to Des Moines, Iowa, to face Drake and Northern Illinois.

K-State is coming off a disappointing 6-3 loss to the New Mexico Lobos Saturday afternoon at the Cottonwood Racquet Club.

This was the third-straight loss for the Cats to a Central Region opponent, coming after earlier losses to Brigham Young and Utah.

A bright note did come out of the day, though.

K-State all-American Karina Kuregian snapped a personal three-match losing streak by posting a win in the No. 1 singles division.

Despite the victory, Wildcat tennis coach Steve Bietau said Kuregian has a way to go.

"She managed to pull out her match in three sets," Bietau said. "In reality, she didn't play very well."

Kuregian also paired up with Martine Shrubsole to capture their fourth-straight victory, improving their No. 1 doubles record to 8-1 this season.

K-State opens its trip to Iowa Saturday playing Drake, a member of the Missouri Valley Conference.

"They have a pretty good doubles team at Drake," Bietau said. "That team did well at the Riviera last fall."

The Cats will remain in Des Moines Sunday to meet Northern Illinois.

Bietau said he believes his team's problems during its losing streak are mental.

"It is very important that we have an overall better attitude on the court," Bietau said.

"I am not saying that we don't do some things right on the court. It is very important that each and all of our players give everything they've got. They have to be willing to go out and fight each competitor that they meet."

Following the trip to the Hawkeye state, the Cats will hit the road once again.

During spring break, the Cats will find themselves in New Orleans for match-ups with Tulane, Rice and Cornell.

K-State will not play at home until April 2, when the Cats will be host to conference foe Oklahoma State.

Kansas seniors ready to battle OSU

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Kansas seniors Greg Ostertag and Greg Gurley couldn't have picked a more dramatic game for their final chance to play at Allen Field House.

The game Sunday between the third-ranked Jayhawks and No. 18 Oklahoma State will decide the Big Eight conference championship.

It will also be the last game for the 7-foot, 2-inch Ostertag and the 6'5" Gurley.

The two players are a study in contrast, Coach Roy Williams said.

"Greg Ostertag has been the most talked-about player in the seven years I've been here, either bragging on him or wondering why he's not doing more," Williams said.

Ostertag, the Big Eight's career block leader, has caused Williams both joy and frustration.

"I've gotten more frustrated in his four years than anybody else," Williams said. "But at the same time, I've enjoyed him as much or more than any young man I've ever coached. He's really a unique young man."

Gurley came to the Jayhawks as the Kansas high-school player of the year. After suffering back injuries his freshman year, Gurley never returned to full strength.

Hockey team to raise money

JAMIE CONGROVE
Collegian

Don't pack those ice skates away yet.

The second-annual Skate with the Cats for those interested in the K-State Ice Hockey Club will be from 8 to 10 p.m. Saturday at the City Park ice rink.

The club members are raising money so they can compete in their last two tournaments of the season, said Scott Thorne, senior in marketing and captain of the club.

"You can rent skates and have a shoot-out with the goalie to win prizes," said Chuck Downey, graduate in horticulture and president of the club.

Downey said last year the club raised $200 from the event. This year, it hopes to surpass that.

"We're hoping to make $300 this year," Downey said.

Downey said he hopes as many people come to the event as possible because it is important to the team to raise as much money as possible.

"All the money goes directly for the hotels, and if we do really good raising money, we are trying to have a tournament against Nebraska and Iowa State in Kansas City," Downey said.

Jesse Meadows, freshman in wildlife biology, said because the rink is so small in Manhattan, they are unable to have practices unless they go to Kansas City, where each team member has to pay for skating time and transportation.

Meadows said that besides doing the Skate with the Cats fund-raising event, the team also has several other fundraisers throughout their season.

"We sell T-shirts and bumper stickers. We're stage hands at concerts, and we sometimes clean Bramlage," Meadows said.

KMKF-FM 101.5 will be broadcasting live at the event. There will also be T-shirts and hockey jerseys for sale, Thorne said.

Downey said the admission for Saturday's event will be $1.50 at the door, and skates will be available for rental.

K-State ready for weekend homestand

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

If the K-State baseball team wants to win any games this weekend, it needs three things.

Good pitching.

Good hitting.

Oh, and a little help from Mother Nature.

The return of Old Man Winter has already denied the Wildcats a shot against Wichita State.

K-State was scheduled to take on the Shockers Wednesday and Thursday, but the snowy weather forced those games to be rescheduled for April 13 in Salina and May 1 in Wichita.

If the weather cooperates, the Cats will have an opportunity to improve their 4-3 record in this weekend's first homestand of the year.

K-State is scheduled to face Grandview College at 3 p.m. Friday and again at 1 p.m. Saturday in a doubleheader.

The Cats are also slated to play the Northern Iowa Panthers at 1 p.m. Sunday.

Last weekend was good for the Cats.

They won two of three games in tournament action in Lake Charles, La.

K-State took Oral Roberts to extra innings before finally scoring the go-ahead run on an Eagle error to seal the 3-2 win.

Saturday saw the Cats jump out to an early lead against the Creighton Bluejays, but they fell flat in the late innings of the game to lose, 8-6.

The Cats salvaged their second victory in Sunday's contest against McNeese State, as they held off a ninth-inning Cowboy surge to secure a 12-10 victory.

Reader chides Cassie for belittling answer

Dear Cassie,

I believe that you are an "ignorant and ridiculous human being if you don't see how stupid, insensitive and feeble-minded" your response was to Equal Time.

There have been many oppressed nationalities throughout the years. There should be no legitimate reason why every nationality should not be given a month to celebrate their culture, heritage and race.

If you still do not agree with the opinion of giving all nationalities equal time, why don't you state your opinion on the matter, instead of falling back on the ability to put someone else down because of your own views. It is a free country. Everyone is entitled to their own opinion. However, attacking someone is not an opinion — it is a cop-out, an abuse of the privilege of having your own column.

Signed, Equal Time II

Dear Equal Time II,

I stand behind my response to your predecessor. If you want to consider white supremacists David Duke and Michael Metzker and a murderer such as John Wilkes Booth as leaders of "White History" to be lauded for an entire month, do so.

I feel I should warn you, though — if you plan on having a celebration for them, burning a cross within city limits is against the law. I advise against it.

TV quiz show cheated to get higher ratings

NIKOLA ZYTKOW
Collegian

They rehearsed heavy breathing, learned to stutter, bite their lips and wipe their brows, at the same time prostituting their intellects in front of millions of viewers.

They were contestants on "Twenty One," a quiz show at the peak of its popularity and deception in the late 1950s.

The movie, "Quiz Show," portrays a "Jeopardy" of sorts, with cash prizes so high and the potential for fame so great one could not help but dream of being a contestant.

Living rooms full of children and parents gathered religiously around their TV sets after dinner to watch the show.

"Audiences want to watch the money, not great displays of intellect," said Dan Enright (David Paymer), the show's crooked producer.

And money flowing they did see. What they didn't see was the popular contestant getting the answers before the show.

Week after week, the ratings of the show were measured, and week after week, the popular contestant would pull a seemingly flawless win. That is, until the ratings plateaued, as in the case of Herbie Stempel (John Turturro).

Stempel, a lower-class Jew from the Bronx, had always dreamed of fame. The power and money he tasted in his short residency on the show was enough to make him a bitter man when told to "take a dive."

Charles Van Doren (Ralph Fiennes), a young well-to-do professor at Columbia University, was Stempel's successor. Not only was Van Doren an impeccably handsome fellow, but he also came from a intellectually superior family. All this made him the perfect contestant — the one but would surely boost ratings for the show, and ratings were what it was all about.

It was astounding to see a man like Van Doren getting pulled into the web of deception in this extraordinary movie, which was directed and produced by Robert Redford.

While sitting at the edge of their seats, viewers are also faced with the lurking question of what they would do in the contestants' situations. It's an "Indecent Proposal" of sorts. Instead of selling their bodies, the contestants sell their integrity.

Fiennes, previously seen as the vile commandant in "Schindler's List," delivers an exhilarating performance as a man torn between seeking his own fame or living in the shadow of his famous father.

Turturro, previously seen as Pauly in "Jungle Fever," is pitifully funny when driven to hysteria, in his intentions of fighting the power. He is the epitome of a man who can be bought and sold in the time it takes one to say "Twenty One."

"Quiz Show," which was nominated for a best picture Oscar, is charged with psychologically provoking scenes, excellent camera work and frightening visions of a man destroyed by the very system that built him up to god status.

USD 383 discusses increasing user fees fication in the fourth category of schools, which are those schools with the highest enrollment.

The state finance law gives more financial assistance to smaller schools.

Yunk said the district is 19th from the bottom in the state in per-student spending at $3,905 per student.

The Derby school district has had three local option-tax proposals fail, Yunk said.

Derby has had to reduce its staff by 37, eliminate administrative services, reduce custodial services so the schools are only cleaned every other day and install user fees for students and activities, Yunk said.

Yunk said students pay $71 per sport to compete in athletics and $46 to be a cheerleader at Derby.

He said without local option-tax dollars, the district might be forced to take such steps.

"That's the picture of what we might be looking at," Yunk said.

A 12-percent increase would mean the option tax on a $70,000 home would increase from $25.55 to $175.17 a year.

With a decision still to be made, board members expressed some concerns on implementing the user fees.

Board Member Deb Nuss expressed some concerns about families who cannot afford the fees, especially families with several children.

Yunk said no decisions have been made, but possible ways to accommodate lower-income families would be to provide a payment schedule or cap the charges to a certain number of students in one family.

Mary Nichols, board member, also expressed a concern that she would not want to see children not able to participate in activities.

The recommendations presented to the board included a $5 increase in textbook-rental fees for all but kindergarten students, a materials fee of $20 to pay for consumable materials and a $3 towel rental fee for secondary students in physical-education classes and athletics.

High-school students could face increases in optional costs, including a $3 increase in the cost of student-activity tickets, the implementation of a $20 charge for driver's-education classes and a $9 increase in parking.

Manhattan High School juniors and seniors could see the price of their parking permits escalate from $1 to $10.

Bev Eversmeyer, board member, said additional funding is important because teachers are taking money out of their own pockets to fund projects for their classrooms.

"I wish we had enough money to provide these things free to students, but we can't," Eversmeyer said.

said the importance of the Collegian as a student service can be shown during an ice storm last semester.

"The Collegian staff had to put together a smaller paper with the resources they had available," Carney said.

"Many groups complained, and this was possibly because their news was not published."

Bryndon Meinhardt, Privileged Fee Committee chair, said his committee chose to set the fee after consulting all parties and carefully researching the problem.

The amendment to the bill required a two-thirds vote. It was voted down 33-21-1. The Student Publications Activity Fee will be $1.90 next semester.

Money saved by reduction of the Student Publication Equipment Fee will be put in the Student Activity Fee. This will include an increase in funds available for academic competition teams and other student groups.

Student Governing Association also changed the way it allocated money for itself. The Office of Student Activities and Services will now receive money from a separate account.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Campus magazine is denied funding

LISA ELLIOTT

Student Senate denied funding to a campus magazine called Metazine Thursday night.

Steve Weatherman, business senator, read a passage from the magazine, which talked about sex with a 16-year-old. Weatherman also pointed out a photo of a nude male in the magazine.

"I'm gonna vote against it. I don't think it's the most productive use of student funds," Weatherman said.

Senators passed the magazine around and read the submissions during the debate.

Some senators said they had trouble with funding the magazine and putting the University's name on it.

"I don't think I want K-State's name on it," Chuck Haynes, business senator, said.

Other senators said they thought Metazine should be funded because to deny funding was to censor the content.

Phil Anderson, faculty representative, said the group was funded by the University-Activities-Board funded and that voting against funding them was censorship.

Ben Clouse, Senate Allocations Committee chair, said the guidelines clearly state that the views of an organization should not be taken into account during the allocations process.

Anyone can ask for money from Senate, Clayton Wheeler, Senate chair, said.

"We're an open cash machine," Wheeler said.

Three other allocations passed and will receive funding.

The Society for the Advancement of Management was allocated $1,518 for registration and travel expenses to go to the national contest in Newport Beach, Calif., in April.

Scott Rottinghaus, arts and sciences senator, said he was opposed to funding SAM because the Academic Competition Account was set up to fund agriculture teams and Speech Unlimited.

If Senate starts funding any competition team that asks for money, the teams the account was meant for could get short-changed, Rottinghaus said.

Senate also voted to allocate money to the National Organization for Women for a Women's History Month speaker and for the Students and faculty share their culture with Manhattan at India Nite

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Indian Students Association gave a glimpse of India to its largest group of guests ever Saturday at India Nite.

About 650 people gathered at Manhattan Middle School to experience Indian food, dance and art.

The night began at 5:30 p.m. with dinner in the cafeteria.

Indian students served guests rice with vegetables, potatoes cooked in tomato sauce, chick peas cooked in gravy and spicy Indian chicken.

Eileen Shea, sophomore in geography, said she learned the correct way to eat Indian food from Indian friends. Indians eat their food with their fingers, sometimes picking food up with fried bread.

"I like the food because of the different spices they use," Shea said. "The food is one of my favorite parts of the evening."

Shea came to India Nite because Indian friends piqued her interest in the culture. She is also taking a class in the history of Hinduism.

"I liked the people of India, and I wanted to know more about their religions," Shea said. "I am very interested in studying religions."

During the dinner, people had the opportunity to look at Indian art. Sculptures, paintings and even an Indian chess set were brought to the event by Indian students and faculty.

After dinner, people made their way from the cafeteria to fill the auditorium. Indian students then took the visitors on a pictorial visit to India.

Two narrators used an overhead projector to show pictures while they described the different regions of India. After showing each region, other students would perform dances of the region.

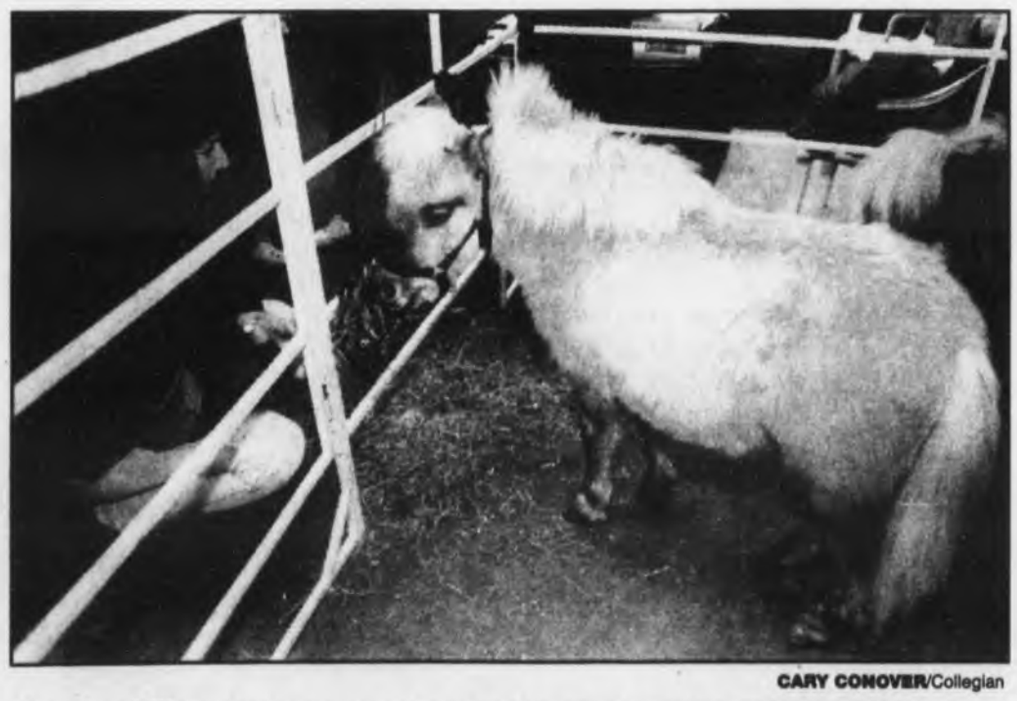
Women dressed in bright red, orange, blue, green and gold colored cloths wrapped around their bodies, and men in loosely-fitted pants, sashes and vests danced barefoot across the wooden stage. Performers twirled, spun and leapt on stage to the music of India.

Mohan Bonala, graduate student in civil engineering, brought six friends to the event, some from as far away as Virginia.

"The festival gives us a chance to celebrate the culture of India and exchange culture with our American friends," Bonala said.

India Nite also gives Indian students a chance to feel closer to their homeland.

"My wife just joined me in America," Bonala said. "She comes to the festivals and forgets about being homesick."



Marietta Ryba-White, technician in plant pathology, joined her husband and three sons for the event. She and her husband received tickets from a student in the plant pathology department. This was their fourth time attending the event.

She said that bringing her sons to the event will help them to be more accepting of people of different origins.

"I think they will be more open to meeting people of new cultures without feeling intimidated," Ryba-White said.

Poonacha Machaiah, president of Indian Students Association, said he was pleased with the festival.

"We set out to educate students, and I think everyone came away knowing more about India," Machaiah said. "I think the slide presentation and the dances worked together to provide a glimpse of the country."

Camden Gillum, St. George, tries to get the attention of Bonita, a miniature horse, during the trade show of the 13th annual KSU Horsemen's Conference Saturday afternoon. The trade show, which consisted of about 40 booths, was one of the events in the conference. There were also educational sessions, as well as the KSU Consignment Horse Sale. About 800 people attended the event.

People from all over the country came to K-State to talk about horses this weekend.

About 800 people attended the 13th annual KSU Horsemen's Conference on Saturday.

Those who attended included a variety of people with a common interest in horses, Mark Arns, assistant professor in animal sciences and industry, said.

"The people attending may only have one to two horses, or as many as 50 to 100 horses," Arns said.

The conference is an educational event, which includes a trade show and morning and afternoon sessions, Arns said.

The trade show included about 40 booths, including nutritional information, health care and miniature horses — basically just anything dealing with horses, Arns said.

The attendance at the trade show and the number of participates was up from last year, he said.

The three morning sessions included presentations by Dr. Sheila Schils, University of Wisconsin; Dallas Morgan, attending farrier at K-State; and Dr. Jeff Van Petten, Meriden.

Cattle enthusiasts discuss issues

ANGIE STUMP

More than 700 cattlemen, alumni, students, faculty and staff attended the 82nd annual Cattlemen's Day Friday at Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

The purpose of Cattlemen's Day is to discuss current issues in cattle research and new research findings and techniques.

"It is the largest public educational program we have on campus every year," said Gerry Kuhl, extension feedlot nutritionist and co-chairman of Cattlemen's Day.

"We try to cut through the nuances of research and get to the bottom line so producers can take it home," Kuhl said. "We try to plan good and timely programs on topics that most of the questions are being asked."

A variety of activities and displays, including educational exhibits, were scheduled for the annual event.

The morning program was the presentation of timely topics. Various K-State specialists gave quick summaries of current research and events happening today in the cattle industry.

"The producers enjoy the condensation of current research," Kuhl said. "The topics feature what is new and challenging the industry."

The afternoon session featured keynote speaker Jim Marsden, K-State regents distinguished professor of meat science, and Jon Ferguson, president of the Kansas Livestock Association.

"The key to success is facing the challenges as a unified industry," Marsden said.

He said the three most critical issues in beef industry are E.coli 057.H7, the need for reform in the meat and poultry regulatory agencies and the difference between the meat and poultry inspection regulations.

Following the afternoon session, participants traveled to the Beef Research Unit for an

Library to help inform families about illnesses

Coping with terminally ill loved ones can be difficult when you have no idea what is happening to them. A new library at the Saint Mary Hospital is in the works to help family members educate themselves about terminal illnesses.

Teresa Rickel-McMillin lost her mother to pancreatic cancer in February 1994 and had no resources to help educate her family on what was happening.

"My mother was such a generous person. She touched so many people," Rickel-McMillin said.

"The resources just weren't available here, and we wanted information in layman terms about what was going on," she said.

The Rickel family wanted to continue their mother's giving spirit by developing a new library for families of terminally patients in their mother's name. The Molly M. Rickel Research Library is scheduled to open this spring.

"I know there are a lot of students that are going through this with a family member, and it's especially hard when they're away at school. The library will be open 24 hours a day for them," Rickel-McMillin said.

Most of the efforts have been donated for the library by Manhattan businesses and residents. Brent Bowman, of Bowman and Associates Architects, has dedicated his services to the design of the library.

"We wanted a comfortable, user-friendly place for people in search for health-care information," Bowman said.

"The project is remarkable. There is a certain amount of magic that is putting people together for this kind of cause," he said.

▶ FORT RILEY SOLDIER BOUGHT GUN AFTER A COUNSELING SESSION

A Thursday night shooting at Fort Riley left two men dead and one injured.

One of the men killed in the shooting was Pvt. James Evans, 21, of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry.

Staff Sgt. Stanley Ellis, 28, of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry, was injured and stayed at Irwin Army Community Hospital until Saturday night, when he was released.

The suspect, who killed himself after the shootings, has not been named, pending notification of the next of kin.

Ben Santos, public-affairs officer at Fort Riley, said the shootings stemmed from the suspect having an argument with a supervisor.

The suspect had a counseling session in the morning, and later that day he purchased a 12-gauge shotgun, Santos said.

The incident evolved during a second counseling session in the afternoon in which the suspect was supposed to talk with his supervisor.

During the session, the suspect pulled the gun on his supervisor, who got out of the room to warn others, Santos said. It was at about 5:30 p.m. that the subject started randomly firing from the third-floor barracks.

The unidentified supervisor was not shot. But Ellis, who was in the parking lot, was shot.

Evans was on a ledge outside the barracks when he was fatally shot.

Evans was originally from McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey and had been stationed at Fort Riley since March 1994.

Ellis is from Griffin, Ga., and has also been at Fort Riley since 1994.

▶ BILL MIGHT EXPAND USE OF DEATH PENALTY TO 16-YEAR-OLDS

TOPEKA (AP) — The House Judiciary Committee will hold hearings this week on a bill that would allow the state to execute people as young as 16 who commit capital crimes.

It will be a major focus as the Legislature opens its ninth week of the 1995 session, with first adjournment scheduled for March 31.

The bill would allow the state to execute people who commit premeditated murder in the course of an attempted kidnapping or attempted murder — such as shooting the wrong person — and killing any child under 16, rather than 14.

Death-penalty opponents say it represents an expansion of the state's relatively restricted death-penalty law, which took effect last July 1. Presently, people who are younger than 18 when they commit a capital crime cannot be executed.

Sister Theresa Bangert, a lobbyist for Kansas Coalition Against the Death Penalty, said she is alarmed by the proposal to execute juveniles.

"When we start executing juveniles, we are not in good company," she said.

Besides the United States, the only countries that permit juveniles to be executed are Iran, Iraq, Nigeria, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia, she said.

Rep. Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, Judiciary Committee chairman, said he is interested in making technical adjustments to the state's death-penalty law but does not want to pursue a major overhaul.

"I'm not really too interested this year in making substantive changes," O'Neal said.

His committee introduced the bill at the request of Attorney General Carla Stovall.

The list of capital crimes contained in the present law is "fairly limited," O'Neal said.

Although the composition of the House changed considerable last November, the Senate, which passed the death penalty 22-18, is unlikely to agree to any major expansion of current law.

▶ STUDENT RECEIVES FULL SCHOLARSHIP TO AIR FORCE ACADEMY

Cadet Aaron Cooper, freshman in political science, has received a full scholarship to the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Cooper was honored Thursday afternoon in Throckmorton Hall in front of his officers and fellow peers.

Col. William Byrns, professor of aerospace studies, presented the award to Cooper.

Cooper was given the award after a series of procedures, which began with filling out an application.

In January, Cooper had an interview with Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., for the congressional appointment, and he wrote essays on why he wanted to join the Air Force Academy.

Cooper also had to prove himself in the areas of education and physical fitness and had to be in good standing overall.

"I had to pass a physical, have high academic scores, be in shape and be in good standing," he said.

"The academy chooses the recipients from the congressional appointments. Each congressman can choose one candidate, and then the academy chooses who they want from there," Cooper said.

Cooper said he hopes to receive the best education he can possibly get and is looking forward to the many opportunities that being a part of the academy will offer him.

"When my family found out that I had received this award, they went crazy," he said. "No one else in my family has ever got a high honor like this."

Cooper said different aspects of the military have always been a part of his life.

"It's been a family thing, I suppose. I have a lot of family members in the military. My dad wasn't, but my grandfather and a lot of my uncles were. Not all of them went to the Air Force, though — some went to the Army and Navy," Cooper said.

Dancing won't stop for Lawrence band

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

People need some fruit in their diets.

About 150 people skipped the toast and went straight for the deliciously sweet, tangy sounds of Mango Jam Thursday night at Snookie's Bar.

The Minneapolis, Minn., quintet won over the crowd early in the show, and the dancing didn't stop until 2 a.m.

Bassist/vocalist/lyricist Jason Bush, guitarist/vocalist John Herchert, drummer Bret Erickson, percussionist Geoff Pretnar and keyboardist/vocalist Brian Kopp treated fans to a night of bluesy, jazzy, improvisational space-folk rock with a touch of reggae in the mix.

Mango Jam, which has begun to play regularly in Lawrence, made its first-ever appearance in Manhattan en route to a Friday night performance at the Bottleneck.

The crowd members seemed to be pleased they made the stopover.

"I love them," Doug Dinkle, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said. "This is the closest Manhattan will probably ever get to seeing somebody like Phish."

Dinkle said he enjoyed Mango Jam because of the musicians.

"The thing I really like about them is the extra percussionist," Dinkle said. "I'm going to Kansas City to buy a set of bongos tomorrow."

As the rest of the band dropped off and began to tune their instruments, Erickson and Pretnar closed the first set with a percussion duet.

The last time such beating of bongos was heard within Manhattan city limits was on Oct. 22, 1993, when Domingo "Sunny" Ortiz and Widespread Panic shook the Wareham Opera House to its foundations.

Percussion was by no means Mango Jam's only strength.

The many layers of the band's music and the emphasis on instrumental elements rather than vocals are two characteristics that led to comparisons between Mango Jam and other improvisational neo-folk bands like Phish.

"I never even heard of Phish until three years ago," Bush said. "But I can kind of see how people say that."

Mango Jam, which has existed in its present form for more than five years, is clearly its own band with a unique sound and style and an ingratiating stage presence. The band has been touring steadily for more than four years, and its polished, professional performance manifested the band members' experience.

As one audience member who appeared to be enjoying the performance said, "They're fun."

Succinct as that assessment is, it really says a lot about the vibes emanating from onstage as Mango Jam performed. At times, the five musicians would almost face each other in a pseudo-sonic huddle — communicating non-verbally, each feeding off the others' energy.

"We've been out east, west, Colorado, everywhere," Bush said.

Mango Jam has now established a following in Lawrence, but Bush said it wasn't always that way.

"We tried to play the Bottleneck for about three years," Bush said. "We kept telling them, 'Let us play. We'll sell out your club.' And they were like, 'no way.' So finally they booked us, and there were 200 people outside in line who couldn't get in."

Despite the trouble they had convincing Lawrence that they were for real, Mango Jam is no stranger to performing with big-name acts.

Besides opening for Blues Traveler in their hometown of Minneapolis, Mango Jam actually had Grammy winner Sheryl Crow open for them about a year back.

"The record people knew we could draw 1,000 people in Minneapolis, so they had Sheryl Crow open for us just to get her some exposure," Bush said. "She was so good we didn't know what we were going to do to follow her."

Modesty aside, more than one person came up to Mango Jam and asked them to return to Manhattan. The band seemed receptive to the idea.

Until then, you may want to check out one of the band's two compact discs. Although it won't be the same as a live performance, it might tide you over until the next live serving of Mango Jam.

Michael Sims, lithographer, talks during the opening of the Lawrence Lithography Workshop show Friday evening at the Strecker Gallery. The show consists of lithographs printed by Sims and will be at the Strecker Gallery until March 30.

Exhibit explains art form

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Confusion on the part of the public concerning the difference between prints and lithographs is part of the inspiration for a new exhibit at Strecker Gallery.

Michael Sims, owner of the Lawrence Lithography Workshop, which he founded in 1979, brought nearly 40 examples of lithography from his workshop for the exhibit, which runs through March.

Sims said he runs one of the only private print shops in a four-state area. Most print shops are in Chicago, New York and Los Angeles, he said.

Some universities run their own printing facilities, but professional artists aren't allowed to use them, he said.

Sims lectured on the process of lithography and its differences with other styles of printmaking in a gallery talk Friday in Willard Hall.

REVIEW

Many people don't know a lithograph is the culmination of months of work by the artist and a lithography staff, while a print could be a fine picture of an existing work of art, sometimes sold in hundreds of editions.

A lithograph takes a lot of time and work and is very expensive, thereby limiting the number of prints it is possible to take, Sims said.

He said a reproduction print is a commercial device, which is not based on how much labor and craft go into it.

Sims said nothing in his shop is a reproduction, but rather is original art.

The process of lithography includes creating the art on a fine limestone block with a greasy crayon, adding water, which adheres to the non-greasy surfaces, and then placing greasy ink onto the greasy areas. Each color must be printed separately.

Sims said it was easiest to create the image but hardest to get it to print correctly.

He said to get an edition of 100 prints, he might make 150 or 200 to get them right.

Sims includes a 10-percent waste factor per color per print.

Fine art prints, such as lithographs, usually include the number of the print near the artist's signature.

Sims said the number doesn't mean

City elections have big effect on students

Registering to vote is like a pesky errand you never get around to.

Imagine property taxes in Manhattan going up 15 percent..

Imagine no parking on the streets surrounding campus from 6 a.m. until 6 p.m

Imagine another 1-cent sales tax increase.

Imagine a jail being built next to an elementary school.

Imagine even more construction.

Imagine what could happen if you don't register to vote before March 20.

Registering to vote is like a pesky errand you never get around to.

And when the elections come and go, you chide yourself for forgetting about it, but you tell yourself no harm was really done.

You need to register to vote.

You need to vote.

You need to tell your organizations to vote.

Residence hall assistants should take all their residents out together. Greek houses need to go out in droves.

Student senators should call their constituents — yes, all of them — and remind them to vote. Departments should ask if their employees are registered.

Because if 17,000 of us forget to vote, you can imagine anything you want.

And it just might come true.

Studies of the human body may find causes for homosexuality

Is biology to blame for my being gay?

Is there a genetic reason for my emotional and physical attraction to men? Is it based on brain chemistry? Is my brain hardwired this way?

As I have stated in a previous column, I don't pretend to be a scientific expert. I am just an interested layperson with some subjective insight into the subject of homosexuality.

But as I understand it, there is a growing body of scientific evidence that seems to suggest that there IS a biological component to same-gender attraction and behavior.

Here are a few of these areas that are being studied now:

BRAIN DIFFERENCES

Recent research has demonstrated that the brains of men and women are different in some surprising ways. It has been suggested that women have greater connectivity between the two halves of their brain, as a result of a thicker corpus callosum — the brain tissue that links the two halves together.

It is this greater connectivity that has been suggested as the cause of greater intuitiveness and creativity in women.

This same thickening has been demonstrated to exist in the brains of gay men, suggesting that the brains of men like myself are probably more like women's brains in function than men's.

Another brain difference has been found in the hypothalamus — a part of the brain that influences sexual behavior and sexual aggression.

Males tend to have much larger cell structures in certain parts of the hypothalamus, while females tend to have smaller cell structures.

And again, studies of the hypothalami in homosexual men have found that the smaller, female-like cell structures are present.

This would seem to suggest that homosexual behavior is, in part, influenced by biology. In essence, parts of my brain, as a homosexual male, are hardwired as if I were female.

This is not to say that I wish to BE a female — that is the realm of gender identity, as opposed to sexual orientation, and a topic for another column.

Instead, it merely suggests that parts of the brain that delineate male and female behavior patterns in the brain are not so clearly defined in some.

Of course, this research is by no means conclusive. Questions of causality are not answered — are brain differences between males and females inborn, or are they socially constructed?

Is it possible that homosexual behavior or upbringing causes these brain differences to develop?

And do brain differences exist in the case of lesbians, as opposed to heterosexual women?

This research makes it appear that there probably is a link between homosexuality and biology, and that further study is needed.

TWIN STUDIES

One of the more interesting recent studies of homosexuality and biology has been in the area of twin studies.

It seems that in the case of identical twins, if one is homosexual, then the other has more than a 50-percent probability of being homosexual.

This is statistically significant, especially since fraternal twins and non-twin siblings have much lower probabilities of being homosexual.

Since identical twins share identical genetic codes, the suggestion is that even if homosexuality isn't caused exclusively by genetics, there's a strong possibility of there being a genetic component that leads to the development of homosexuality.

Of course, these studies are also not conclusive. One area in which they lack is the study of similar environmental factors twins share. What role did environment have in shaping the similar sexual orientations?

IN UTERO DEVELOPMENT

Another area of debate that has arisen lately is the suggestion that hormonal influences on a developing fetus may influence sexual orientation in later life.

It is known that during early pregnancy, certain hormones must be released at certain times by the mother for the fetus to develop properly.

Some studies have suggested that certain hormones, either released in excess or in quantities too small will affect the forming brain in the fetus. These developing brain structures may very well influence the fetus' sexual development.

A recent study found that when pregnant mothers were given certain drug, they were statistically more likely to have daughters who grow up to be lesbian. Discovering whether this is so will require further study, but it seems to support the suggestion that an adult's sexual identity may have been shaped while that person was still in utero.

Whether or not biology actually CAUSES homosexuality is still up for debate, and it is a debate that will probably go on for a long, long time.

My personal opinion is that there is probably a confluence of factors, biological, genetic and environmental, that come together to shape sexual orientation.

In the face of this growing body of evidence, the continuing assertion that homosexuality is a chosen orientation is not very credible.

Frankly, I think I was born this way.

Why unlock doors now?

Dear editor,

As many of you have undoubtedly heard, Haymaker Hall's Hall Governing Board decided last semester that it was in the best interest of the students living in the hall to lock the front doors 24 hours a day. This decision was widely challenged and took up much space in letters and articles in the Collegian.

The reasoning for the decision was said to be the safety and security of the residents. What has changed? Are the students no longer the concern of this governing body? These questions come to mind in light of the fact that the front doors to Haymaker have once again been unlocked. The convenience to the students was not enough of a reason to unlock the doors several months ago, so why now?

I was told by the president of Haymaker HGB that the doors were unlocked so that the Department of Housing and Dining Services would install the Validine system on the doors between Haymaker and Derby. I find this argument ridiculous. There was a policy in place to protect the students that was inconvenient. Now, the HGB has opted to make it more convenient. Kudos. Except for the fact that the reason will, in the long run, make it more inconvenient than before.

I feel that HGB should have either acted when the students asked for the doors to be unlocked the first time, or kept its nose out later. I thank them for the fleeting convenience but hope they realize they have not served their constituents to the best of their ability. I hope SGA and all of the other campus bodies will learn from the mistakes of Haymaker's HGB and will actually strive to serve their members, not use their safety as a pawn in some game of chess with the departments of this University.

▶ PARKING

Appeals Board lacks reason

Dear editor,

A friend of mine, Chris Hubener, recently went before the Parking Citations Appeals Board to appeal a ticket. Chris was charged for not properly displaying his parking permit from his rearview mirror. The problem was that recently his mirror had come unattached from the windshield, and he hadn't found the time to fix his mirror. So, Chris laid his parking permit on the dashboard in clear sight.

The Appeals board denied his request, even though Chris had purchased a permit and was not parked illegally. The Board's rationale was, "A rule has been broken, therefore you must pay, no matter what!" Well, Parking Services, what if a rule you have made is unreasonable? What's the point? Who do we talk to when a valid argument can be made that a rule is a bad one?

I urge you, the Collegian, to publicize the upcoming open forums with Parking Services again. I would like to hear a response to this question and a few others that reasonable students may have to ask.

Thank you.

Front page needs real news

Dear editor,

Ok, folks. Lets get something straight. I'm really tired of picking up the Collegian every day to see a front page story of someone whining about how life is unfair. Take it elsewhere.

If your life sucks, don't tell people and expect them to do something about it. Life is what you make of it. And on the front page even? Thank God I get the Kansas City Star; otherwise, I'd think that the only news concerning me was someone blaming the late night traffic for racism.

We've got 14,000 Marines in Somalia and K-State students with projects aboard a space shuttle, and the front-page story is about racism. I'm sorry, but I was always taught that the front page was for important news, which concerned everyone. I realize that while racism is not right, it can never be totally abolished.

In the meantime, let's see some of the great accomplishments that are taking place on our campus and in our country. If someone not familiar with our campus were to read any Collegian from the past few weeks, they would probably think that K-State is just a bunch of redneck hicks who hate and discriminate against everyone. Fortunately, I believe that this is not the case.

▶ UNION

Don't forget Union catering

Dear editor,

I doubt many people read the article in the Collegian on Tuesday, Feb. 28, on catering and banquet services available in the area, but to those of you who did read it, I'd like to point out a major oversight on the part of the Collegian reporter. What about the K-State Union?

As many already know, the Union food service is under a serious threat of contract management. This lack of information about their services is one of the causes for their lack of revenue. The K-State Union is not allowed to advertise off campus and must rely on word-of-mouth and publicity for their advertising.

Many people don't know about the Union's catering services or the fact that they are open to all people. The K-State Union has developed a reputation for customized service and menus and decorating and offers the largest room capacities. The largest function it can handle in one room is 1,100 people. Ask the College of Journalism and Mass Communications to verify that — it has the largest annual event for Kansas Scholastic Press in that very room, consistently maxing it out every year.

Did anyone know that the K-State Union Food Service catered the Bramlage Coliseum Gala for 2,000 on the concourse of Bramlage? Did you know they annually cater the Friends of the Library with a custom menu on full china in Farrell Library?

It's no wonder the Union Food Service is in trouble. How can they be expected to support the students and be competitive when the students won't support them?

Katy Vinson
senior in secondary education and former catering manager of the K-State Union

Double standard used to define life before birth

I am constantly amazed by the contradictory messages sent by multiple groups and the government. During this session of the Kansas Legislature, there will be several bills regarding the definition of life before birth. Among them is Senate Bill 16.

This bill reads, "Injury to a pregnant woman is injury to a pregnant woman by a person other than the pregnant woman in the commission of a felony causing the pregnant woman to suffer a miscarriage as a result of that injury."

It also reads, "Injury to a pregnant woman is a severity level 4, personal felony."

A translation of this mumbo-jumbo would be if someone harms a pregnant woman and causes her to have a miscarriage, criminal charges could be filed against that person.

The inconsistency of this is that a woman still has the legal option to have an abortion.

The definitions of abortion and miscarriage from Webster's Dictionary are, "The premature expulsion of a fetus from the womb."

Why does a woman have the right to abort her unborn child, but it is a crime for someone else to cause a miscarriage?

If the fetus is a human being in an automobile accident, then it should be treated as such when a woman chooses to have an abortion, as well.

Why are there so many double standards within the abortion issue?

Another example of the same insane rhetoric surrounding the abortion issue is the fact that legally men have no role in the decision to have an abortion.

I wouldn't find this illogical, if a man were not then held responsible for supporting that child for the next 18 years.

Maybe we should develop a system through which a man can terminate his responsibility to a child. This system would allow a man the same "RIGHT TO CONTROL HIS BODY," as is currently given to women throughout the United States.

However, because we take privacy and personal rights so seriously, we often forget those who cannot speak for themselves.

This legal process for a man would cost about $300 to $400, roughly the same amount as an abortion. This would provide for equal protection to both men and women in the decision to have a child.

Currently, we expect men to control their bodies if they don't want children.

The bill before the Kansas Legislature suggests that attackers should control their actions in regard to pregnant women.

Why is it that we expect so little control from women?

Are we incapable of controlling our bodies before we get pregnant?

Some might say that these are unwanted pregnancies that people tried to avoid, but shoplifters who get caught aren't allowed special latitude if they tried to avoid getting caught.

If you're willing to take the risk, then you should be willing to take responsibility for the action.

When I was in high school, I would sneak out after curfew and go to a friend's house, but when I was caught, I didn't look at my parents and say, "but I tried not to get caught."

Had I said that, my parents probably would have laughed hysterically. That thought process is so irrational it isn't funny.

However, because we take privacy and personal rights so seriously, we often forget those who cannot speak for themselves.

We only see people who can say that their rights are being violated.

Isn't it time we see the irrational rhetoric produced by leftist groups and the government?

Speak for those who cannot be heard.

Higher standards are hard to find in the good old U.S.A. these days, but it is time we look past the "double speak" and see how lives are affected every day.

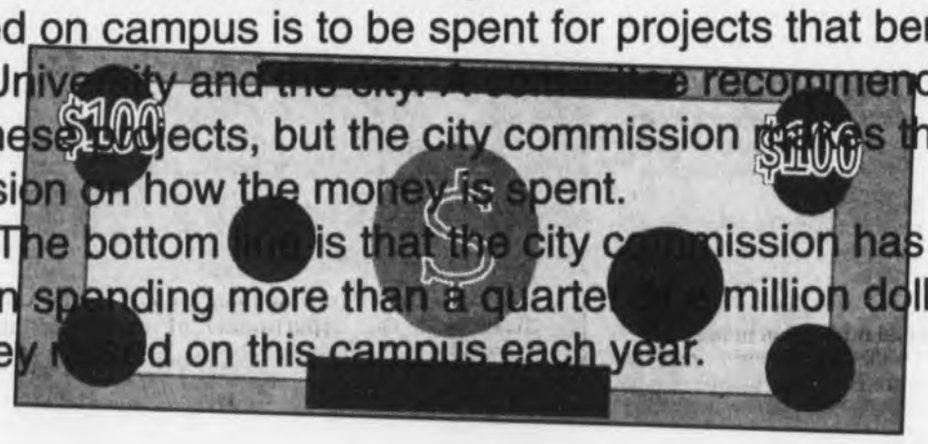
The 1995 Manhattan city commission election

Why you should VOTE

■Campus Safety



The city has the power to improve sidewalks, lighting and streets in the city and around campus. Part of the tax money raised on campus is supposed to be used to add bike paths and emergency access to campus in 1996. The city also plans to add lighting around the perimeter of campus and a traffic signal at College and Kimball avenues.

■Annexation &Taxes

The city of Manhattan was annexed by the city in July. City taxes now apply to purchases made on campus. Students who live on campus can vote in city elections for the first time.

Under the annexation agreement with K-State, money raised on campus is to be spent for projects that benefit both the University and the city. A committee recommends ideas for these projects, but the city commission makes the final decision on how the money is spent.

The bottom line is that the city commission has the final say in spending more than a quarter of a million dollars of tax money raised on this campus each year.

■Student Housing

The commission has some control over building codes. Inspections of rental property are not mandatory in Manhattan. The renter or landlord must request an inspection. The commission could change this.

■ Transportation

If you are interested in a public-transportation system, the city commission would be the group that could create one. The commission also controls parking ordinances.

Where can students register to vote?

Last day to register is March 20th.

General election will be on April 4th.

To register in Manhattan, you need to be 18 years old or older and have been a resident for six months. You can register at any one of these locations:

Dillons Stores, Manhattan High School, Manhattan Public Library, Riley County Health Department, SGA Office in the K-State Union.

The candidates

Who are these guys

The following six candidates will compete for the three available city commission seats in the April 4 general election. There are two seats open for four-year terms, and one seat is open for a two-year term.

Steve Hall

Age: 53

Occupation: Co-owner of Office World

Goals: "I support and will continue to support open government, accountability and citizen participation in local government."

Edward Horne

Age: 59

Occupation: Attorney at Kansas Farm Bureau

Goals: "I am concerned about maintaining our local economy, especially with the downsizing of Fort Riley. It will affect everybody, including students with part-time jobs." I'm very interested in the Manhattan Public Library expansion project. I'd like to see that come to a completion for the community and students to use it."

Justin Kastner

Age: 19

Occupation: K-State Student

Goals: "I want to get a four-year term. When offices change April 18, I would make a quick transition so I could be a contributing member as soon as possible. I am well-informed, can make decisions and communicate to the public."

Mike Manning

Age: 43

Occupation: Branch manager at Household Finance

Goals: "To provide participatory representation of the city and citizens at large. To perpetuate quality growth, lower taxation, improve relations with neighboring communities and perpetuate the quality of life for the citizens of Manhattan.

Lex Pearson

Age: 32

Occupation: House painter

Goals: "I just want to try and use common sense, work for the people and bring businesses to Manhattan. I want everything."

Bruce Snead

Age: 43

Occupation: State Extension specialist at K-State

Goals: "Work for policies and projects that create maximum economic quality of life benefits for Manhattan. Seek common-sense solutions to problems that will represent the interests and input of our citizens."

Poor 2nd-half shooting loses game; Cats finish last in the Big Eight

PHILL SPIKER

K-State ended the regular season the same way it started it — with a loss.

The Cats closed out the 1994-95 regular season with a 70-51 loss to the Colorado Buffaloes Saturday afternoon in Bramlage Coliseum.

Colorado 70
K-State 51

The Colorado victory guaranteed the Cats eighth place in the conference — a place the Cats haven't been in since the 1990-91 season.

The loss also snapped the Buffaloes' 30-game losing streak in Manhattan. The Buffs hadn't won a game in Manhattan since 1964.

Colorado senior guard Donnie Boyce said finally breaking the streak wasn't all that important to him.

"Everywhere we go it's like 20 years or something," Boyce said. "Any victory is a big victory for us."

Even though breaking a 30-year-old streak wasn't important to Boyce, K-State coach Tom Asbury said Boyce was an important factor when it came to rebounding.

"We didn't have anybody that matched up real well with keeping Donnie Boyce off the boards," Asbury said.

"He kind of did to us what Winfield of Missouri did to us — he really hurt us on the offensive boards."

Boyce did hurt the Cats on the boards, pulling down a career-high 18 rebounds.

But it wasn't just Boyce. Asbury said Colorado just did an all-around good job of rebounding against the Cats.

"We defended pretty well. We just didn't keep them off the boards," Asbury said.

"They would take shots and miss and go get the rebound for big spurts in the second half."

In the first half, the Cats jumped out to a 5-0 lead, but Colorado jumped back to tie the game at five when Boyce grabbed a rebound and put it back in for two at the 17:21 mark.

K-State and Colorado would switch leads until the Cats went on a 13-0 run that extended their lead 26-19. The Cats would lead by a much as nine when Belvis Noland connected on a trey from the right side at the 3:42 mark. But the Buffs would close the half, going on a 7-2 run that pulled them within four points at the intermission.

"We let them back into it. We made some bad decisions," Asbury said.

The Cats had a chance to extend the lead, but a Belvis Noland finger-roll layup rimmed off at the buzzer.

This gave the Bramlage crowd a hint of what was in store for the Cats in the second half.

At the beginning of the second half, Colorado junior guard Keith Higgins connected on two consecutive three-point bombs, which put the Buffs in the lead until Noland drained one of his four treys to put the Cats up 36-35.

The Cats led the game only once more.

Colorado went on an 18-3 run that started at the 4:36 mark to put the game out of reach.

Despite the larger losing margin, Asbury said the game in Manhattan was completely different than the one in Boulder.

"It was a completely different game than in Boulder because we played hard — we just played very, very poorly in particular in the second half," Asbury said.

"The difference in the game was we absolutely couldn't buy a basket."

Freshman guard Mark Young said once the shots stopped falling, he started thinking that it was going to be one of those games.

"Once we started missing a couple of times, we got to thinking in the back of our heads that this is one of those nights where we might not be hitting nothing," Young said.

"We took good shots. They just wouldn't go in."

Colorado was led by Mack Tuck's 17 points. Boyce poured in 16, and Keith Higgins had 12.

Noland led the Cats with 20 points on 7-of-24 shooting. Tyrone Davis had 13.

Junior guard Elliot Hatcher had one of his poorest shooting performances while at K-State. Hatcher only managed two points on 0-for-12 shooting from the field.

Asbury said Hatcher's poor shooting was hard to explain.

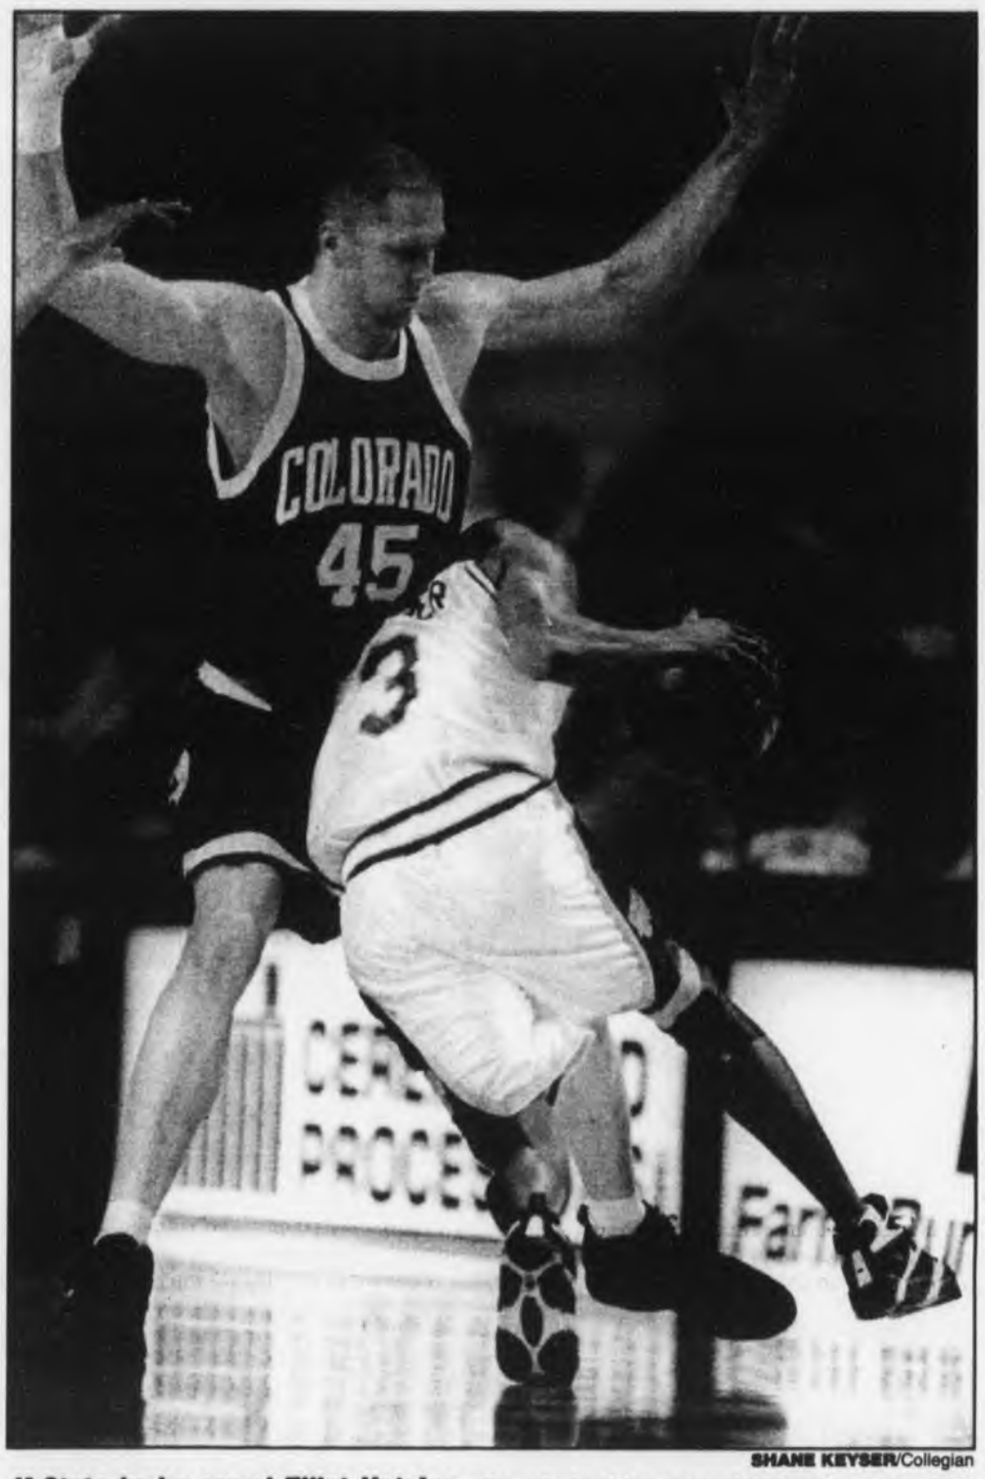
"He was sick, but I don't think that explains it," Asbury said. "I don't imagine he's had too many games when he goes 0 for 12."

Senior forward Demond Davis returned to action but only played seven minutes.

"I think he will be ready by next week. He won't be 100 percent by the Big Eight Tournament, but he might play some substantial minutes for us," Asbury said.

"I'm guessing maybe he may play 20 minutes," he said.

Davis said his condition improves daily.



"I'm just taking it day by day. I can tell it's getting better every day."

Despite losing by 19 at home, Asbury said the Cats' effort was good.

"I wasn't disappointed with our effort. It's just tough going out with a loss like that at home."

Even though the Buffs broke their 30-game losing streak in Manhattan, Young said this game isn't the low point in the season.

"The low point may be next week."

Cats' poor shooting does them in again

The movers have left, the renovations are complete, and Willie Wildcat has taken residence in his new Purple Palace — the Big Eight Conference cellar.

K-State's 70-51 loss to Colorado on Saturday guaranteed the Cats a spot in the Big Eight basement — a place they haven't visited since the 1990-91 season.

A win on Saturday against Colorado could have pushed the Cats as high as sixth place in the conference, but a horrendous second half against the Buffaloes put K-State out of contention.

The Cats took a four-point halftime lead into the locker room before they fell apart after intermission.

In the second half, K-State missed 36 of its 42 field-goal attempts, 15 of its 17 three-point tries and seven of 11 from the free-throw line.

Cat coach Tom Asbury joked after the game about his team's poor second-half shooting.

"We couldn't throw one in the ocean," Asbury said. "We were in a complete coma offensively."

The offensive shooting woes were led by junior guard Elliot Hatcher, who missed all 12 of his shots from the field.

Asbury was not disappointed with Hatcher's shot selection.

"He probably had 11 good shots," Asbury said.

Asbury blamed the poor shooting on talent.

"Any of you that have followed us know that we're not blessed with the world's greatest shooters," he said.

He said recruiting is key in overcoming this poor shooting.

"We've just got to find people that can shoot the ball."

Asbury said effort had nothing to do with the 14-percent shooting half.

"We played hard. We just played very, very poorly," he said.

Junior forward Belvis Noland, who was coming off a career 31-point performance on Wednesday, led the Cats with 20 points, but even he was not immune to the poor shooting that plagued the team.

Noland missed 17 of 24 from the field, including missing 11 of 15 from three-point range.

The team's 26.4-percent shooting on the game established a new season low.

More than that, the Cats' nightmarish shooting ended the longest current losing streak in the Big Eight.

Saturday's win snapped Colorado's 30-game drought in Manhattan, and now every Big Eight team has won at Bramlage Coliseum.

Asbury said it wasn't what Colorado did to disrupt the Cats, but it was his team that beat itself.

"We couldn't have beat anyone the way we shot it," Asbury said.

Freshman guard Mark Young said he was very disappointed about finishing last.

"It hurts a lot because everybody picked us to finish last," Young said, "and that's what happened."

SALINA — Stacy Coffey scored 16 points, including three baskets from three-point range, as Oklahoma State defeated K-State 69-59 Saturday in the Big Eight Women's Basketball tournament.

Oklahoma State (17-10) held K-State (14-13) without a field goal early in the game as part of a 17-4 run that gave the Cowgirls a 25-10 lead with 6:17 to go in the half.

During the run, Coffey scored nine of her 13 first-half points, and Gina Shaterkina added four.

Oklahoma State, the tournament's fourth seed, built a 35-16 halftime lead, but Brit Jacobson led a second-half K-State comeback.

Jacobson scored nine of her 24 points in a 19-8 run that cut Oklahoma State's lead to seven. Shanele Stires threw in eight of the Wildcats' first 10 points and finished with 24.

Cats spanked by Northern Iowa

The Northern Iowa Panthers scored early and often.

The K-State Wildcats did not.

N. Iowa 16
K-State 5

Behind a 16-run, 16-hit performance, the Panthers thrashed the Cats 16-5 in a bitterly cold baseball game Sunday at Frank Myers Field.

Wildcat coach Mike Clark, whose team fell to 4-4, said his team was unprepared for Northern Iowa.

"I was just disappointed that we didn't show up ready to play," Clark said.

The Panthers started the scoring with a two spot in the top of the second inning, followed by three more runs in the third.

By the third time the Wildcats stepped to the plate for an inning, they were already down five runs.

The Cats were able to cut the Panther lead to two with a mini-rally in the fourth inning, but three more Northern Iowa runs in the sixth and five more in the seventh put the Cats down and out.

K-State ace starter sophomore Eric Yanz was knocked out of the game after five innings, in which he gave up eight runs and walked five Panther batters.

Yanz's relief, junior Marc Lowery, didn't fare much better, giving up five earned runs in less than two innings.

Clark said his team's pitching problems boiled down to fundamentals.

"We didn't throw strikes," Clark said. "We had very poor execution."

That lack of execution carried over onto the offensive side, as the Cats could only manage five hits off Panther starter junior Steve Beard.

Senior relief pitcher Jon Goerish came in for Beard in the seventh inning and pitched three hitless innings of relief for his first save.

Clark said his team was not mentally ready to play Northern Iowa Sunday.

"They had something on their minds other than baseball," Clark said.

Clark said he is hoping his team can learn from their mistakes against Northern Iowa and be better prepared for Benedictine College on Wednesday.

"Maybe you've got to get your ears burned one time in order to make it," Clark said.

Animal shelter gets helping hand

Three little girls and their parents walk down the row of cages filled with dogs at the Manhattan Animal Shelter in search of a new family pet.

Mitzi Schulte, holding her youngest daughter by the hand, tries to mediate a discussion on which of the dogs to choose.

"Which one do you want?" she asks, as the girls poke their hands through a pen of six puppies.

Schulte said her daughters have been wanting a pet for a little more than a year, but they wanted to wait until after they moved.

They came to the shelter in the hope they could adopt an animal that would otherwise be put to sleep.

The Schulte family came to the shelter on Adopt-A-Pet Day, sponsored by the K-State PreVet Club.

Renee Rankin, community service chair for the PreVet Club, said the club decided to sponsor this activity to help both the Manhattan Animal Shelter and the animals there.

"We wanted to advertise the animal shelter and the animals they have there," Rankin, senior in pre-veterinary medicine, said. "We also wanted to help get the animals adopted, because there are so many that have to be put to sleep."

The Manhattan Animal Shelter received 1,253 dogs last year, 24 percent of which were euthanized.

The shelter received 777 cats, and 47 percent of those were euthanized.

The Pre-Vet Club arranged for several special perks for people who adopted a dog or cat Sunday, Rankin said.

Four local veterinary clinics offered 25-percent discounts for vaccinations and health tests. A local grooming shop offered free pet grooming and 25 percent off pet supplies. Subway restaurants offered free sandwiches to people who adopted pets Sunday.

Rankin said there is a $15 adoption fee. There is also a $25 refundable deposit for spaying and neutering the animal, and a $10 refundable deposit for rabies vaccination for animals older than four months old, Rankin said.

Three cats and 10 dogs were adopted yesterday, Rankin said. This is the first year for Adopt-A Pet, but the PreVet Club hopes to make it an annual event.

The Schulte family adopted the eighth dog of the day. After much deliberation, they picked out a 5-week-old, black, Labrador-mix puppy.

One of the little girls smiled as she swung a bag of dog food by her side.

"This is what we get to feed the puppy," she said.

Arguing over who was going to get to hold the puppy, the family filed out of the building

Car workshops will cover basics

DEBBIE QILL
Collegian

Student Governing Association and the student group Fearless are taking an active role in helping students to be safer and less dependent on the kindness of strangers.

Car maintenance workshops will be at 6 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday at Manhattan Vocational Technical School.

The workshops will cover the basics of car maintenance, such as checking and adding oil, jump starts, tire changes and general automobile maintenance.

Student SENATE

Ashley Weekly, freshman in public relations, said the workshops were scheduled before spring break to help prepare people who would be driving somewhere for break, especially women.

"If a woman was driving on I-70, got a flat tire, and didn't know how to change it, she would have to depend on someone nice to come along and help her," Weekly said. "Knowing even a little about how to take care of your car will make you more independent and help with personal safety, too.

"Basically, we're trying to teach awareness so that someone won't take advantage of you in a situation," Weekly said.

The SGA Parking and Campus Safety Committee worked in conjunction with Fearless to organize the workshops. A table in the Union on Tuesday and Thursday will have general information about highway, car and personal safety, Weekly said.

Philip Mudd, fifth-year architectural engineering student, said group members felt there was a definite need for the workshops.

"It's amazing how many people don't even have spare tires. My girlfriend's dad showed her how to check the oil on her car, but, when it got low, she had no idea how to put more in," he said.

Mike Clausner, fifth-year student in architectural engineering and workshop coordinator, said students could attend either one of the sessions because the format would be similar each day.

"The two instructors are state-certified auto mechanics from Manhattan Vo-Tech. They have things they want to go over for sure and then will answer any questions that people might have," he said.

Weekly said it was the first time for such an event on campus.

"If we get a good turnout and it's successful, we'll try to offer it again," she said.

'Bloody Sunday' remembered by 2,000 marchers in Selma

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SELMA, Ala. — Led by four black members of Congress, about 2,000 marchers retraced a historic path across a bridge to mark the 30th anniversary of the "Bloody Sunday" voting-rights march.

The marchers included Jesse Jackson, Coretta Scott King, Martin Luther King III and Rep. John Lewis, who was beaten bloody by troopers during the first march.

On March 7, 1965, white lawmen beat and gassed hundreds of marchers trying to cross Edmund Pettus Bridge. Footage of the beatings ran on national television, sparking outrage and leading to passage of the landmark Voting Rights Act, which outlawed literacy tests in many Southern states.

Two weeks later, Martin Luther King Jr. led an even bigger march all the way to the steps of the state Capitol in Montgomery.

On Sunday, a cold rain fell on marchers gathering outside the National Voting Rights Institute to walk once again across the bridge named for a Confederate general. The group also planned to make the 54-mile journey to Montgomery for a rally on Saturday. About 100 will walk.

"It's gratifying to see all the changes that have occurred and to see the number of black registered voters and black elected officials in the state of Alabama," Lewis, a Georgia Democrat, said.

Still, there was little sense that the battle has been won.

"Once again, we're having to fight for our voting rights," said the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"The courts are invalidating congressional districts ostensibly because of the shape of the district, but it's really the shade of the representative they're concerned about," Lowery said.

Speaker urges students to get on information highway

MELISSA HOYT
Collegian

Twenty-three years of experience in the digital highway industry was brought to K-State students in a Kansas Communications Arts Alliance lecture Friday in the Willard Art Gallery.

Greg Carlile, president of Spinnaker Communications, talked to students about not becoming roadkill on the digital highway.

"I remember my first experience with this type of communications. I was 10 years old, and when I went to school, there was a television in the front of the room," Carlile said.

Carlile said his teacher had brought her own television to school so her students could watch history in the making.

"The country stopped when we watched John Glenn in his funny-looking space suit get into his capsule and blast into space," Carlile said.

This was the first exposure for Carlile in the technology industry.

"I have seen the changes in the industry," Carlile said. "The communications industry has gone through an electronic metamorphosis."

Carlile said the industry and the information available are changing business, social and economic values.

"Information is changing the very root of how we think," he said.

The fundamental information trends in management are becoming important, Carlile said.

"There are six important fundamental trends: content, decentralization, disintermediation, interoperability, conversion and globalization," he said.

Content of the information that you have the ability to provide to your employers makes them more powerful and makes you more marketable, Carlile said.

"Access to the mainframes of computers used to be kept under the lock and key of men in white coats, but the PC has made it able to gain the same access as the men in the white coats," Carlile said.

Globalization has made all of this possible, and the Internet is the essence of it all, he said.

"It is fast becoming the way of life," Carlile said.

Carlile said students should have access to a computer.

"I recommend you get a computer or just have good access to one. Just make it second nature. Get on Internet and start cruising," he said.

Carlile compared the computer and information industry with the automobile industry at the turn of the century.

"Designers of cars worked with designers of highways and petrogasoline miners and developed the infrastructure that is in existence today," Carlile said. "We are the designers of the computer industry.

"We have to make it so people can move large amounts of information around," he said.

"If you are a user or a consumer, you will eventually become a user of a computer just as people have become users of the automobile."

Artwork inspired by Greek goddess

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

The Ambry Gallery, located in West Stadium, isn't a conventional gallery.

BOB McMANIS/Collegian

Sonya Paukune, graduate student in art emphasizing in ceramics, discusses her ceramics exhibit currently on display in the Ambry Gallery, which is located in West Stadium. Paukune's show runs through March 18.

You duck under a massive concrete beam, which neatly dissects the doorway, and head into a small, warm, white space.

You could say almost the same thing about artist Sonya Michelle Paukune's work, which is now on display by appointment at the Ambry.

Paukune, graduate student in art with an emphasis in ceramics, creates teapots and oversized vases with immense textural qualities and varied glazings.

The teapots, her newest work, stem from a conglomeration of creative ideas, principles and artistic techniques.

The teapots are inspired by the Greek goddess Artemis.

Paukune discussed her work at the Wednesday night opening reception of her new exhibit, "Visions of Vessels."

"I saw a special on PBS about Artemis, and she had all these orbs hanging on her body," Paukune said.

Orbs are sphere-like objects, which Artemis hung around her neck. Artemis is the virgin goddess of the hunt and the moon.

Paukune represents the goddess in her teapots by constructing them of orbs.

"If you look closely, you'll see full circles or half-circles that imitate the cycles of the moon," she said.

Paukune said she got most of her inspiration from the shrine to Artemis at Corfu, Greece. The whole exhibit is a symbolic representation of the temple.

The vases represent corner columns of the temple, and the teapots are representations of Artemis, which is indicative of the statues found at the temple.

There is an organic look to the teapots, but this is not accidental.

Paukune said she wanted the teapots and vases to appear as if they had come from the earth or had grown from something.

The teapots look very much like a clump of young bulbs ready to sprout.

The eye-catching texture of Paukune's work is created through a scraping process.

While still working with the clay, she will take the different pieces of the orbs and scrape them with a metal tool, creating flowing, expressive lines.

Paukune said her favorite pot was the "Teapot From the Temple of Corfu," the extraordinary metallic-blue and purplish mass of orbs bordering the far wall.

Most of the teapots are done in a traditional Japanese raku style.

"Raku is a low-fired pot in which you glaze a pot, let it sit for 24 hours, heat it up to about 1,800 degrees until it is glowing hot.

"Then it kind of has a transparency to it, and you pick it up out of the kiln and put it in a combustible material, such as sawdust or pine needles," Paukune said.

The smoke from the burning of the sawdust seeps into the cracks of the pot and creates a black look in parts of the piece, she said.

Big-band jazz returns; special guest musicians to perform at concert

STEPHANIE SWISHER
Collegian

Jazz lovers will get yet another chance to enjoy the sounds of big-band music.

K-State's Concert Jazz Ensemble will present a concert titled "C.J.E. & Friends" at 8 p.m. tonight at Union Forum Hall.

The concert will include a wide selection of big-band jazz music.

Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies, will direct the concert, which will include new arrangements of American songs and several original compositions composed by Wilson.

There will be several guest appearances at the concert, Wilson said.

Bill Lee of the International Association of Jazz Educators will be one of the guest pianists performing at the concert.

"Jazz is truly an American music," Lee said.

"I hope it is an esthetic experience for everyone."

Wilson said Bill McFarlin, trumpeter and noted band leader, will be playing a blues number with him.

A new arrangement of "The Band is Hot," a number played at K-State football games, will feature two great alto saxophone players from K-State, Wilson said.

Lucas Munce and Tim Orindgreff, senior in journalism and mass communications, will perform the funk version of the arrangement, Wilson said.

Seth Galitzer, junior in music education, will play his clarinet in the American premier of an arrangement written by Wilson for Eji Kitamura, one of Japan's foremost clarinet players, Wilson said.

Another highlight of the evening is the presentation of the Outstanding Soloist Award to the two student winners at the recent Kansas State University Jazz Festival, Wilson said.

Pianist Albert Smith of Wyandotte High School and bassist Sean Jackson, Manhattan High School senior, will perform an arrangement by Frank Foster titled "On the Road to Kansas State" with the Concert Jazz Ensemble. Foster is a Count Basie Orchestra leader and Grammy Award winner.

Jackson said he is excited to play with the band and is looking forward to his freshman year at K-State in the fall.

"Before Dennis Wilson came to K-State, the jazz program wasn't viewed as one of the better programs in the state," Jackson said. "I think it will take off with the help of Wilson."

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Disturbed reader should chill out

Dear Imposter,

Fake! Shyster! Foul Abductor! Who are you? You are obviously not the Cassandra we have always known and come to read in huddled groups that have far too many other things to be serious about.

I don't know what planet you come from to abduct our callous, callow and sometimes caring Cassandra, but we will have our revenge if you don't bring her back.

To the true Cassandra, we miss your spark.

Signed, Life Without Joy

Dear Life,

First, you all take me way too seriously. Drink, dance, have wild, passionate orgies on the president's front porch, but chill out.

Second, I am as I always have been: callous, callow and sometimes caring, but I don't take kindly to threats.

Local band's first release has passion, bite

Local band Ultimate Fake Book's first release, "Visitors from the Sky," is now available at The Wild Side and Bonepile Records and Discs.

If you like it hard, heavy and unpredictable, be ready to invest. UFB has an edge and a bite that is confrontational and alluring.

Bassist Nick Colby, guitarist Bill McShane and guitarist and vocalist Jeremy Pontow invaded Manhattan about three years ago as a band and as students, although school remained secondary to music.

Although the band had no formal lessons and its preference is just to rock and wing it, the band takes its music very seriously.

"We're really anal retentive about our music," Colby said. "It's eat, sleep and rock 'n' roll every day."

Recently they were joined by Brian O'Toole, a drummer from Iowa. His approach to music makes him well-bred for the band.

"I'd need some kind of music methadone clinic if I had to give up music," O'Toole said. "There must be some kind of defective gene in us that makes us love it more."

Their music reflects their passion. Pontow's vocals, although at times are distractingly screechy, elevate the music to what would be defined as a heavier medium than what they consider themselves.

"Some people say we're heavy, but it throws us for a loop," McShane said. "We want to evoke some emotion or response. We're definitely not a mosh band."

The band's philosophy is evident in its unconcentrated and real style.

"We just try to be ourselves," Colby said. "Every band wants to be different, but we won't resort to gimmicks. If we turn out to be like everyone else, that's OK, just as long as we we get there on our own."

The grinding blend of the mingling guitars and the unregimented thump dementia of the rhythm section weave a compelling texture to the music, especially in the title track, "Visitors from the Sky."

"We don't have any tattoos or much facial hair," Colby said. "If you try to be too progressive or weird, it doesn't get me off.

"We try to cut through all the bullshit," he said. "So much of it is image this and that. The whole thing for us is music."

Ultimate Fake Book has played at the Warehouse, opened for Mule at Snookie's Bar and Kill Creek at Berlin.

Livestock sale gives students experience

STACEY HAGER
Collegian

This semester's livestock sales and management class came to a close with the 18th annual Special "K" Edition Bull Sale on Friday night.

The sale included 58 bulls and six heifers that were raised on University farms and are part of the K-State teaching herd, said Dave Nichols, associate professor in animal science and industry.

The class, which includes 70 students, is responsible for the planning and production of the sale, Nichols said.

"The students do everything from clipping the cattle to the sale catalog to taking the pictures of the bulls," he said.

Students are assigned to various committees at the beginning of the semester, and they take hold and get things done, Miles McKee, professor in animal science and industry, said.

"Dave and I just stay out of the way and let the students do all the work," McKee said.

Nichols said the students are learning how to work together. They learn that everybody is important, from the refreshment committee to the photographers.

"We are fortunate to have the advantage of having the students," he said.

"If we didn't have their help, we would have to hire someone to do the job."

Linc Lunsway, junior in animal science and industry, said he didn't realize how much work was involved in getting ready for the sale.

"I learned that there is a heck of a lot of preparation that goes into a sale," he said.

Jeff Sleichter, senior in animal science and industry, said class members put in a lot of time outside the scheduled class period that the department does not see.

The class serves as a vital merchandising tool for the students, but the sale is also a benefit to them because the money goes back into the department, Nichols said.

"All the money from the sales goes right back to the animal science department to be used for computers and other things for the students," he said.

The sale total for this year was higher than last year, grossing $119,100, McKee said.

The overall average was $1,861 per head. The average on the 58 bulls was $1,759 per head, and the six heifers averaged $2,142 per head.

The highest-selling individual in a Special "K" sale was a Hereford bull in 1981. The bull sold for $12,500, McKee said.

Mike Floyd, senior in animal science and industry, said the sale provides excellent exposure to K-State and a chance to get quality cattle out into the beef industry.

Benefit helps fund library

Dr. Keith Wright, medical director for Hospice in Manhattan, said the biggest challenge is educating the families of the terminally ill.

"The family usually feels left out in the cold, and they feel so overwhelmed by the terminology," he said.

"People come to me with so many questions, and now I will be able to direct them to literature and a better understanding. The library will solve so many problems," Wright said.

Manhattan residents came together on Saturday night at the Wareham Opera House for a dinner benefiting the library. The benefit dinner was $50 a ticket, and all the money was donated to the library. Manhattan restaurants catered the event, and many students dedicated their time to help out.

"This is such a good cause, and I was very touched how the community has come together to support such a worthy project," said James Punohu, senior in hotel and restaurant management.

Punohu and other students helped tend bar and serve food at the benefit.

Rickel-McMillin said the library will have books, cassette tapes, videos and several computers.

The information will be in layman terms so the families won't feel like they're in a medical library. The information will be very easy to read and understand. Developers are working at getting the computer information on-line with K-State.

The library will be located on the second floor of the Saint Mary Hospital, and it will be open 24 hours a day. It will be staffed with one full-time librarian and other volunteers.

"When you are going through this type of situation, you have no concept of time, so we want it to be available to everyone all of the time," Rickel-McMillin said.

Horse trainers' dedication pays off at conference sale

Four afternoon sessions were included in the conference. The sessions included such topics as equine dentistry, uses of cooled semen and K-State's equine emergency room.

The conclusion of the conference was the KSU Consignment Horse Sale. This was the second year the sale was conducted in conjunction with the conference.

"K-State's horses used to be sold in conjunction with the Special K Edition Bull Sale. However, due to the few numbers of horses, we decided to open the sale to guest consigners and to highlight the horses from our training program during Horsemen's Conference," Arns said.

This year's sale included eight horses that were born and raised at K-State and an additional 19 head from consigners, he said.

Russ Mueller, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, said other schools were also invited to the sale.

"We attract other schools to come here and sell their horses because we have the facilities," he said.

Randel Raub, assistant professor in animal sciences and industry, said the horses representing K-State are a result of student's dedication and enthusiasm in the horse training and management class.

Matt Shackelford, junior in animal sciences and industry, said class members are assigned a horse they are responsible for training and riding throughout the semester during the sale.

"The class is pretty intensive. We spend four nights a week with our horses," Shackelford said.

Jimmy White, senior in animal sciences and industry, said they learn from the best instructors — the horses.

"If you are not doing it right, they'll let you know," White said.

Raub said the events leading up to this sale provide the students with an excellent learning opportunity.

"It is an opportunity that they have taken full advantage of and done so with great success," he said.

Garage decision to be made soon; bill would lower meter-fee increase purchase of a notebook computer for the Senate Chair.

NOW received $1,039 for advertising, printing and an honorarium for Sarah Weddington, one of the attorneys who tried Roe v. Wade before the Supreme Court.

A total of $1,920 was allocated for a notebook computer to be used by the Senate chair, vice chair and the secretary.

The Student Activities and Social Services Committee withdrew its bill requiring a student plebiscite vote on the parking garage in Memorial Stadium.

The bill was withdrawn because the decision will be made by the administration by April 1 in order for the proposal to be introduced to the Kansas Board of Regents.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said Senate wanted to know what the students thought, but there was no way to put together a campus election before the general election April 11 and 12.

In new business, a commendation for Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., was approved. Brownback was visiting K-State for the Big Twelve Leadership Conference on Saturday. The commendation passed on a voice vote.

A resolution supporting a less-radical increase in parking meter cost was introduced by John Riedel, business senator. Riedel and several other senators proposed increasing the cost from 25 cents per hour to 50 cents per hour instead of the Parking Council figure of 75 cents per hour.

Riedel said one reason the increase was needed was to make more money.

"I think people will be willing and able to pay 50 cents per hour," Riedel said.

The only meters that will be exempted from the increase will be the meters in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex parking lot, he said.

Twelve new meters will be installed immediately at the Rec Complex, Riedel said.

Michele Meier, business senator, said it costs about $1,000 to install a parking meter, and meters pay for themselves in two to three years.

Parking Council's intention is to greatly reduce the number of reserved stalls, Anderson said.

In 1988, Parking Services put in the meters and promised none of the stalls would be reserved parking, Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, said.

The Allocations Committee introduced a bill closing all the accounts that had money left in them at the end of last semester. Organizations cannot hold money over from one semester to the next without filing an appeal with the Allocations Committee.

Twenty-nine campus organizations will lose the money left in their accounts.

A letter was sent out, and three to four weeks were allowed for appeals to be filed and heard, Clouse said. Nine appeals were filed.

Amnesty International, the Multicultural Student Council and Native American Student Body were allowed to keep a portion or all of their money because speakers canceled and were rescheduled for this semester, Clouse said.

The money from the closed accounts will go into the reserves for contingencies account, bringing the total in that account to $24,000.

Two other bills received first readings.

The first bill simply combines all the changes made in the Educational Opportunity Fund Allocation Procedures into one bill.

The second bill changes the structure of Senate committees, so legislation must be brought out of committee whether the committee has taken any action on it or not. This bill would keep committees from being able to hold legislation and keep it from being debated and voted on by the whole Senate.

Final votes will be taken on this legislation at the next Senate meeting.

the order in which the work has been printed, but they are simply a curatorial device that printers employ to keep the prints in order.

After the lecture, attendees saw the firsthand products from Sims' workshop.

Among the artists were K-State locals Margo Kren, associate professor of art, Teresa Schmidt, assistant professor of art, Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton, Miriam Schapiro, Luis Jimenez, Roger Shimomura and Juane "Quick-To-See" Smith.

The work of Schapiro, splashy and color-filled; Layton, witty and fresh; and Smith, Southwest-inspired conglomerates of images; are not-to-miss highlights of the exhibit.

Each of these artists, with the exception of Layton, worked with Sims for nearly a week to create their prints.

The first part of the process involves getting acquainted with the artist.

"There's a lot of psychology involved in this process," Sims said.

"It can be intimidating for artists to leave their studios, so the work situation must be comfortable," he said.

open house with demonstrations and exhibits of current research on beef production, forage utilization and cattle-management topics.

"I enjoyed interacting with interesting people in the meat industry," said Brent Green, senior in animal sciences and industry. "I am a pork person, and the beef people are our allies, so we should learn to work together."

The final event of the day was the Annual Special K Bull Sale in Weber Arena. The sale, which was organized and facilitated by students in the sales management class, featured cattle bred at K-State.

"It is an educational opportunity for students, an opportunity to highlight K-State cattle and to sell animals to the producer," Kuhl said. "It puts an exclamation point to the end of the day's events."

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

▶ WOMEN'S HISTORY

Equality is for both men, women

HEATHER BALLEW
Collegian

Editors' note: This is the first in a series of articles about women in Kansas who have proven themselves as leaders.

Kassebaum

To Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., the women's movement is not just about equal rights and opportunities for women. It's about equality for all people.

"I don't think you set out to do something that just affects women," Kassebaum said.

As a young woman, Kassebaum said she never thought she would hold public office.

"I never did any of the things I initially thought of," she said. "I never thought of being active in politics myself.

"It was not a time when women's careers were burning issues," Kassebaum said. "And I don't necessarily think they should be today."

Kassebaum said when her children were little, she wouldn't have even considered running for office. But in 1978, her children were older, and she happened to be in the right time and place for a career in politics.

Although Kassebaum's father, Alfred Landon, was politically active as governor of Kansas and ran for president in 1936 on the Republican ticket, he discouraged his daughter from entering the same career.

"I tend to think he thought I was going to lose," she said.

But she didn't lose. In 1978, she was elected as Kansas delegate to the U.S. Senate and has been a senator ever since.

Kassebaum said she didn't set out in her career to help women advance their positions in society. What she did set out to do was be a good legislator who made good public policy.

"In the course of doing that, you hope you've provided some inspiration for young men and women to become involved in public affairs," she said.

Kassebaum said it is fun for her to see members of her staff go on and be involved in public affairs.

"It makes me feel old," she said.

But she said it is also very rewarding to know she has helped others get involved in their communities.

"I would give anyone the encouragement to be involved in community affairs," she said.

Kassebaum said a good way to become involved in community

▶ INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

$15 fee to go to student center

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Beginning fall 1995, K-State's international students may begin paying $15 more for tuition than the rest of the student body.

The money would be used to hire an additional clerical-staff member for the International Students Center. About 35 students and administrators met Monday evening in the center to discuss the $15 fee and its implications.

The request will be proposed to the Kansas Board of Regents in April. If passed, about 1,100 international students will pay $15 extra for fall 1995 tuition.

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said this was not the solution originally intended, but for the time being, it is the only viable solution.

"Finding a fiscal base where one does not already exist is difficult in these times," she said.

From 1986 to 1993, the number of international students at K-State rose 41 percent, Scott said. Two other Big Twelve schools in Texas have a similar fee.

William Richter, assistant provost for international programs, said even if the number of international students had not increased, the staff still would not be able to handle the workload because the Immigration and Naturalization Service requires more paperwork today than in the past.

The center employs three staff members and a graduate assistant.

Provost James Coffman said the center has three main needs.

JUNIOR OPERA

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

Nathan Dalhigren waits behind the scenes for his que to enter during the rehearsal of the "Fair Winds" opera. Fourth- and fifth-grade students at Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School were in charge of forming a production company that would write, compose and design its own opera.

Differences in people don't always mean racial differences, said Helen Dorfmeier, a fifth-grade student at Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School.

Helen is an actress for the Broadway Opera Company that was formed by Roger Gibson's fourth- and fifth-grade class with the help of Susanna Parker, the school's music teacher.

The students formed the production company as part of writing, composing and designing their own opera.

The finished product is "Fair Winds," an opera that was produced with a theme of differences in mind. The production will be performed at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Dorfmeier said that after rehearsing her lines and working on the production, she realized everyone has differences.

"And those differences are unique and can help everybody," she said.

Young minds have profound thoughts, and these thoughts were put into action by all 24 students working on the opera.

Each student played an important role in producing "Fair Winds." Sheena Nagaraja said the opera is largely self-produced by the students. This includes stage managers, directors, make-up, costumes, electricians, public relations and other positions.

Casey Devore, public relations, said the production has really big jobs, but all the jobs are equal.

Gibson said parts were chosen in an effort to challenge each child and were based on the individual's talent.

Intended results of the production included a sense of community in the classroom and allowing each child to have a moment in the spotlight, Gibson said.

SGA to sponsor forums to meter parking opinion

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Student Governing Association will sponsor two forums this week to inform and encourage students to voice an opinion about the proposed parking garage.

An informal forum will take place Wednesday in the Union courtyard, and a formal forum will be 5 p.m. Thursday at Lucky BrewGrille.

Michele Meier, business administration senator, said all 12 members of the Parking Task Force and Gerald Carter, University architect; John Lambert, associate director of public safety; and Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance; will be available to talk to students Wednesday.

Thursday's forum will be a question-answer session including Rawson; Dwain Archer, director of parking and fire safety; Darell Edie, chair of the University parking council; Jeff Peterson, student body president; and Meier.

"A lot of people have been complaining about the parking garage, and hopefully they will come out and get their questions answered," Meier said.

Meier said the main purpose of the forums is to inform the students.

Edie said he would like to inform the students of the Parking Task Force's decision to take the parking garage proposed placement back to architects.

The placement of the garage is now being considered, again, to possibly place it in the back portion of the Ramada parking lot, which is owned by K-State Foundation, north of St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center or Memorial Stadium, Edie said.

Also, students will receive more information about the 1996 expansion of Anderson Avenue at the forums, Edie said.

Race to boost tourism

Event will bring 7,500 competitors, fans to Manhattan

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

The World Championship Equine Endurance Race will be coming to Manhattan in 1996 and with it as many as 7,500 people.

"Estimating from recent World Championships, we expect 1,500 foreign visitors attached to teams, and we expect between 3,000 and 6,000 spectators to come to the event," said Christy Linders, organizing chair of the 1996 World Championships Endurance.

Dr. Earl Gaughan, assistant professor of equine surgery, said there will also be a number of dignitaries and political people at the championships.

The event will be Sept. 21-22, 1996, right after the 1996 Summer Olympics.

"The Summer Olympics are going to be in Atlanta," Gaughan said, "so there was great interest in having the World Championship Endurance in the United States.

"Every two years we have the World Championships. Right now endurance is not an Olympic sport, but it is likely to become one," he said.

The sport consists of a 100-mile race across natural obstacles and dramatically changing terrain in a test of speed and endurance ability of both horse and rider.

All of the horses have done a minimum of 800 to 1,000 miles and are experienced animals, Linders said.

The headquarters for the event will be based at Rock Springs Ranch.

Gaughan said they wanted to have the race in Fort Riley, but because to the transition and speculation about the future of the fort, they were not able to.

Candidate cancels campaign

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

Mike Manning will no longer be campaigning for a seat on the city commission.

As of Friday morning, he will be leaving Manhattan to take a job advancement within Household Finance Corporation.

Manning

"It was out of the blue," Manning said. "I was working on an advertisement for my campaign at the time I received the call, and I just dispatched the ad."

Even after months of campaigning, Manning said he couldn't pass up the opportunity.

"I have an opportunity for promotion within my corporation, and it's one I can't refuse," Manning said. "I have to look at the quality of life for my children and my family in general. I have to go where the bread and butter is."

Manning, who has lived in Manhattan five years, said the quality of life here is great.

"I really appreciate the opportunity to live here in Manhattan and to become friends with the people in the community," he said. "I hope Manhattan continues its success and prosperity. I really think that needs to be said."

Before living in Manhattan, Manning said he moved around a lot his entire life. He attended 17 grade schools and seven universities.

"There is no place that parallels Manhattan. It's a great place to raise a family," he said. "I've even lived in Hawaii, Vermont and other places that have a lot of notoriety."

Although Manning is not campaigning for the office, his name will remain on the ballot.

"He can't actually remove his name from the ballot for April, but he'd be unable to serve because he will not be a resident," Jim Pearson, city manager, said.

In the event that Manning would be elected, the city commission would elect a citizen to fill the vacancy, Pearson said.

"I encourage my supporters to give their support to Steve Hall at this time," Manning said.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ BOARD CONSIDERS LOCATIONS FOR BMX TRACK, BASKETBALL COURTS

A BMX track and basketball courts received support from the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Advisory Board Monday night.

Motions on both issues passed unanimously.

Wade Davis and Ray Case, members of a citizens group involved in planning for a BMX track, requested the Parks and Recreation Department's help in creating a track. Case told the board there would be no monetary cost to the city for the project.

"We did not come here to request funds," Case said. "We are looking for help locating a site."

The No. 1 site at this time is on land in CiCo park owned by USD 383, said Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan Parks and Recreation.

Davis said three businesses have said they will make contributions when the time comes.

The businesses are Aggie Bike Station, which Davis owns, Game Guy and Henton Plumbing Heating and Air Conditioning, Davis said.

The citizens group wants to obtain a site before any funds are solicited, Case said.

DeWeese said he has received only one letter in opposition to the CiCo Park site.

Existing facilities in CiCo Park such as restrooms and water give it the advantage, DeWeese said.

"Of all the sites we looked at, this seemed to be the most appropriate for what we are looking at," DeWeese said.

Because CiCo Park's master plan includes tennis courts, the BMX track would have to move if the need or desire for courts were to arise, DeWeese said.

Davis and Case said they accept this possibility.

"That's fine," Davis said. "We hope it wouldn't happen in a year."

Davis said if it happened in three or four years, the track might have a large enough base of riders that the track could succeed even if moved.

The consensus of the board was that a BMX track would provide a wholesome activity for children.

"The reason I got involved at first was that there were comments across the community that not enough is done for children," DeWeese said. "I'm not a BMXer. My kids aren't BMXers. But I think it has some benefit to the community."

The advisory board took steps toward adding basketball courts to the Manhattan parks system.

A full court was proposed for City Park and a half court for Goodnow Park. These sites were preferable to others because of the large amount of traffic they get, including from K-State, DeWeese said.

Nancy Bolsen, an advisory board member, said she was concerned that the neighborhood around Goodnow Park might not want a court in the park.

As a result, Jim Lindquist, an advisory board member, changed his motion to include an investigation of a half court in Goodnow Park.

The money could not be transferred to another project without approval of the city commission, DeWeese said.

The money was designated for basketball courts in the 1995 Capital Improvements Plan, he said.

If the neighborhood around Goodnow Park says yes to the court, it will be built. If the court is rejected, Parks and Recreation will immediately begin looking at placing a half court in CiCo park.

▶ BILL THAT WOULD INCREASE SCHOOL BUDGETS SENT TO COMMITTEE

TOPEKA (AP) — The House rejected Senate amendments to a bill making changes in the 1992 School District Finance and Quality Performance Act, sending it to a conference committee to resolve differences on Monday.

Named as House members of the conference committee were Reps. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha; Gene Shore, R-Johnson; and Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City. Chronister will serve as chairwoman of the conference committee because it is a House bill.

The Senate did not name its conference members Monday.

The bill would increase the per-pupil budgets of school districts from $3,600 to $3,621 for all school districts and give larger school districts an additional $43.15 per student under a "high-enrollment" weighting provision.

▶ COMMITTEE DEBATES VALUE OF FARM PROGRAM, VOTES TO KEEP IT

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate Ways and Means Committee voted Monday to save a program that provides financial and legal assistance to troubled farmers and small businesses.

Some senators wanted to eliminate the Farmers Assistance Counseling and Training Service, or FACTS, from the proposed budgets for government agriculture programs for fiscal year 1996, which begins July 1.

FACTS was established during the mid-1980s as a response to the troubled rural economy. Critics contend the program has outlived its usefulness.

But a Ways and Means subcommittee concluded that the program still has value and had saved more than 680 farms since 1986.

The committee had made the same recommendation before, but the Senate returned the bill to committee two weeks ago, after financing the FACTS program became controversial.

The committee's vote Monday was 8-2.

K-STATE POLICE

SUNDAY, MARCH 5

At 1:07 a.m., Sara Blecke advised of the smell of an illegal substance in Moore Hall. James Farmer was found to be in possession of drug paraphernalia and hallucinogenic drugs. Farmer was arrested and taken to Riley County Jail.

At 3:10 a.m., Bridgett Porter, Moore Hall staff member, advised of a subject yelling obscenities and punching the elevator door. The same subject had been involved in an earlier incident the day before. The responding officer was unable to find the subject.

At 3:26 p.m., Brian Tuttle, Haymaker 713, advised of criminal damage to property on his light-blue 1991 Acura Integra.

At 8:38 p.m., the Riley County Police requested assistance with a fight at North Manhattan and Bluemont avenues. Riley County called back and requested officers to monitor five male subjects in that area walking toward Thurston Street. All five were apparently drunk.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SUNDAY, MARCH 5

At 12:16 p.m., Annette Christianson, 2418 Charlois Lane, requested to meet with someone regarding a dog in her trash. The officer could not locate the dog.

At 7:28 p.m., a vehicle injury accident was reported at Seth Childs and Farm Bureau roads between Chad Prescott, 830 Dondee Drive, and Shelly Alexander, 109 Redbud Estates. A major-damage, injury accident report was filed.

At 9:15 p.m., Jonathon Butters, 1516 N. Manhattan Ave., was issued a notice to appear for unlawful use of a Kansas driver's license at Fast Eddy's.

MONDAY, MARCH 6

At 12:42 a.m., criminal damage to property was reported. The victims were Equine Clothiers, 113 S. Fourth St., and Dollar General Store, 121 S. Fourth St. Damage was done to the walls and doors of both locations. Total loss was $100.

At 3:22 a.m., Jerri Gillian, 1021 Leavenworth St., reported a past burglary. Taken from his 1994 Ford pickup was a Magnavox portable compact disc player and a CD. Loss was $116.

News of oil spill slow to filter

BRIAN HEIAR
Collegian

Poor communication kept Riley County officials from hearing about an oil spill near Leonardville until almost a month after the accident happened.

On Jan. 5, 350 barrels of No. 2 fuel oil, the type of fuel used to heat boilers, was spilled southwest of Leonardville.

In late January, Riley County officials first found out about the spill through gossip, Pat Collins, Riley County emergency management coordinator, said.

On Feb. 10, the Riley County public works department received an accident report from the National Cooperative Refinery Association, Collins said.

According to the NCRA accident report, at 10:30 a.m., the NCRA products pipeline pump station at Blue Rapids went down on a low-suction alarm.

At 10:50 a.m., William Peterson called the NCRA products pipeline office at Blue Rapids. One of Peterson's bulldozers had hit the pipeline, according to the report.

Peterson had been building a pond in a pasture for the landowner, Wesley Llewelyn. Several pump stations were then shut down to prevent any more product spillage, the report said.

At 10:52, products pipeline personnel left the Blue Rapids station to close down the pipeline on both sides of the accident. They were on the scene less than an hour later.

The oil was contained in the pond, Greg Crawford, director of public information for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said.

Two NCRA tanker trucks came to the accident site and vacuumed 340 barrels of oil from the pond, Crawford said.

Nineteen 4-cubic-foot bags of sphag sorb were placed in the pond area to soak up the rest of the oil, according to the report. The NCRA repaired the pipeline on Jan. 6.

On Jan. 10, 280 cubic yards of saturated soil was moved and spread about 2 inches thick over a 100-foot-by-450-foot section of field to bake in the sun.

The pond bottom and the saturated soil will be sprayed with organisms that eat hydrocarbons, according to the report. Peterson had not attempted to call the Kansas One-Call System Inc. at 1-800-DIG-SAFE or the NCRA before the digging started, the report said.

Llewelyn told Peterson that the pipeline was 200 yards farther north of the pond where the accident happened, the report said.

The NCRA reported the accident to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, Collins said.

By KDHE guidelines, if the KDHE had not been notified, there would have been fines to pay, Crawford said.

"If it had not been cleaned up, enforcement would have been undertaken," Crawford said.

The news of the accident was not disseminated to the county though, Collins said.

"It's a public education problem," Collins said.

If the 911 emergency number had been called, the people at 911 would have informed the county emergency staff and the KDHE, Collins said.

Students say fee singles them out

The first is the need for computer equipment, which is being taken care of through re-allocation of other funding, he said.

The second is the need for an expansion in facilities, which is being taken care of through a task force led by Richter, Coffman said.

"These needs are attended to effectively or in the process of being attended to," Coffman said.

Coffman said the problems arose when finding a solution to the problem of funding an additional clerical staff for the center.

"We looked at several alternatives," he said. "The fee started at $20 a semester, but then we decided it might create more money than needed."

Many students said they believed they were being singled out to pay this fee because they are foreigners.

Coffman said this was not true.

"The rationale for the fee for international students is related to the fact that additional services were rendered in support for international students that don't affect everyone else," he said.

Navin Nagiah, graduate student in electrical engineering, said he was worried about the symbolism of the $15 fee but also about the bad public relations associated with it.

"It's almost as if now there's going to be an in-state, out-of-state and out-of-country fee," Nagiah said.

Coffman said those types of problems had been addressed.

"There's been a mark increase in international students, but there's also been a marked increase in costs as well," he said

"We're not singling out a population but addressing a need," Coffman said.

Scott said there is some possibility that many departments on campus will chose to pay the $15 for the students in their departments.

▶ CITY

Target not building store in Manhattan

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

Target, a nationwide discount retailer, will not be coming to Manhattan anytime soon.

Daryle Frank, manager of Frank's Mobile Home Sales, decided not to sell any of his property for the project.

For Target to have enough land to build, purchasing private property in the mobile home park would have been necessary, said Jerry Petty, Manhattan's director of community development.

Frank said he would have had to sell two or three acres.

Russell Johnson, the real-estate developer who had been looking for land suitable for Target, said Frank's decision was based on the uncertainty and length of the dealings between the city and himself.

Frank said the developers of the Target project first approached him in mid-October.

The subject was on the city commission's agenda in early December but was called off at 4 p.m. the day of the meeting, Frank said.

A new offer was made Jan. 3, he said. Eventually, the city and Johnson ran into their problems.

"Mr. Petty agreed that it would be three or four months before they had a decision," Frank said.

He said he is not opposed to Target coming in. However, he did not want to make residents of his park wait on an outcome any longer, Frank said.

Anywhere from 32 to 45 homes would have been displaced, Frank said.

The price of the city's land kept the city and Johnson from closing the deal, Johnson said.

"Basically, the property owned by the city was not immediately available at a good price," Johnson said. "It was my understanding that the property could be sold for industrial purposes at $8,000 an acre."

Johnson wanted to buy the land contingent upon it being re-zoned for commercial retail use, Petty said.

The city instead decided to sell the property at a market value appropriate for commercial use, Petty said.

The fair value of the land was determined to be about $42,000 per acre, Petty said.

"Commercially zoned land is worth a lot more than industrially zoned land," Petty said.

Target is not interested in any other sites in Manhattan, Johnson said, because Target is requiring that their land be near the mall.

A 100,000-square-foot store would take about eight acres of land, he said. The industrial-park site is the only one near the mall that is the right size, Johnson said.

IN OUR OPINION

by the Collegian Editorial Board

Group's views, content shouldn't affect funding

Is Student Senate now a censorship board?

Nudity and sexual content was enough to cause some student senators to balk at funding Metazine, a campus magazine last week.

Never mind artistic expression. Never mind that college campuses are supposed to be one of the last bastions of open-mindedness in America.

Some of the powers-that-be in Student Senate literally said they would decide for us what K-State puts its name on.

This is an evil precedent.

Not every program on campus can be funded or receive all the funding they might want, but a group should not be directly attacked for its views or message.

The real issue is that more than one senator quickly leafed through the sample issue, saw male nudity and a sex reference, and deemed the magazine unfit to be associated with K-State.

Is Student Senate now a censorship board?

If so, when did this happen and under whose authority?

The views of an organization are not supposed to be taken into account when Senate decides allocations. To do so would set a dangerous precedent in which Senate could refuse allocations to groups because of political, religious or other differences.

It's known as censorship.

It needs to stop now.

Miscommunication hurts male-female relationships

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

"You are way off the mark here, Missy!" bellowed across the newsroom like the cry of a bull moose in heat and twice as loud.

My hearing aids registered it at an even 7.7 on the Richter Scale, and I grabbed at them desperately to turn them off before I suffered permanent brain damage.

Clutching my palpitating heart, I turned from my computer screen to face the army I thought stood behind me and ran smack into a copy of my last column being waved in my face like a warrant of arrest.

It was clutched in the bunched fist of my friend, Hank. I don't know what startled me more: seeing him angrier than he's been since Bush lost the last election or seeing him in the light of day.

"You have written some things that were way off before, but this takes the cake!" Hank threw the paper down on the top of my desk as if it burned his fingers.

"Will you stop screaming? You're making the walls rattle." I turned back to my typing. The only way to keep from antagonizing him when he's in one of his tempers is to stay calm, which is kind of like standing stock still in front of a firing squad. "What's the problem?"

"This ... thing about a Men's Suffering Month," he sputtered. "What kind of crap are you trying to pull? First you ladies get the vote, then a month all of your own, not to mention entire college curriculums dedicated to you. Now you're demanding the total subjugation of the male gender?! Good God, woman, what is your beef?"

"I was not talking about the total subjugation of men. I was talking about having some equality between the sexes." Out of the corner of my eye, I could see the little veins on his neck were beginning to stand out. That's usually a clear indication that I had only a few more minutes before total communication breakdown occurred.

"I was talking about the differences between the responsibilities and privileges that men have in this society and the ones that women do."

"Bull. I recognize boo-hooing when I see it. You women aren't satisfied with working as hard as the rest of us, and you want preferential treatment."

I bit my lip. "First of all, women work just as hard as men do. In some cases, society expects us to work harder. Having a month to recognize the contributions women have made to this country is not asking for preferential treatment. It's asking for fair treatment."

"We learn about women in history. I distinctly remember hearing about Betsy Ross and that Mary Curry chick in the 10th grade."

"Marie Curie," I forced out between clenched teeth. "What about Maggie Kuhn and Mary McLeod Bethune? We always hear about the men. How is it we hear about the first man who ran for president but not the first woman?"

"Because she obviously didn't win!" I took a deep breath and counted to 10. Hank could see I was fighting for control and moved my coffee mug out of arm's reach.

"You aren't listening to me."

Hank rolled his eyes and threw up his arms.

"Isn't that always the argument from you feminists? I make a valid point, and suddenly I'm not listening."

"No, you aren't. What I was talking about was privilege: the privilege men have every day of their natural-born lives to see heroes displayed of their own gender everywhere, to get an education, to wear what they want to wear, say what they want to say and do what they want to do without the whole world telling them it's not right. It's not 'masculine.' Or thinking it's an invitation to violate their bodies.

"You can be a head of state and a father, and no one thinks it's unnatural for you. I try it, and I am not upholding family values. And you can't see it clearly because you have the privilege of not seeing it.

"That's what I was talking about. And, for your information, I didn't just talk about all the things that men get away with and women don't. Or did you just read half my column and fed the other half to the dog again?"

"Patton likes the taste of the ink," he mumbled. It looked for a moment as if I might have gotten through to him. The fog cleared for just a second, and I thought I could see he understood what I meant.

"I still think you're full of it." The shutters came back down, but he moved my coffee mug back within range and turned his back on me, which, for him, is an obvious sign of trust. I shook my head, knowing it was no use arguing with him any more.

At the door, he turned back around to face me. "It's 11 women a day, by the way."

"What?" I was confused.

"You said one in 11 women dies of domestic abuse a day. It's 11 women a day."

"Oh. I must have read it wrong. How do you know?"

"What do you think I am, some kind of cretin?" Before I could answer, he was gone.

Intolerance toward gays a sign of hatred

DEB TAYLOR

GUEST COLUMN

We were recently given a new twist on ethics in the form of John Hart's column on "totolerance," which he defines as an ethic "by which one group maintains complete control of debate under an intellectual dictatorship and bans all opposing views." While I like Hart's definition, I would not call it totolerance; I would call it "complete intolerance."

Unknowingly, John Hart has correctly defined the complete intolerance of the Radical Christian Right (RCR), which — thankfully — does not comprise all Christians, and whose rhetoric Hart mimics each week. That said, let me now give examples of the RCR's effort to "ban all opposing views."

Jesse Helms, the father of all anti-gay-obsessed homophobic Christians, has introduced into the 104th Congress two hate bills. The first bill will stop government agencies from funding any gay or lesbian organization. So, while we can have our share of funded "good ol' boys" and "prayer" clubs, we cannot fund gay/lesbian groups because, in Helms' words, we don't want to encourage employees or officials "to accept homosexuality as a legitimate or normal lifestyle."

Helms' second bill protects federal employees from being fired for voicing their prejudices against lesbian and gay co-workers. What this basically means is that the next time House Majority Leader Dick Armey refers to Representative Barney Frank as "Barney Fag," Armey will be politically correct (literally).

I wonder why, when Hart was condemning the Mainstream Coalition (which he incorrectly labels a PAC) and gay/lesbian rights groups, he did not mention Jesse Helms. Or why he did not mention Christian leader Lou Sheldon, who has declared "open warfare" on gays and lesbians and who advocates confining HIV+ people in concentration camps? Or why not Pat Robertson, who is more responsible than any other Christian leader for the growing persecution of gays and lesbians?

At present, Pat Robertson, King of "love the sinner, hate the sin," refuses to meet with Reverend Mel White, a one-time ghostwriter to and friend of Robertson. On Feb. 14, White went to visit Robertson to ask him to do two things: "acknowledge the growing number of hate crimes against Gay and Lesbian Americans" and to "condemn those hate crimes and the people who incite or commit them." Robertson's response? He had Rev. White arrested. White is still in jail.

And what about Kansas? House member Darlene Cornfield and other Christian extremists have introduced Resolution 2301 which, among other things, will require sex education school teachers to limit their discussion of sex to "heterosexual marriage." Now, if these Kansas Christians are so "tolerant," then why are they trying to completely deny the existence of homosexuals?

The answer is simple: these Christians are not tolerant of any opposing views. They are not even "totolerant." They are "completely intolerant" of any view which does not fall in complete alignment with their literal interpretation of the Bible.

Their tolerance of gays and lesbians is similar to my tolerance for the flu or a hang nail or a big zit on my face: I tolerate it with disgust until it goes away.

These radical Christians want us to go away, and their biggest fear is that society will actually begin to accept us and respect us — not merely tolerate us — and embrace us as the equal human beings we are. Society's inclusion of us threatens them to the point that they go to great lengths to discredit us. This is why when we say we want sexual orientation to be included in non-discrimination policies, the radical Christian right proclaims that what we really want is special rights. I never knew that freedom from persecution was a special right.

Hart's definition of tolerance includes respect and putting ourselves in other peoples' shoes. I doubt very seriously that John Hart has ever even come close to putting his big toe into one of my or my fellow gays' and lesbians' shoes. If he would have, his columns for the past cabillion semesters would have included messages along the lines of "let's learn to get along, embrace each other in love, and end the hatred and fighting." Instead, we have been bombarded with his laments on how the world is becoming sensitized into accepting homosexuality as a different lifestyle when it is really a filthy, immoral abomination.

Their tolerance of gays and lesbians is similar to my tolerance for the flu or a hang nail or a big zit on my face: I tolerate it with disgust until it goes away.

I am as completely intolerant of the current hatred towards gays and lesbians by religious extremists as John Hart is completely intolerant of my being a lesbian who wants to end gay and lesbian oppression. Of course, we do tolerate each other: I tolerate Hart's religious extremes, and Hart tolerates me as a lesbian. But we are completely intolerant of each other's actions: I hate the fact that I and my people are being mentally, physically and spiritually wounded and Hart hates the fact that we cry out when our wounds bleed and when we hurt.

I do not know why Hart-type Christians refuse to admit that they are an intolerant lot when their actions reveal that no room exists for diversity. And I especially do not know what Hart wants me to do when he calls me immoral and sinful when I am not. What does he want me to do when he and people like him support legislation and/or action which denies who I am? I think they want me to say, "Golly, I really don't like the fact that I can be fired, beaten up, thrown out of my apartment and have my children taken away from me because I am a lesbian, but, geez, in the spirit of tolerance, I will not let you God-fearing Christians take away my civil and human rights."

Sorry John et al, but it ain't gonna happen.

John Hart does not want me to be tolerant. He wants me to be submissive and to conform to his Christian ideals. But I cannot, and I will not. I do not accept his definition of tolerance, nor do I accept his rigid and frightening interpretation of the Bible. When John Hart finally separates his own morality from my human rights, and when he learns that homosexuality is not responsible for all of what's wrong with our society, I will know that he has actually put himself in my shoes.

Right and wrong a relative thing

Dear editor,

OK, I've been reading all these letters about tolerance and right and wrong for the past few days, and I've decided to add my .02 Triganic Pu to the pile of newsprint ready to be recycled.

It seems that recently people have been telling us what is Right and Wrong from what they say is the Truth. But what they should also realize, which it seems they don't, is that those truths are theirs, and theirs only.

Sure, there may be millions of others who believe many of the same things, but that does not make them the absolute, undeniable truth.

Truth is personally defined, by each and every person on the face of this earth. Here is a simple little example of this: You're in a swimming pool, and a friend of yours approaches. You say, "come on in, the water's fine." Your friend jumps in and screams that the water is freezing.

You weren't lying to your friend — to you the water was fine — but we all have different sensory perceptions. What might be true for you may not be true for your friend. You both gave statements based upon who you are and the given circumstances.

Those circumstances are so often ignored by those professing the truth. Things change with time, and with those changes, Truth also changes.

Think about it. There was a time when the Truth was that the sun revolved around the earth, and anyone who thought differently was thinking impure thoughts.

Given that Truth is different for each person and that those Truths change through time, I find it interesting that so many people in this world take words that were originally spoken and written in languages completely foreign to them, and thousands of years ago, to be the basis for, if not the entirety, of the Truth.

But I consider myself tolerant, in that I believe that people actually believe what they say they do. And that they are true to the Truths they carry within themselves. But if a person tries to force their Truths on another, then I get a little intolerant.

So much of life is spent trying to find a balance of what we experience and what we believe, digging through everything we know to find pieces of Truth.

If there is such a thing as the Absolute Undeniable Truth, I am not aware of it, and I don't profess to know it.

But I have found these words I've shared to hold a piece of Truth for myself at this time in my life, and if they help anyone find their own pieces, then they are so much the better.

If anyone out there knows the Whole Truth, please let us know ... but remember, it must be able to encompass the entire universe (known and unknown) and bring about a final solution to the "parking problem" on this campus.

▶ PARKING

Plan is for the best

Dear editor,

K-State has faced a parking problem for many generations, but thanks to the Parking Task Force, this problem may soon be addressed. Consisting of K-State students, faculty, staff and administrators, the Parking Task Force has submitted a solid, well-informed recommendation to President Jon Wefald. Their decision to construct a parking garage inside Memorial Stadium is a bold step toward securing adequate parking for K-State's future.

Now, the fate of the recommendation is in the hands of Wefald. He must submit a five-year University construction plan to the Kansas Board of Regents by April 1.

Luckily, if a parking garage is included in this plan, the location of the structure does not need to be specified for at least one year. This would give the University adequate time to study the best possible construction site.

It is obvious that there is a parking problem at K-State. People have complained for decades about not having adequate parking. In a recent survey sent out by the Task Force, only about 5 percent of the respondents chose to "maintain the status quo" as the best parking option.

Future parking prospects look even worse. The number of high-school graduating seniors is growing. According to University projections, 3,000 students and as many as 300 new personnel will be added to the K-State campus by 2003.

Not only that, but Anderson Avenue will be widened soon to accommodate a turn lane, which will remove at least 125 parking stalls from the south Union lot. Another couple hundred spaces will be lost due to other construction projects on campus in years to come.

"A shuttle system would be expensive, and the city of Manhattan and potential users have shown little interest."

JOHN RIEDEL
senior in accounting

To meet the large demand for parking that is expected, a parking garage is superior to the alternatives. A shuttle system would be expensive, and the city of Manhattan and potential users have shown little interest. Some community leaders feel that Manhattan doesn't need a mass transit system. In addition, many people who support a shuttle system from Bramlage say it's a great idea, but they wouldn't personally use it.

Another alternative, restricting the sale of permits to a certain radius of campus, was also studied. The Task Force rightfully concluded that this would be difficult to enforce, have minimal effect on the overall parking problem, cause additional parking congestion on nearby city streets, and cause a safety problem because of poor lighting conditions on some adjacent streets.

I strongly urge Wefald to listen to the Parking Task Force. Build a garage. Then, when it comes time to choose the location, make sure that students, faculty and staff, as well as architects and administrators, are included in the site selection process. Input from everybody is critical to this important decision.

It is time to improve parking at K-State. Let's trust the campus leaders of the Parking Task Force. They made a decision based on what is best for the future of K-State.

Sure, it won't please everybody. No solution ever does. But it will substantially help the parking problem. Student Body President Jeff Peterson described it best: "The solution may not be a perfect one, but it's the best one."

▶ LIBERALS

It takes more than clothes

Dear editor,

In response to his column in Thursday's Collegian: who is Russell Fortmeyer, and what makes him the unwritten judge of what makes a person hip? Drinking coffee and writing bad poetry does not instantly make you a liberal. I think Russell just gave out the call to all of the "I wanna be like ..." people there are in our society.

What Russell seems to be forgetting is there is a world of difference between looking like a hepcat and being one. Putting on a black turtleneck and beret, then tapping your ruby sandals together while repeating: "I want to be Woody Guthrie" won't transform you into him. There are a lot of poets and artists (some of them more talented than those who look the part) who look like the average man on the street. Does it make them any the less a poet if they decide to drink Kool-Aid instead of cappuccino?

Sure, that "other school" in Kansas is quite a bit more liberal than K-State. They may have more coffee shops and more true beatniks, but telling people about how to look like one is not going to transform this University into Greenwich Village overnight. All it is going to do is give us a bunch of unhappy conservatives walking around trying to look like beatniks. You have to let society change at its own rate. And there are always going to be those who merely want to look hip.

Go ahead and spend your time making a collage with old magazines. Then you will truly know what "starving artist" really means.

U.S. should be melting pot

Dear editor,

Here we go again. John Hart rubbing our noses in his arrogant, self-righteous opinions. You just love dogging on other cultures' lifestyles and morals, don't you?

I'm not talking just about other countries, either. America is full of subcultures, and every one of them is wacky except yours, isn't it, Mr. Hart?

Our status as technological, political and social leaders means that we are in the cutting edge and that others will surely follow our lead.

If we claim to be a melting pot, then we must consider everyone's culture when synthesizing our own.

The antiquated Judeo-Christian way has a few good points, but so do the Buddhist and Moslem ways.

All traditions were formed for a good reason, and the only "universal" standards should be those of human rights and tolerance.

As ideas and cultures spread throughout the world, the best will flourish, and the worst will die out. That's how things have always worked for humans.

The end result will be composed of only the best elements of each tradition.

Technology and politics are already headed in this direction.

Religion and morals only lag behind because of close-minded arrogants like John Hart and Rush Limbaugh.

By the way, I don't ever recall reading (or even thinking) about a culture that rapes and molests 5-year-olds.

I'll let Hart's wild examples speak for themselves.

Citations are helpful

Dear editor,

Thank you, Collegian. I have been an avid reader since my arrival at K-State, and I have seen many articles about various controversial issues.

I think some of these articles have lacked solid evidence, and even if they did have evidence, they never cited their sources.

In Page Getz's column, "Small-scale composting produces big-time results," I was not as nearly as impressed with the actual content as I was the sources I saw at the end.

I applaud you, Page, for taking responsibility in what you write.

Including sources not only gives the column validity, but it also avoids any chance of being accused of plagiarism. The University has taken many steps to ensure that people know the seriousness of this crime, and it is nice to see someone taking the first step in responsible journalism.

Coaches ready for tournament

TODD STEWART
Collegian

The three days of madness affectionately referred to as the Big Eight Tournament are almost here.

With Sunday's crowning of Kansas as regular season champion and the season slate finished, Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., will be host to the annual Big Eight finale.

Kansas, the No. 1 seed in the tournament and No. 2 in the country, is not surprisingly the team grabbing most of the headlines going into Kansas City.

K-State coach Tom Asbury said the Jayhawks' tremendous success is a slight surprise to him.

"As good a team as they are, it's a little bit of a surprise they're that good this fast," Asbury said.

"I thought their best team might be a year or so down the line."

No. 2 seed Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said he thought Kansas' depth is a key to their success.

"I think depth's why Kansas really is a legitimate contender for the national championship," Sutton said.

The Jayhawks will face No. 8 seed K-State in the first round, whom they swept in their two close earlier season meetings.

"We were competitive with them," Asbury said.

"Certainly, we hope to come up with another good effort on Friday."

A positive for the Cats could be their record against Kansas in the Big Eight Tournament.

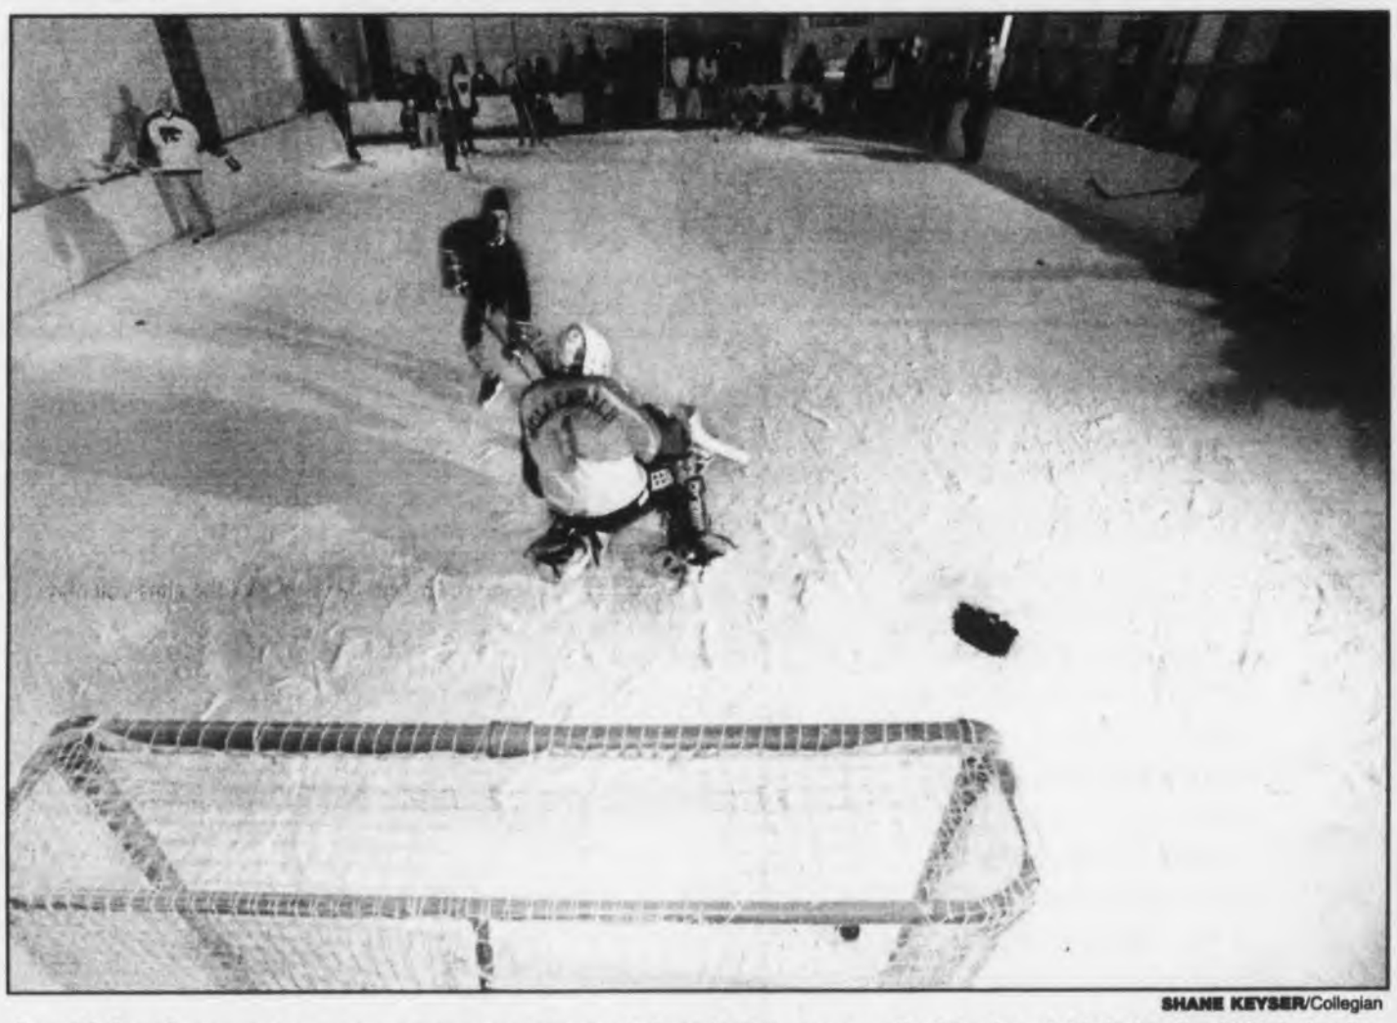
K-State and Kansas have met more than any other two teams in tournament play, and the Cats are the only Big Eight team with a winning record against the Jayhawks in the tourney, 7-4.

Sutton's Oklahoma State Cowboys are on the opposite end of another record.

First-round Cowboy opponent No. 7 Nebraska is 4-0 lifetime against the Pokes in the postseason tournament, including Nebraska's triumph in last year's championship game.

Iowa State coach Tim Floyd, whose team was swept this season by first-round opponent Missouri, said his team is ready for a close battle.

"I think just from the standpoint of winning in late-game situations, it's got to give our guys some confidence," Floyd said.



But despite streaks, records and previous play, rookie and veteran coaches alike are looking forward to the showdown in Kemper.

"I'm just looking forward to the ballgame," Missouri coach Norm Stewart said.

"It's a great tournament, maybe the best in the country."

Asbury, who is new to the tournament, seconded Stewart's sentiments.

"It's one of the best, if not the best, postseason tournaments in the country."

Hockey team raises funds to cover expenses

JAMIE CONGROVE
Collegian

The cold temperature in Manhattan City Park's Ice Skating Rink Saturday night didn't stop the K-State Ice Hockey Club team from having a hot fundraiser.

Almost 70 people turned out at the event to either skate with the team or take shots at the goalie.

For $1, participants could hit slap-shots at K-State's goalie.

Suzie Orebaugh, junior in modern languages, tried to get the puck past the goalie but was unsuccessful.

Orebaugh said it was much harder than she thought it was going to be.

"I can't skate that well, and I kept thinking, please God, don't leave the puck behind because I was so worried about skating," she said.

Orebaugh also said she wanted to see the team in action because she wasn't aware K-State had a team.

"When I found out about it, I really wanted to come see them play," she said.

Chuck Downey, graduate student in horticulture, said the team hoped to raise at least $300 but fell short — making only $150.

Scott Winot, team member, said the contributions raised were going to help with traveling expenses.

"We got a trip coming up, and we need to make some money," Winot said. "Most of the money for the trips comes out of our pockets."

Downey said when the team travels, they have to pay for almost everything.

Mike Bachtle, junior in construction science, said the team has a really good time together.

"We're not that serious because we don't have the facilities. So it's mainly fun," he said.

Jesse Meadows, freshman in wildlife biology, said whatever money they raise is greatly needed. Because the rink in Manhattan is so small, they can only practice in Kansas City, and when they practice there, all of their expenses come out of their pockets, he said.

Bachtle, whose team is 8-9-1, said the team needs support from the community.

"We had this because we wanted the community to know K-State has a hockey team, because not many people know about us," Bachtle said.

Winot said he was glad to see as many people turn out, but he wished there would have been a few more.

John Watt, sophomore in pre-law, said more people should check out the hockey team.

"More people should support the K-State hockey team because they can go somewhere. They are a championship caliber team," Watt said.

SALINA — A perfect season deserves a perfect finish.

The No. 3 Colorado Buffaloes achieved just that Monday night with a 61-45 victory over No. 23 Kansas.

The win capped off a 17-0 Big Eight Conference season.

Colorado 61
Kansas 45

"This is sweet," said Naismith Player of the Year finalist and tournament Most Value Player Shelly Sheetz. "I wanted my teammates to experience coming to Salina and cutting the nets down."

"It was sweet going 17-0 in the Big Eight. It's very hard to describe. It's so emotional. Now we're on to bigger and better things in the tournament. On to our next goal."

Both teams started slow, with Colorado missing its first five shots and Kansas missing its first four. Then Buffalo senior Isabelle Fijalkowski picked up two fouls in the first minute and 22 seconds, forcing Colorado to go with a less-experienced sophomore, Reagan Scott, at center.

But things soon fell into place, with Sheetz nailing an 18-foot jumper from the baseline. Kansas senior Angela Aycock answered with a three-pointer, giving the Jayhawks their only lead of the game at 3-2.

A turnaround jumper by Scott would give Colorado a lead it would never surrender. The Buffs steadily built their lead to 10 following a baseline trey by Sheetz, forcing Kansas to call a timeout.

"We just didn't have our legs," Kansas coach Marian Washington said. "In the first half, we got some good shots. They just didn't fall."

Colorado would use an 8-2 run to close the first half with a 16-point lead.

Things didn't get any better in the second. Sheetz converted an offensive rebound into two more points, and Colorado eventually built their lead to 25. But Colorado coach Ceal Barry said she never felt the game was in hand.

"We've been in that situation before with KU," Barry said. "Last week, we were ahead 52-31. They can come back and explode. It wasn't until about five minutes left that we thought they couldn't come back."

A spinning layup by Kansas sophomore Tamecka Dixon with just nine seconds left brought the Jayhawks within 16, the closest they had been in the half. Colorado would hold the ball until the end the game.

"I think we were focused, especially on the defensive end of the floor," Barry said.

Her team held the top offense in the Big Eight to 35 points below their average. Aycock, averaging 26 in the tournament coming in, scored just seven points.

Scott led four Buffs in double figures with 14 points. Sophomore Erin Scholz added 12. Sheetz scored 11, and Fijalkowski finished with 10.

In addition to Sheetz, Scott and Fijalkowski were named to the all-tournament team. KU's Aycock and Oklahoma senior center Mandy Wade rounded out the team.

SALINA — Dust off the Big Eight Conference record books. Colorado is moving in.

After racing through the Big Eight regular season with a perfect 14-0 record, the Buffaloes captured the Big Eight Tournament championship with a 61-45 victory over the Kansas Jayhawks Monday night.

That left the Buffs with a 17-0 record against Big Eight teams this season, a feat that has only been accomplished once before by the 1988-89 Colorado team.

"This is sweet," Colorado guard and tournament Most Valuable Player Shelly Sheetz said. "I wanted my teammates to experience coming to Salina and cutting the nets down.

"It was sweet going 17-0 in the Big Eight. It's very hard to describe. It's so emotional. Now we're off to bigger and better things in the tournament. On to our next goal."

With the 17th win, the Buffs etched their name in the Big Eight record books as one of the top teams in conference history, if not the best ever.

If the record wasn't a big enough reminder, the nearly 1,000 Buff fans in attendance let the other 3,649 at the Bicentennial Center know it too with chants of "We're No. 1."

In fact, the Colorado fans stood on their feet cheering for the final three minutes of the game.

Even with a comfortable 20-point lead throughout the second half, Colorado coach Ceal Barry wasn't so comfortable.

"KU is a team that can explode on you at any time," Barry said.

"With five minutes left, I finally knew that they couldn't overcome the lead."

Finally, when the buzzer sounded, Barry and the other Buffs knew that their dream had come true.

The Big Eight belonged to them, and them only.

"We met both of our goals this season," Barry said. "We wanted to win the regular season championship, and we wanted to win the Big Eight Tournament.

"This team is special."

Kansas coach Marian Washington said she agreed.

"I can't compare them to UConn," Washington said. "They're a wonderful champion. They played great. I congratulate them. They're a very good team."

Another example of how dominating this edition of the Buffaloes is: Colorado held Kansas' Angela Aycock to only seven points on three out of 13 from the floor.

Aycock had been averaging 23.9 points a game. The seven points ties her season low against Missouri earlier this season. Aycock also had five turnovers and only four rebounds.

"Emotionally, I'm exhausted," Aycock said.

"They played great defense."

Netters end losing streak, take a pair in Iowa

BRIAN THOMAS
Collegian

For the first time in more than a month, the K-State women's tennis team was victorious as it captured a pair of wins over Drake and Northern Illinois this weekend in Des Moines, Iowa.

With the victories, the Wildcats snapped a three-game losing streak and improved their overall team mark to 5-4 on the season.

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said he witnessed some improvements on the road trip.

"We took some good steps this weekend," Bietau said.

"Drake was a team that was comparable to the New Mexico team we recently played. Northern Illinois was obviously weaker than we were. We want to mainly look at how we played against Drake and build on that."

On Saturday, the Cats slipped past host Drake 5-4. Against Drake, K-State took victory in the top three singles positions. In No. 1 singles, all-American Karina Kuregian defeated Nikki Uelze 6-3, 7-5. Karen Nicholson had to go three sets before defeating Susan Hall 6-0, 4-6, 6-3 in No. 2 singles. Dinah Watson also posted victory with a 6-4, 6-3 win against Stephanie Dewald.

The Wildcats also took two out of three doubles matches against the host squad. The team of Kuregian and Martine Shrubsole had no problems against Uelze and Hall, cruising to the 7-5, 6-2 win. The No. 2 Nicholson/Watson doubles team squeaked out a 6-2, 2-6, 7-5 victory against Bell and Dewald.

Bietau said there were some players that looked better this week.

"One in particular was Karen Nicholson. She practiced harder this week and fought a lot harder on the court in her matches."

Northern Illinois was the Cats' next opponent and proved to be little trouble for K-State on Sunday.

In fact, the Cats did not even drop a game the entire day in an easy 9-0 sweep.

Kuregian was back to her usual self, claiming a 6-3, 6-1 victory against Ivana Nikolic. She also paired up with Shrubsole in a 6-3, 6-1 doubles victory against Nikolic and Brenda Bowen.

▶ WENTLAND CAPTURES U.S. INDOOR TITLE

K-State Trackster Gwen Wentland captured the women's high jump title at the U.S. Indoor Track and Field Championships during the weekend with a career-best jump of 6 feet 5 inches.

The leap was the best effort by an American this year and bettered her previous career-high of 6'4-1/4".

Wentland cleared 6' 5" and all of her lower heights without a miss.

She didn't miss a jump until her first attempt at 6' 6".

By winning the U.S. Indoor Title, Wentland qualified for the World Indoor Championships this weekend in Barcelona, Spain.

However, she will miss that meet because she will be competing for K-State at the NCAA Indoor Championships Friday and Saturday in Indianapolis.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader in love with sorority sister

Dear Cassandra,

I just joined a sorority at the beginning of the semester, but I joined for only one reason: I think I am in love with an active member.

This whole experience is very new to me for I have never pursued a homosexual relationship before. For years, I have had these feelings but have never been able to express my emotions freely. How should I approach the love of my life before she graduates in May?

Signed, Silent Sister

Dear Sister,

Carefully. Coming out may be the hardest thing you've ever had to do. Perhaps you should consider coming out to a close friend before going straight to the "love of your life," or call the Bisexual and Gay/Lesbian organization here on campus and get some pointers.

The Dreamer

With words and deeds
He filled the need and showed another way

For us to love and learn
And care in a modern age

King noted we are brothers
Who should live in harmony
White, brown, red, tan and ebony

His cause was a wife
It called for sacrifice
To better man
With helping hands
He had to give his life

So let us remember Martin,
Not for prizes or his fame
But because he opened
Hearts and minds
Which led to change

And on that day,
When that dream
Becomes reality,
Let's all join hands
And pray that it may always be.

by Garland Davis, freshman in human development and family studies and social work

You

You see me but you don't,
I am to you another of your military children, only I am your blood, but blood doesn't matter, now does it?
You listen but you don't,
you only hear the sounds of the guns you play within your army fields.
You want me, no, not a question to ask.
I am not strong enough to bear your half-truths your lame excuses,
Your patience with me is short,
your understanding close-minded, cold.
I can't trust you, my own Father ... you've been there, but you aren't here
I never know where you are,
you love me but you don't or can't understand it.
You see me as a child when,
I am a woman, well almost a woman,
In other men I try to find the love and the comfort you could never give, but those men, those men are only temporary,
I can't love any man, I barely love myself,
I can't settle down,
Yes, I blame you, maybe I shouldn't, but I do
I blame you for not having the love for me that I deserve, why couldn't you love me?
Why didn't you want me?
I deserve love, that's my right,
But your arms are so cold ...
Rejection is not just what I feel when I am around
you,
I feel as a guest in your house,
I feel like nothing, you say you care but,
words are cheap when not meant.
With you I feel only confusion,
Why did you reject me?
You were gone when I needed you most,
Will I ever love now? Now that you have rejected me?

Contest for doodlers

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Save those scribbles, sketches and doodles.

The designs and drawings in notebook margins and on memo pads could be the winners of an art contest.

For the first time in K-State history, the Union Program Council Arts Committee has organized a doodle art competition.

"It's never been done before, and we wanted to do something out of the ordinary," Rob Wells, freshman in art therapy, said.

The committee is accepting submissions from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. until March 16 in the UPC office.

The winning doodles will be displayed in the second-floor showcase of the K-State Union.

The contest will be divided into two categories, including in-class and out-of-class doodles.

To fit the criteria for the in-class category, the doodles must be on a page of actual class notes with the date on the top.

The other section includes doodles done at work, while on the phone or in front of the television.

"We have a category for those who are supposed to be doing work and start doodling," Chrissy Hathaway, chair of the UPC Arts Committee, said.

"We also have another one for when you're on the phone and start doodling or when you're at work and bored and make a masterpiece on a legal pad."

Hathaway said only two categories for the doodle contest currently exist, but if the students show interest, they could have separate categories for black and white and color doodles next year.

The winners, who will be selected by a jury of artists and three non-committee members, will be notified at 10 a.m. March 17.

Wells said the doodles will not be selected based on the quality of the drawing.

"We're going to judge it on the creativity of the doodle, not on how great of an artist they are," Wells said.

Hathaway said the contest is directed toward all students.

"We decided to have doodle art for the students who don't have enough time to work up something for the student art shows," Hathaway said. "It's quick, easy and fun."

Sharon Willitis, UPC program adviser, said the doodle competition is a wonderful idea.

"UPC tries to provide an avenue for students to showcase art," Willitis said. "It's fun and a little less formal. A lot of people do doodle work."

Willitis said UPC hopes to get a good number of submissions.

"We want to get the word out," Willitis said. "I've seen a lot of interest in it so far."

a blur made clear

U saw the world on fire
a blazing inferno turmoil on the right and the left pleading voices desperate for relief waiting for a liberator but where they seek where they will find no help their twisted minds know not where to turn still they pursue the peace they so desire they know a missing piece must be found but they cannot discern its whereabouts after there is nowhere else to go after all possible roads have been tried then and only then are they ready ready to find the hope they always knew in the back of their minds was there in that instant all skepticism will be put to rest their torture will be transformed into perfect peace by the one who died for all

▶ SALINA CAMPUS

Texts updated with help of grants

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

An always-current textbook is part of an environmental technology curriculum being developed at K-State-Salina.

The K-State program provides material for the first year of a two-year curriculum, said Stephen Swanson, associate professor of environmental engineering technology.

Educational materials will include printed information, videos, computer disks and in some cases Internet access, Swanson said.

Contributors to the curriculum will be on the lookout for new information as they go through their lives, Swanson said.

"It's what we call a perpetually renewing textbook," Swanson said. "Part of that is having information just in time."

When updates are made, they will be printed and sent out to colleges participating in the program. Educators will be advised to insert the new material at a certain point in the loose-leaf-notebook textbook, he said.

Printed material will still be a part of the educational experience because not all schools have access to the computer technology involved, Swanson said.

The Internet will make updating the textbook easier, and educators can access the Internet and see what updates are available, he said.

Bryan Ackley, a curriculum production specialist, said modules can be viewed on the Internet in Mosaic.

"We're trying to connect the students to the experience," Swanson said. "This is even more interactive than watching a video."

Swanson said the Internet also will provide the advantage of instant feedback to the book's creators.

"When you buy a textbook from the bookstore, how many of them, on the inside cover, have the name, address and phone number of the author and the remark, 'If you have any questions or want more information, please give me a call,'" Swanson said.

The entire project is financed by a grant by the Department of Defense.

A congressional mandate requires the DOD to provide retraining programs to laid-off military workers, Swanson said.

The DOD goal is a two-year program to provide skills to dismissed military employees. Environmental training is an important need of the DOD, he said.

The Grants and Contracts office on K-State's main campus told the department of engineering technology of the DOD's interest in late 1993, Swanson said.

Sixteen grants were awarded nationwide — four in each of four regions, he said. Other schools in the Midwest region are Iowa State University, Michigan State University and Ohio State University.

K-State-Salina's project is planned for three years, but it is funded for only one.

"With the mood of Congress the way it is, we're not really anticipating any more than that," Swanson said. "We're looking at this as seed money to get started, but we're not sure how far we can go."

Swanson said the team hopes to receive additional funding from other governmental and some industrial sources.

K-State-Salina is working with several community colleges and Native American colleges on this project, Swanson said.

All partner schools have military installations near them closing.

The closings have left a need for environmental cleanup, Swanson said.

Two years ago, Austin, Texas, lost Bergstrom Air Force Base, said Hosni Nabi, chief academic officer at Austin Community College.

"I think Austin is a very environmentally aware city," Nabi said. "I'd imagine we could add 40 students to the program."

Responsibilities of partner schools include identifying needs in their area and developing application courses to address those needs.

Nabi said at this point he could neither identify Austin's environmental needs nor tell how the college's courses might be designed.

Another job of the partner colleges is to find organizational sponsors, Swanson said.

The AFL-CIO labor union, Boeing, and Black and Veatch are among the project's current national sponsors.

Different opinions expected at forums

Edie said he is expecting all sorts of responses at the forums from students concerning the proposed placement of a parking garage within Memorial Stadium.

"If there is a tremendous negative response, I don't know how we will handle it," he said.

President Jon Wefald said a considerable amount of time will be taken reviewing the placement of a parking garage.

However, he said he would like to have the majority's opinion before the decision is made.

"We are going to try to make the decision a consensus," Wefald said.

Meier said she thinks the people that are going to come to the forums are going to be people who are opposed to the proposed placement of the parking garage.

"Maybe we can persuade them, change their minds or at least inform them," she said.

Race chooses Kansas for rich horse history

Linders said Kansas was selected as the site for the 1996 World Championships Endurance because of its part in the history of the Santa Fe and Oregon trails, the route of the Pony Express and the last Cavalry Post in the United States.

The Federation Equestre Internationale is the international governing body of all equine sports.

"Dr. Jerry Gillespie, head professor of clinical sciences, is the international delegate of the FEI, and mostly to his efforts the bid was put together and submitted to the FEI to have it in Manhattan," Gaughan said.

The bid was started in 1993, and the official bid was made in the summer of 1994.

The race course has to consist of 100 miles of non-repeating trail.

"The nice thing about Fort Riley would have been that we would have only had one land owner, and we now have to go and see which people around Rock Springs will let us do this on their private property," Gaughan said.

Linders said being chosen to represent your nation in a World Championship is a once-in-a-lifetime thrill for most of these fine riders and their horses.

More than 30 nations are expected to participate in the event.

"Each nation will have a rigorous selection process to choose a four-member team and two individual competitors," Linders said.

Gaughan said gold, silver and bronze medals will be awarded to the top teams and individuals.

"To assure the well-being of the horses, these events are conducted under strict veterinary control. The competing horses must be completely free of any drug during the competition and must pass rigorous physical and physiological testing at regular check points throughout the race," Linders said.

Gaughan said it is the only equine sport that is judged and regulated completely by veterinarians with the health of the horses in mind.

According to the rules, there must be a preliminary ride over the same trail the year before the actual event occurs.

There will be an On the Road to the World Championship preliminary ride Oct. 14, Linders said.

Many participants will arrive in Kansas several weeks before the actual event will take place.

Linders said they will be interested in training in the immediate area of the race.

Horses from other countries will arrive in the Kansas City International Airport and will be held there in quarantine in USDA facilities, she said.

The organizing committee is not responsible for the housing of any horses or participants until the headquarters are open Sept. 18, 1996.

Spectators will be able to enjoy the race at the actual course site or on television.

"There is interest by ESPN, CNN and other international sports broadcasting media to cover the event. Negotiations are underway to have a large sports coverage blimp on hand for coverage of the championship," Linders said.

This event will bring thousands of visitors to Kansas.

Most of them will be here for the first time, and most of them will stay for a minimum of one week, she said.

"The event will show the world the high quality of horses in Kansas, and it will demonstrate that this state can organize a successful international athletic event," Linders said.

She said the event will promote the Heartland region and will provide an estimated economic effect of more than $650,000 in new tax revenue and an estimated $30 million expenditure in Kansas associated with the championship.

Children learn to lead

Fourth-grade student Trasean Gladden is a carpenter and electrician. He said one of the hardest things to learn was how to use the tools to build the helm and stern of the ship. However, Gladden and several other students were successful in building a life-size ship.

Tim Jones, fifth-grade student, said he learned about leadership.

"I learned as stage manager that I can't really be bossy," he said.

Instead, Jones said he found working in groups and patience worked better. All students were required to participate in preliminary writing, learn electrical wiring and practice vocals.

Fourth-grade student Patonia Hall said students learned how to warm up their vocal cords, practiced breathing exercises and learned various singing exercises for the production.

Hall said she sings all the time at home, but she is scared she is going to forget her lines Wednesday and Thursday night.

"I'll just think the audience is a big chicken. Then I'll just be calm, 'cause it's just a chicken," Hall said.

Susanna Parker, music teacher, said all the students helped with precomposing the music for the opera.

"We wanted them to experience the writing and composing of the music," Parker said.

Eventually, eight student composers worked with keyboards and earphones to do compositional composing, Parker said.

The result is mind-boggling, touching and exciting, she said.

"There is such an intimate relationship between the words and music," Gibson said.

Linda Hoag, mother of fifth-grade student Matthew Hoag, said she is enthusiastic about all the things her son has learned. The learning may have begun in September for the students, but Gibson and Parker attended a summer camp.

The camp was sponsored by the Metropolitan Opera Guild of New York to learn how to give the experience of being in the spotlight to fourth- and fifth-grade students.

The Metropolitan Opera Guild of New York is also sponsoring Broadway Beginners, and the production is funded by the GE Foundation.

affairs is by getting involved as college students in different organizations on campus.

Kassebaum said she doesn't see herself as a key player in the women's movement.

She said she hopes that in some small way she has helped women in their fight for equality.

"I can't say there is any one thing I've done that's made a big difference for women," Kassebaum said.

She said she has worked hard to pass legislation that will benefit all people, not just women.

"I really think we're here to work on these issues all together," Kassebaum said.

Issues that Kassebaum has supported that affect women include women's health topics, children's issues and education concerns.

In view of recent discussions about the necessity of affirmative action, Kassebaum said she thinks affirmative action laws are necessary, but there are changes to the laws that need to be made.

"I think when people talk about affirmative action, it includes a wide range of areas," she said. "Carried too far, it damages what we're trying to do."

Kassebaum said the rigidity of affirmative action laws must be ended in order to make the laws more positive.

"We need to end a certain rigidity of quota that demeans everyone," she said.

In her political dealings, Kassebaum has been recognized as principled and independent. Not surprisingly, these are also qualities she respects in others.

"One has to have principles that are important to them and that guide them," Kassebaum said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

▶ BOARD OF REGENTS

New bill still includes budget cuts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House Appropriations Committee on Tuesday endorsed what members hope is the new and improved version of the proposed budget for the state university system.

The bill would appropriate about the same amount of money, $472 million, for the state Board of Regents and its institutions as a version of the bill endorsed on Feb. 27. The money is for fiscal year 1996, which begins July 1.

The new bill distributes the money differently in hopes of picking up enough support to get House approval of the bill. The House voted last week to send the bill back to committee after members disagreed over several significant spending issues.

The vote to endorse the new version of the bill was 14-3. The action sent it to the House for debate.

The new version of the bill reduces Gov. Bill Graves' budget recommendations for universities' general operating expenses by $5.8 million. The old version of the bill made $6 million in reductions.

Under the new version of the bill, the cuts are based on the amount by which tuition revenues have fallen short of projections. Graves recommended the spending of tax dollars to make up the shortfall. The University of Kansas would take the biggest hit, about $3.4 million.

The old version of the bill made the cuts in proportion to the size of each university's budget. The new version of the bill distributes $38 million in funds for county agricultural extension programs differently.

During House debate, members added an amendment to distribute $33,000 to each of the state's 105 counties, then 28 cents per county resident. It effectively shifted money to more populated counties.

Scott Phillips, senior in education and English, dazzled his supporters as he made his entrance to Scoreboard Tuesday night. Phillips dressed as Elvis to give his announcement that he will be running for student body president with running mate Pat Carney.

Duo announces bid for office

JASON TYLER
Collegian

Signs all over campus said Elvis was coming to Scoreboard Tuesday night.

The man with mutton chops and the big, red polyester suit wasn't Elvis; it was Scott Phillips, senior in public relations.

"Elvis is dead," Phillips said. "So is the style of leadership within the current SGA. It is time for a new style of leadership, one that is action and not position."

Phillips and Patrick Carney, senior in political science and history, arrived at Scoreboard to announce they will run for student body president and vice president this spring.

Phillips and Carney said they want to provide K-State students a chance to get involved with issues and discussions that come up on campus.

Phillips and Carney said they want to reach out to students' needs.

"We want to give the students at Kansas State University a chance to put their leadership abilities to work," Phillips said.

Phillips and Carney said they want more students to get involved and make a difference in student government activities.

"We want to restructure the committees and the working relations among those committees," Phillips said. "We want to expand the leadership development class to enable more new students to get involved in student leadership issues."

Phillips and Carney said they want to stop talking about the parking problem and develop a plan to eliminate the parking problem.

"We are absolutely against any parking garage on this University," Carney said.

"We believe a shuttle system can better handle the growing population with its parking needs while also addressing campus needs," Carney said.

Carney said the parking garage is too expensive, an eyesore and eventually the wrong solution.

Phillips and Carney said they want to eliminate the lethargic attitude and revitalize the voice of the student body.

"We want to promote more involvement and promote action right now," Phillips said. "Leadership is action, not position."

Phillips and Carney said they want to establish a mentor program with student-to-student leaders.

"When students arrive in the fall, I want to hook them up with students who have served on a committee or held an office in student government," Phillips said.

"I think this will get more students involved at an earlier age," he said.

Carney said members of student government should get together with faculty members and administrative leaders to discuss problems and come up with solutions.

Phillips and Carney said they want to promote better involvement between the University and the city of Manhattan.

"We have already sat down with Justin Kastner and opened up a dialogue to ensure that student concerns will be heard at city council meetings," Carney said.

Phillips and Carney said they also understand the financial responsibilities they have as president and vice president of this University.

"We will provide a legislative agenda that includes benefits for students at K-State rather than operations of SGA," Phillips said.

Phillips and Carney said they run on the style that allows the University as a whole to lead, follow or get the hell out of the way.

▶ UNION EXPANSION

Students to give their input on Union food

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

Two consulting groups will listen to student opinion on what kind of food service they want in the K-State Union during a forum this afternoon.

Representatives from two consulting firms will be in town to gather more input before making their recommendations on which type of food-service plan would best serve the campus, Skyler Harper, associate University architect, said.

"They are trying to visit with as many people as they can," Harper said.

The forum will be from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. today in the Union Flint Hills Room.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the consultants will share some of their findings and then be open for questions.

The groups were hired to make recommendations for the planning committees to use when trying to decide whether to continue having self-operational food service, hire an outside contract company to handle food service, bring in name-brand food vendors or combine a number of options.

Thomas Ricca and Associates of Englewood, Colo., and the Cornyn-Fasano Group, a company Ricca works with out of Portland, Ore., requested the forum as another opportunity to meet with people they didn't get to talk to during their last visit in January.

Ricca's strong point, Harper said, is in kitchen and dining-room design. The Cornyn-Fasano Group specializes in management, philosophy and organization.

Originally, the planning committee had said Ricca would give a food-service recommendation around last Wednesday.

Harper said after the forum there might be some discussion of the time schedule, but he added that planning groups do not want to rush results at the expense of the project.

"We are doing pretty good with the schedule," Harper said.

The consultants will also meet with planning committees in a closed morning session to discuss their preliminary findings, Harper said.

The meeting is closed so the consultants can be completely candid with their findings, he said.

The consultants will take a tour of the different residence-hall dining facilities over lunch to see how other campus dining centers operate, Harper said.

Project forces yet another move

MELISSA HOYT
Collegian

This is the sixth story in a continuing series that looks at how building a bridge changes the lives of the people and businesses involved.

MAKING WAY FOR K-177

Giving up something special is hard to do, but it is even harder when it is forced.

The owner of Custom Alignment Service said he was sure any way the new bridge came across Kansas Highway 177, it was going to take his building.

"In January 1991, they had a meeting to inform all of us of the possibility that the bridge was going to make some businesses move," Bud Umscheid, owner, said. "Any way you looked at it, we were going to have to move."

Custom Alignment Service specializes in wheel alignment, suspension, drive action and brakes.

"Half of our business is from other service stations. They do the sheet-metal repairs, and we do the alignment," Umscheid said.

Moving his business meant Umscheid had to give up his hobby, dirt-track car racing.

"We won the championship in 1991, and then we concentrated on this relocation thing," Umscheid said.

Umscheid said he had raced for 12 to 14 years.

"We would probably race a car two to three seasons," he said.

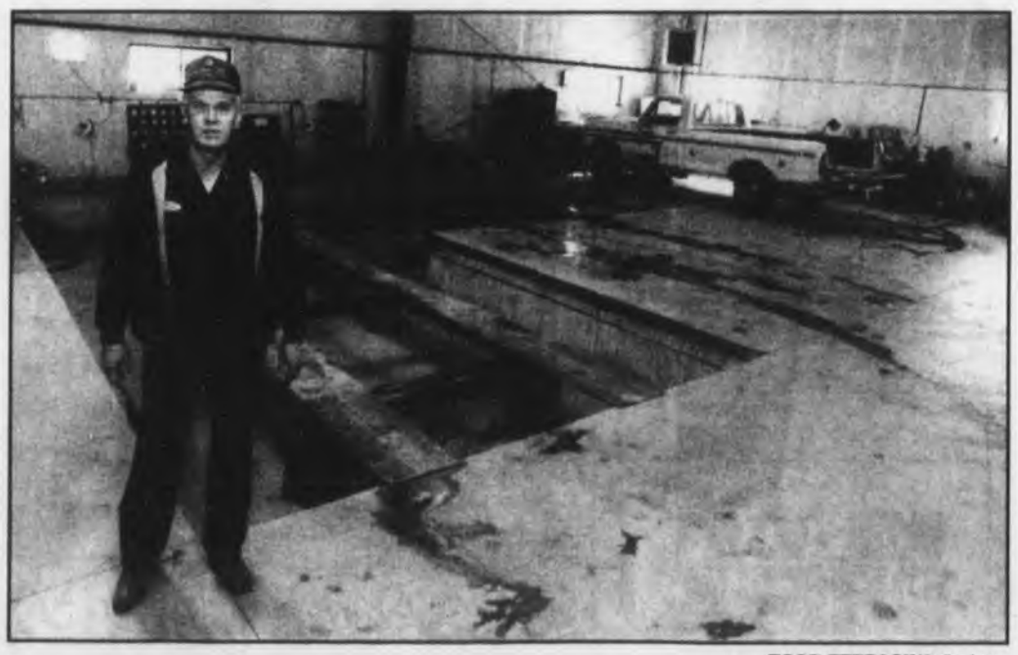
The racing season started in April or May and would last until August or September.

"We raced every Friday if it wasn't raining," Umscheid said.

Umscheid said he sold most of the race things off to help pay relocation costs.

"I saved some things for my nephews, but I just got out of it," he said.

Even if the alignment business grows, Umscheid said he wouldn't get back into the racing business.



"Oh, I'll help my nephews — cheer for them and maybe help them with their cars, but that's it," Umscheid said.

All that is left of the racing is Umscheid's trophies.

Three lonely trophies now sit in the new office window. They are the last ones won by Umscheid when he won the Junction City Track Championship in 1991.

"I have a lot more trophies. Those are just the ones that fit in the window,"

▶ MEASURE PASSED TO CUT NUMBER OF EXPENSIVE, FRIVOLOUS LAWSUITS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans muscled to House passage Tuesday a measure designed to pressure combatants in lawsuits to settle their differences short of costly trials.

The bill was strongly opposed by trial lawyers.

The measure, approved 232-193 in a near-party-line vote, was the first of three bills expected to clear the House this week.

The bill is a Republican effort to cut down on what they consider frivolous lawsuits.

Supporting the measure were 216 Republicans and 16 Democrats.

Voting against were 181 Democrats and 11 Republicans, a political cleavage that contrasted sharply with the bipartisan support for most elements of the "Contract With America" that had cleared the House earlier.

In a bid to dramatize a need for changes in the legal system, Rep. Robert Goodlatte, R-Va., said the Girl Scouts of Washington must sell 87,000 boxes of cookies each year to pay for liability insurance.

"This is not a problem that deals with corporate America alone," Goodlatte said.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., countered by saying the Girl Scouts want no part of the debate.

Their message is: "Please please, this is not our legislation," she said.

Opponents of the measure said it would tilt the system too heavily in favor of corporations, some of which have contributed to a huge lobbying campaign on behalf of the three bills.

▶ LAWMAKERS FIND CEREALS MAKE BUDGETS GO SNAP, CRACKLE, POP

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two congressmen produced a breakfast shopping list Tuesday and called it a rude awakening.

They found it cost $4.49 for a box of Raisin Bran, $4.69 for Frosted Flakes, $4.25 for Rice Krispies and $3.59 for Cheerios.

Democrat Sam Gejdenson of Connecticut asked the Justice Department to undertake an antitrust investigation to see if major cereal makers were conspiring to keep prices high.

Kellogg's, General Mills, Post and Quaker Oats control 85 percent of cereal sales, they said, and take too much profit.

They said 55 percent of the price of cereal goes to advertising and profits.

While the lawmakers point critically to the overall prices of boxes of cereal, the Grocery Manufacturers of America said the Federal Trade Commission spent 10 years looking at competition in the cereal industry.

In 1982 they found no evidence of anti-competitive practices.

In fact, the Grocery Manufacturers said, the market is so competitive that more than 60 new cereals have been introduced in the past five years.

Gina Talamona, a Justice Department spokeswoman, said Attorney General Janet Reno was willing to consider any information submitted by the lawmakers.

▶ GINGRICH SPEAKS AGAINST SCHOOLS' HOMOSEXUALITY PROGRAMS

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Newt Gingrich criticized school programs that portray homosexuality favorably Tuesday, particularly any using active homosexuals to counsel teen-agers.

This was one day after his lesbian sister lobbied Capitol Hill on gay rights.

Speaking at his daily news conference, Gingrich said some school programs offered to counter discrimination give homosexuals a forum for promoting their way of life.

"I don't think we want people out with 'Heather Has Two Mommies,' in first grade explaining that homosexuality is a reasonable alternative in lifestyle," Gingrich said.

The book he mentioned is a story about lesbian parents.

It was second on the American Library Association's 1994 list of books people tried to ban.

Gingrich's concern was not limited to the primary grades.

"You have had, clearly, examples of what is in effect recruitment in so-called counseling programs," Gingrich said.

"So I'm very cautious about the idea that you want to have active homosexuals in junior high school and high school explaining to young people that they have all these various wonderful options," he said.

▶ NUMBER OF U.N. PEACEKEEPING TROOPS IN CROATIA TO DECREASE

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — The United Nations is offering to water down its peacekeeping mission in Croatia in hopes of keeping its troops in place and averting a second Serb-Croat war, U.N. officials said Tuesday.

The changes may appease Croatia's government, which ordered the 12,000 peacekeepers out by March 31, but it's unlikely the rebel Serbs who hold nearly a third of the republic's territory will agree.

President Franjo Tudjman's order in January, blaming the peacekeepers for failing to restore government control over rebel areas, raised the specter of renewed war once the peacekeeping troops leave.

According to officials who spoke on condition of anonymity, the United Nations is offering to replace peacekeeping troops on the 700-mile Serb-Croat front line with unarmed monitors.

If the monitors are unarmed and limited only to reporting what they see, troops would have a freer hand to attack each other.

In addition, U.N. troops are offering to take up positions on Croatia's border, as Tudjman demands.

Thursday's Landon Lecture, initiated by Alfred Landon in 1966, will bring the 100th speaker to the stage at K-State

Alf Landon, former governor for Kansas, was the initiator of the lecture series.

ALFRED LANDON

- Kansas governor 1933-1937
- Gave initial Landon Lecture on Dec. 13, 1966
- Republican nominee for president, lost to Franklin Roosevelt
- Died in October 1987
- Presidents included as speakers: Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Ronald Reagan

Alfred Landon, former governor of Kansas and one-time presidential candidate, will be honored Thursday for the 100th time.

Secretary of Defense William Perry will give the 100th Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

The Landon Lecture Series, unique to K-State, began in 1966.

Its purpose is to honor Alf Landon. Landon is sometimes called Kansas' most distinguished statesman. He was governor from 1933 to 1937 and was the 1936 Republican nominee for president, but he lost to Franklin Roosevelt.

The idea of the series originated during one of many conversations between Landon and William Boyer, a former political science department head at K-State.

The two were at Landon's home in Topeka discussing politics, as they often did. In one meeting, Boyer mentioned the University of Chicago's lecture series on public affairs. It was named in honor of E.L. Godkin, former editor of the Nation. Boyer wrote that he wondered why there should not be a series named for Landon.

In the book "The Landon Lectures Perspectives from the First Twenty Years," Boyer wrote that James McCain, K-State's president at the time, quickly approved the idea.

The first Landon Lecture was delivered by Landon on Dec. 13, 1966. The lecture was given in the ballroom of the K-State Union, as were many of the early lectures.

In his speech, titled "New Challenges in International Relations," Landon spoke on various themes Landon lecturers would return to continuously. Among those topics were Vietnam, international trade and nuclear arms.

Since 1966, various world-renowned politicians, journalists, cabinet members and other significant players in public issues have spoken in the Landon Lecture Series. Presidents Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan have been among the speakers.

Three to five Landon lectures are given each academic year.

Charles Reagan, current Landon Lecture chairman, said lecturers have always been chosen by a consensus of the Landon Lecture chairperson, K-State's president and Alf Landon — before he died in October 1987. Since Landon's death, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., Landon's daughter, has been more involved in selecting speakers.

"You can look in Time magazine and find out who Landon lecturers might be," Reagan said.

The Landon Lecture Series was quite informal when it began, Reagan said.

In 1967, two presidential candidates presented Landon lectures. The two were Gov. Ronald Reagan of California and Gov. George Romney of Michigan. These two speakers made the Landon Lecture Series a national media event, Boyer wrote.

Ronald Reagan's October 1967 lecture was the first Landon Lecture in Ahearn Field House. Reagan returned in 1982. The estimated crowd of 15,000 is one of the largest indoor crowds in state history, according to Boyer's book.

In March 1968, Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-N.Y., delivered a lecture that matched Reagan's in attendance.

K-State President Jon Wefald said based on what he has heard, Kennedy's speech was one of the top attention-getters in the series.

Kennedy had officially declared his candidacy for president two days earlier. However, it was during his Landon Lecture that he truly launched his campaign.

Kennedy was expected to speak about "The Crises in Our Cities." However, he ended up speaking against U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

According to Boyer's book, the announcement of the Kennedy lecture led to threatening hate letters beforehand. The FBI was called for strengthened security.

In March 1975, Secretary of the Treasury

■ See LANDON Page 14

Sen. Robert Kennedy launched his presidential campaign in 1968 at one of the most-attended Landon Lectures.

Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, Saudi oil minister, was controversial as the first international Landon lecturer.

President Richard Nixon did not deliver his 1970 Landon Lecture without criticism about the U.S. invasion of Cambodia.

Peacekeeping, human aid among issues for lecture

Secretary of Defense William J. Perry will be speaking for the 100th Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lectures, said some of the issues that Perry might speak about are peacekeeping and human aid.

"One challenge for the defense department is the budget and the enormous cost of advanced-weapons systems," Reagan said.

Lt. Col. P.J. Crowley said he met Perry in Chicago Tuesday to fly back to Manhattan for the Landon Lecture.

"The main theme of the speech will be our policy choices concerning Bosnia and what he feels is the right course of action for the United States with the allies. It might be in the national interest of the U.S. to make sure that the conflict does not spread to other parts of Europe," Crowley said.

Crowley said it's a matter of whether the U.S. and its allies should become fully engaged in trying to enforce a peace settlement in Bosnia.

"We ultimately cannot necessarily enforce a peace settlement against warring parties who are not themselves interested in making peace," Crowley said.

Crowley said Perry may address other issues of foreign policy, as well as the defense budget and where to spend the taxpayers' money.

Reagan said scheduling Perry to speak for the 100th Landon Lecture was a great opportunity.

"I was not going to take a chance of not getting this lecture. It is important because of the status of our lecture series. According to former President George Bush, the Landon Lecture series is the most distinguished lecture series in the nation," Reagan said.

The Landon Lecture is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

International students shouldn't pay special fee

When the Women's Center needs more money, should all women attending K-State be required to pay the fee because only they benefit from it?

The administration set an ugly precedent this week when it decided to charge all international students $15 apiece for costs the International Student Center can't handle.

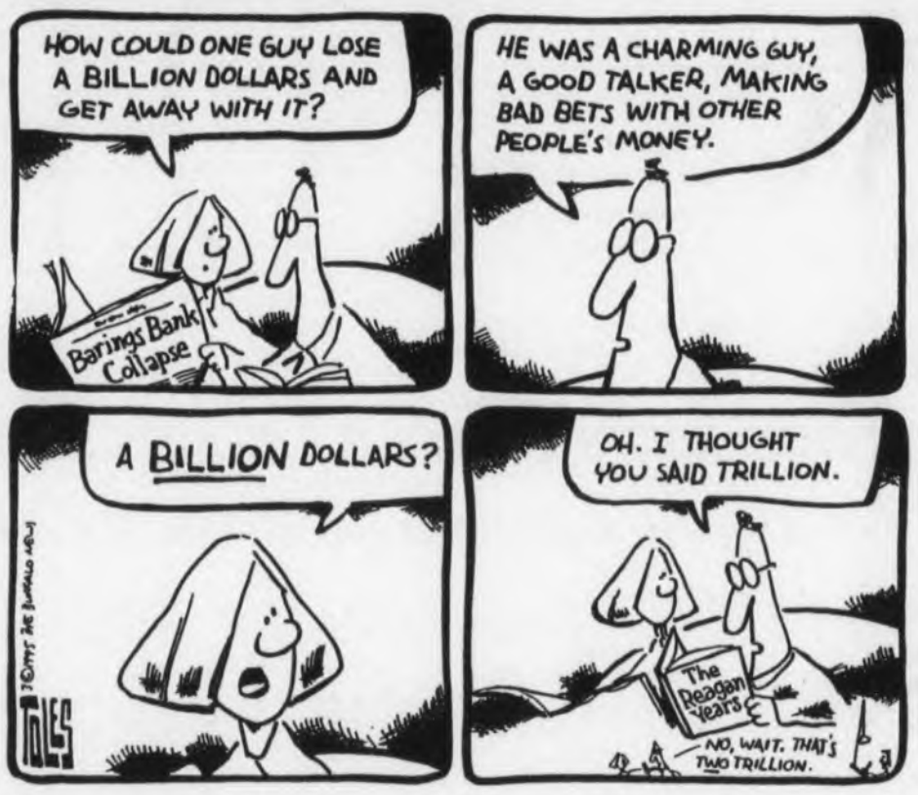
The money, which is needed for more personnel at the center, will be taken from some 1,100 K-State international students.

The reasoning was that international students must pay the costs because they benefit from the center.

When the Women's Center needs more money, should all women attending K-State be required to pay the fee because only they benefit from it?

Should all handicapped K-State students pay for new ramps and signs because only they benefit from them?

Should black students be the only contributors to the Black Student Union?



Should we seek out all the homosexuals and bisexuals on campus and make them pay costs for the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society?

This sort of decision, however well-intended, is discriminatory.

As a campus organization, the International Student Center should receive all its money from all K-State students.

The administration needs to change its tune and seek money from the campus as a whole, not just the fraction of students the center serves.

Belief in life at conception could cause problems

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Warning: The following may be sensitive for the sarcastically challenged.

Are you pro-life?

Who isn't against the senseless, selfish and greedy decisions that have slaughtered people time and time again? Millions and millions of lives have been lost in a tide of blood that swirls at the whirlpool to hell.

Self-interested people have kept this practice legal for too long. No one knows how many innocent people have been killed around the world and throughout history because of the choices of a minority of people. The carnage rages on, yet more and more money pours into the coffers of those who reap this sorrow.

That's why I'm firmly against all of this horror I'm describing that's caused by drafting people to fight wars. For thousands of years, people (usually men) have been herded like cattle off to battle to fill the pockets of a few greedy people. These people had no choice in the matter: they either had to fight or be executed by their own people.

It's sickening.

Anyone who is against the murder of innocent life has to oppose the government-mandated murder of 18-year-old people in war.

It would be hypocritical to call yourself pro-life and support the world's governments' habits of killing millions of mothers' innocent children.

Imagine if the whole world believed that life begins at conception. Oh, the fun we could have.

Imagine your travel agent giving you a pregnancy test before booking your vacation. If you test positive, the travel agent could charge you twice as much for being two people. This extra revenue alone could solve the airlines' financial crises. The competition for discounted "embryo rates" would be incredible!

Why, some entrepreneur could start up a service called Placental Airlines. Pregnant passengers would be treated to extra-wide seats and aisles. In-flight meals could include bacon and Oreos, hot dogs and chocolate pudding, and apple-butter meatloaf.

What a pro-life concept.

What a vision!

Imagine you could claim your fetus as an exemption on your income taxes. At this time of year when so many people are filing their 1040s, an extra exemption or two could come in handy. Why not allow a household to qualify for another exemption if there were a fetus in the family during the calendar year?

With so many teen and incestuous pregnancies going on in the Midwest and the South, single households would be blessed windfalls of huge tax refunds.

Miscarriages may only qualify for half of an exemption, however, because they're technically abortions.

Imagine having to order from the children's menu and from the regular menu when you're pregnant. After all, you could be arrested and charged with neglect if you didn't feed your child. Anyone caught smoking or drinking while pregnant, even if the woman didn't know she was pregnant, could go to jail for child abuse. That would be one good way to clean up the morality of America, huh?

All of these innovations would come about if everyone accepted that life begins at conception.

Wouldn't the tactics used to prevent abortions be intriguing if abortions were made illegal?

You could tune into one of those real-life police shows and follow the cops as they burst into a doctor's office.

The doctor would throw her instruments into the air as she puts her hands up, and the cops would yell, "Freeze, shit-bag!"

Anyone caught drinking or smoking while pregnant, even if the woman didn't know she was pregnant, could go to jail for child abuse. That would be a good way to clean up the morality of America, huh?

Wouldn't that be good for America? The War on Wombs kind of has an interesting ring to it, anyway.

Instead of the pathetic propaganda being put forth by the anti-abortion crowd, they could get down to that oh-so-effective "Just Say No" stuff of the Reagan era. Here's a possible script that should be up to conservative snuff (remember, it's copyrighted).

GIRL 1: Hey, you want to abort your baby?

GIRL 2: Um, no, that's wrong.

GIRL 1: Come on, everyone's doing it! What are you, chicken?

GIRL 2: No. Abortion is illegal.

GIRL 1: Who cares? I've got a doctor who'll take good care of you!

GIRL 2: I said no!

ANNOUNCER: Just Say No to abortion, the first time and everytime.

That ought to work!

When weddings get carried away

KADY MASSEY

I'm getting married in May, and I guess I am finally approaching what is known as crunch time.

I've been wanting to write about my upcoming nuptials for a while now, but so far it's been pretty boring until this past weekend.

In the interest of being an enthusiastic bride, I went to my very first bridal fair. Let me first say that I was debating just going down to the courthouse and doing the whole ceremony there, but I figured our mothers would feel cheated, so I decided to have a wedding — a small, simple wedding.

Ha.

I went to the fair by myself, which immediately put me in the vast minority of everyone else there. It seems that as soon as a girl gets engaged, she's not supposed to make a decision without consulting an entourage of in-laws, relatives, friends and various hangers-on.

I never completely realized just what a racket getting married is. Actually, the marriage itself doesn't get a lot of attention; the wedding is where everyone tries to make a quick buck.

At this fair, I saw champagne fountains, photo albums bigger than the original Bible, engraved rolling pins and plenty of people willing to make my wedding the "event of my lifetime" and everyone else's.

I miss the good old days when marriage was the focus — not the ceremony that got you there.

When I thought about this, I realized that everyone gets married thinking that they'll only do it once. So all the people involved think they should empty their wallets the first time around.

The nice thing about this bridal fair was that I was given a big bag full of free stuff, including a pretty nifty wedding planner. This was a good gift.

When I got my planner home and ripped off the shrink wrap, I found, to my surprise, that I am not a traditional bride. Evidently, engagements are supposed to be at least a year long. Mine is a full six months from start to finish.

This book was full of interesting little tips about selecting color schemes and how many beer steins to register for. It also contained useful little facts about making a marriage work, things like keeping the romance alive and communication, but nothing about not going to bed angry.

I also discovered the "new cooking rules" — whoever gets home first cooks. I work in the evenings, and my fiancé works days — does this mean I never have to cook?

My wedding has no theme; my dress doesn't even have much of a train. All I want is a simple little wedding with my friends and family.

I remember watching the royal wedding with Prince Charles and Princess Diana on television. That particular couple was billed as a fairy-tale couple, and the wedding was the ceremony of the century. They were supposed to last a lifetime and carry Britain into a new era. We all know how that turned out.

I miss the good old days when marriage was the focus — not the ceremony that got you there. Maybe, with the high divorce rate, the wedding is the one thing a couple can guarantee. If the journey down life's path isn't smooth, at least the send-off will be.

No, I'm not bitter about weddings, and I think my marriage will be great. I'm just starting to lose some of my excitement. Weddings are sugary-sweet affairs where everyone is nice to each other, and people do corny things like throw grain, release balloons and dance the funky chicken. No one makes that punch without a really good reason, and how many times does the average person order a three-tiered cake?

Weddings, it seems, have started to take on mythic proportions. No wedding is complete without a DJ, 64 matching centerpieces and a flock of white doves to be released at the appropriate moment.

Personally, I blame Princess Di.

"One possible solution to the parking situation may be the redesign of some of the current parking lots on campus."

DON AYE

Dear editor,

Although I commute to campus from Lawrence, I must preface this letter by stating that I personally have never had a problem finding a space to park on campus. However, for the sake of argument, I'll assume that there is indeed a problem or that there will be one in the foreseeable future.

As I'm certain everyone who reads the Collegian is now aware, a proposal has recently been revealed that would involve building a 1,250-car garage in the middle of Memorial Stadium while turning the south Union parking lot into a grassy area. This would result in a net gain in parking spaces of just under 1,000 spaces. While this would indeed eliminate any parking problems the University may currently be facing, I am concerned that K-State may be enamored with a grandiose project when a more low-key solution may be in order.

One possible solution to the parking situation may be the redesign of some of the current parking lots on campus. I did some rough measurements on the lot where I usually park west of Memorial Stadium. According to my measurements and using a table on the design of parking lots from a textbook, I calculated that by eliminating the landscaping between rows and altering the aisles, slightly more than 70 spaces could be added to the lot. Out of curiosity, I then went to another large lot (I think it is known as B-3 or B-16, but I'm not certain) and repeated my measurements. By eliminating the between-row landscaping in that lot, 90 additional spaces could be added.

Since I was in the area, I looked at the small lot behind the veterinary-medicine building. Once again, repeating my measurements, I determined that 20 spaces could probably be added here. Forty-five minutes of evaluating parking lots over lunch yielded 180 potential parking spaces.

In addition, spaces could be added by reconfiguring the aisles in the parking lot west of Memorial Stadium to eliminate cross traffic. That might add between six and eight spaces per row. (This is just a guess, because I did not measure this dimension.) Something else to look into as a possible way to increase the number of spots would be to have aisles for one-way traffic instead of two. This configuration would allow for a narrower aisle, possibly leading to an increased number of rows.

If I remember correctly, parking lots are considered somewhat efficient when the area per car (including aisles, landscaping, etc.) is less than 240 square feet with around 200 square feet per car being considered efficient. I would suggest that someone check the plans for our current lots (and verify what is considered efficient) and determine if K-State's lots are efficient. Then we could work on ways to maximize the capacity of our current lots.

"Something else to look into would be to have aisles for one-way traffic instead of two."

If, after analyzing the current lot structure, the powers that be deem that a garage is still needed, I would suggest an alternative site. I may be in the minority, but I believe a garage would better suit the University if placed by the residence halls, such as across Claflin from Haymaker. This would free up some of what is currently residence-hall parking for general-student parking. Although this would not benefit me at all, it seems to me that it may be safer for the residents. I would rather have students walking to and from the outer reaches of campus by day than have the resident of the dorms do so at night.

In conclusion, I feel that while this issue has been analyzed for some time, more analysis should be done.

Also, this analysis should focus first on improving the efficiency of what is currently available before designing $10- to $12-million projects.

News anchor's job both on, off screen

JAMIE CONGROVE
Collegian

Editors' note: This is the first in an ongoing series about different professions and the responsibilities that are included in an normal work day.

When most people turn on their TV sets to watch the evening news, they want to watch a friend.

Lori Hutchinson, Channel 49 news anchor and K-State alumna, said she wants to be that friend.

Although Hutchinson said being a news anchor is more than just seeing someone on your television from 5 to 5:30 p.m. and from 10 to 10:30 p.m., she said she loves her job.

"In my job, I get to experience something new every day. There are always new challenges," Hutchinson said.

"I look forward to going to work every day. And I get to meet so many people. It expands my knowledge after meeting all of those people. It's hard to have a narrow mind," she said.

One problem she has found meeting so many people is that it is hard to remember if she has actually met people or if they just know her from watching the news.

"It makes me feel uncomfortable sometimes when people say hello, and I don't know who I'm talking to. But I have never had a bad experience with the public," she said.

Hutchinson said she starts her work day at 1:30 p.m., and it doesn't end until 11:30 p.m.

During the day, her functions range from fielding calls from the concerned public to writing and editing stories to attending many publicity events.

For instance, she goes to schools in the afternoons sometimes to read books to classes.

When she fields phone calls, Hutchinson said, she always tries to help as best as she can.

"If we can't do a story on them, we give them phone numbers and resources where they can turn. We try to find them sources of help," she said.

Hutchinson said that professionally, the hardest part of her job is covering stories that are bad news about youth.

"Any time I think of stories that stick out in my mind, it is the stories that involve children who are tragically killed or hurt," she said.

"I feel like we need to take more of an interest in people when they are younger and teach parents and the community to raise their children," Hutchinson said.

"A lot of things seem to go back to how kids are raised," Hutchinson said.

But personally, the hardest part of Hutchinson's job, she said, is leaving her 8-month-old baby, Matthew, at home.

"It's really hard. I feel guilty sometimes when there is a big news day, and I can't help my co-workers. And when I'm at work, I feel guilty when I can't spend time with Matt," she said. "I feel guilty a lot."

Hutchinson said the reason she wanted to be in journalism was because she wanted the challenge and because of the hope that her work would mean something.

"I want to know that what I report would better people in their daily lives," she said.

Her co-workers said she's doing a pretty good job at that.

Michelle Ryan, morning news anchor at Channel 49 and also a K-State graduate, said she has never heard any negative talk about Hutchinson.

Ryan said the thing she likes best about Hutchinson is that she is very easy to work with.

"She's not at all a prima donna. She doesn't have that anchor air at all about her. She's basically the star of our station, but she doesn't act like it," Ryan said.

"From the day I started interning there to the day I got the job as morning news anchor, she has never treated me any different," she said.

"She is a very good mentor. And to admire someone professionally and personally is a high compliment," she said.

Before coming to Channel 49 in December 1991, Hutchinson was a reporter in Amarillo, Texas, at KVII.

She moved to Kansas because of her husband.

"My husband's business is based in Topeka. And when it comes to choosing, I choose a family over a career," she said.

Hutchinson said a common misconception people have about her job is that it is high-paying.

"The hours are long, and pay is fairly low. But if you like what you do, then that's the most important thing," she said.

She also said her favorite part of her job is writing and editing, not particularly being in front of the camera.

"My first love is writing and creating. I like taking a long story and making it into 20 seconds and then hearing the reaction from someone about how they benefited from it."

Hutchinson said she feels a lot of pressure from her job.

"I know as a journalist if our ratings aren't what they should be, then for the good of my co-workers and the station, they probably need to make a change. But ratings aren't contingent on one person. It's a team effort. But the first person to go is usually the anchor," she said.

Although Hutchinson said she wasn't sure what is in store for her in the future, she said she hopes she can stay in journalism of some form.

Hutchinson also said she encourages those who are interested in journalism to get an internship.

"You can learn a lot from books and professors, but the best way to learn is to get experience and to do it. We all remember what it was like to be in your shoes," she said.

Economics key to crisis

CARRIE LININ
Collegian

The African smuggling crisis is political, not economic, said a speaker at the Vernon Larson International Luncheon Series Tuesday afternoon.

Kisangani Emizet, professor in political science at K-State, presented a lecture about the smuggling industry in Africa and his involvement with it.

Emizet smuggled coffee and other cash crops in Africa to gain experience as part of his dissertation.

"Right now there are three governments fighting for leadership in certain states," Emizet said.

The definition of smuggling, according to Emizet, is the import and export of goods in violation of state regulation.

The total smuggling operation between African states makes up almost 60 percent of trade revenue.

"The idea is simple. The more smuggling activities, the more the state will not survive," Emizet said.

Smuggling is a form of survival for some African nations.

"They do it because they do not believe they belong to the state itself, which they believe to be a superstructure," he said.

Many countries export more cash crops than they produce by importing cash crops through smugglers and then exporting it for a higher price.

Emizet said the people trade in violation of regulation because they can make more off their cash crops elsewhere than in their own country.

"For instance, one pound of coffee is 10 cents higher in Kenya, and I am in Zaire. Then I will want to sell my coffee in Kenya to enjoy price disparity," Emizet said.

Emizet said smuggling is just a reaction to over-regulation.

"The state tends to exclude certain ethnic groups from some spoils, so they smuggle to survive or accumulate wealth," Emizet said.

Women are the most common smugglers in Nigeria, Kenya and South Asia, Emizet said.

They are the most common because they are discriminated against in these countries, and this is their only source of support, Emizet said.

Emizet said women outnumber men almost 4-to-1 in the smuggling industry because they do all the short-distance smuggling.

Men are also involved in smuggling, but only for long distances, Emizet said.

Smuggling is institutionalizing itself, and as long as there are cash crops, there is the possibility of smuggling, Emizet said.

A new idea of social order in which trust is possible makes people comply with obligations when food prices are possible without smuggling.

"It is much different than we experience in this society. It is their way of doing business, where we do business over the counter. Their business is much more dangerous than we do here," said Bob Newsome, an audience member and retiree from the Northeast Area Extension Program.

William L. Richter, assistant provost for international programs, said he agreed that the topic sounded unusual and dangerous.

"This is a very unusual topic. It's very rarely you find someone who has been involved in smuggling as part of their dissertation preparation. I felt that it was fascinating, and he presented it very well," he said.

Hearing about countries that multiply their cash crops without having the capabilities to do it legally was a high point, said Kim Hamilton, writer and multicultural constituent program coordinator for the Alumni Association.

"One point I found to be very interesting was the fact that a lot of the countries are exporting more products than they actually produce," she said.

BRIEFS & NOTES

BUFFS erase streak

The streak is over.

Colorado's 30-game losing streak in Manhattan ended Saturday afternoon as the Buffs defeated K-State 70-51.

The loss dropped the Cats to 12-14 overall and 3-11 in Big Eight Conference.

Entering halftime, the Cats led the Buffaloes 33-29 on 43-percent shooting.

The second half was an entirely different story. The Cats shot a frigid 14 percent from the floor and only managed 18 points.

"We couldn't throw one in the ocean," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "We were in a complete coma offensively."

Belvis Noland led the Cats with 20 points. Tyrone Davis added 13 points and 5 rebounds.

Freshman guard Mark Young said the loss was one that hurt because it guaranteed the Cats last place.

"It hurts a lot because everybody picked us to finish last, and that's what happened."

PHILL SPIKER

LAYOFF not productive

Yanz

After a week layoff, the K-State baseball team was rusty in its return to Frank Myers Field.

Sunday's 16-5 loss at the hands of the Northern Iowa Panthers dropped the team's record to 4-4 for the season.

K-State coach Mike Clark said his team was not mentally prepared for the game.

"We were thinking about 150 other things, other than playing baseball," Clark said.

The Cats' ace starter Eric Yanz was rocked early and often Sunday.

The Panthers pounded out eight runs in Yanz's five innings, all earned. Yanz brought an impressive 2-0 record and 2.04 earned run average into the game.

On the offensive side, the Cats managed only five base hits, with no player collecting more than one.

The lone bright spot for the Cats was rightfielder Chris Hess, who extended his hitting streak to seven games.

The Cats take the field against Benedictine College at 3 p.m. today. and open Big Eight play this weekend in Stillwater, Okla., with a doubleheader this weekend against Oklahoma State.

TENNIS sweeps matches

For the first time in more than a month, the K-State tennis team captured a pair of wins over Drake and Northern Illinois this weekend in Des Moines, Iowa. With the victories, the Wildcats snapped a three-match losing streak and improved their overall team mark to 5-4 on the season.

The Cats slipped past host Drake 5-4. Against Drake, K-State took victory in the top three singles positions. In No. 1 singles, Karina Kuregian defeated Nikki Uelze. Karen Nicholson defeated Susan Hall in No. 2 singles.

Against Northern Illinois as the Wildcats did not even drop a game the entire day.

Next up for K-State is match-ups with Tulane, Rice and Cornell.

Big Eight teams converge on Kansas City

Scrambling for the title

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Eight teams will make the trip to Kansas City's Kemper Arena this weekend with one goal in mind — a Big Eight Tournament championship.

However, the No. 1-seeded Kansas Jayhawks are the tournament favorite.

"I think depth's why Kansas really is a legitimate contender for the national championship," Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said.

K-State coach Tom Asbury, whose team faces the Jayhawks at noon Friday, agrees with Sutton's assessment.

"They are terrific," Asbury said. "They are so deep. I see them playing UCLA in the national-title game.

"It's still a KU-K-State game, though."

The Big Eight Tournament could also make or break two teams sitting on the postseason-tournament bubbles.

Those two teams are Iowa State and Nebraska. After jumping out strong early in the Big Eight race, the Cyclones limped home and finished fifth in the conference.

The Cyclones also finished 6-8 in the conference, which is a mark that most NCAA Tournament analysts say you reach to get an invitation to the Big Dance.

However, ISU coach Tim Floyd said his team is still coming into the tournament with some momentum.

"I think just from the standpoint of winning in late-game situations, it's got to give our guys some confidence," Floyd said.

Nebraska is most likely out of an NCAA bid, but the Huskers do have a chance at the NIT Tournament.

Asbury said he thinks the Huskers are worthy of an NIT bid.

"The only way that they will get an NCAA bid is if they win it all," Asbury said. "They will probably get an NIT bid. Seven teams in postseason play isn't bad. It just shows you how tough this conference is."

The Colorado Buffaloes are this season's No. 6 seed, which is their highest seed in 10 years. CU is also coming off of three Big Eight victories.

"Everybody's played well down the stretch," CU coach Joe Harrington said. "It hasn't been one player."

Oklahoma State is the No. 2 seed in the tournament, and they face the Huskers, a team they have never defeated in the Big Eight Tournament. Nebraska is a perfect 4-0 against the Pokes.

This game is also a repeat of last season's championship game.

Missouri is coming into the tournament riding a roller coaster. After riding to as high as second place in the Big Eight, the Tigers dropped games to the likes of CU and Nebraska.

However, Missouri coach Norm Stewart said he likes this time of year and the Big Eight Tournament.

"I'm just looking forward to the ballgame," Stewart said.

Cats face challenge in No. 2 ranked KU

No. 8-seeded K-State faces No. 1 seed Kansas in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State coach Tom Asbury knows the cards are stacked against him and his Wildcat squad.

The 12-14 Wildcats enter this weekend's Big Eight Tournament as the No. 8 seed, and two of his starters are suffering from injuries and sickness.

To make things even more difficult, Asbury has to lead his team to battle against Kansas, the Big Eight's No. 1 seed and the second-ranked team in the nation.

Asbury said he thinks the Jayhawks can win the national championship.

"They are a terrific team," Asbury said. "They are so deep. I really do think that they can win the national championship because they are so deep. I really don't see any weakness in them.

"This is our postseason right here."

That's exactly the attitude that Asbury said it's going to take to get the Cats up for Friday's match-up.

"This is still KU-K-State," Asbury said. "I hope that there is some hope. We'll have to get our kids ready, and I'd like to think that they will be.

"You never know what can happen in basketball. The only surprise that I ever have in this game is that people bet on it."

If there is an advantage to facing the Hawks in the first round, it is that the Cats know KU's style of play.

"We're familiar with them," Asbury said. "I can't tell you what we're going to do strategically different, but I know that we're going to have to rebound better."

Rebounding is an area that Asbury said concerns him.

"They pose much bigger problems with their height," Asbury said. "You can play at a high level of intensity and play pretty well, but you can't defend against size."

K-State still could be without the services of forward Demond Davis, Asbury said.

"He was hobbling around practice yesterday," Asbury said. "I thought that he would be better by now, but I'm not encouraged."

Elliot Hatcher is suffering from a high fever, which limited his abilities in the Cats' loss Saturday to Colorado.

"I hope that he's OK," Asbury said. "We need him to be successful."

As the Cats go limping to Kansas City, the Jayhawks are an entirely different story.

KU is riding high after defeating Oklahoma State Sunday to capture the Big Eight title.

However, KU coach Roy Williams said he knows that funny things can happen in the Big Eight Tournament.

Cowgirls end Cats' season for 2nd year in a row

DAN LEWERENZ

For the fourth straight year, K-State fell short in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

The Wildcats never led as Oklahoma State dropped K-State 69-59.

Oklahoma State jumped out to an early lead, going up by five on a three-pointer by junior Stacy Coffey.

The Cats closed the gap to one on a pair of shots by Shanele Stires.

But the Cowgirls closed out the half, outscoring K-State with a 28-10 run in the last 17:44, paced by Coffey's 5-of-5, 13-point performance.

The Cats connected on only seven of 20 shots in the first half, missing all five attempts from behind the three-point arc.

"We got off to a bad start," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

"We just didn't shoot the ball really well.

"I didn't really look at the statistics at halftime. I felt bad enough, and I knew our ladies did, too. I didn't need the sheet to tell me we weren't playing very well."

The Cats made a run in the second half, cutting the Cowgirl lead to seven with 10:05 remaining.

However, free throws by juniors Amy Scales and Yogi York restored the OSU lead to double digits, where it would remain for the rest of the game.

"We're not just going to come in and lay down," Agler said.

"We responded well, even put ourself back in position. But we got an opportunity and didn't take advantage of it.

"When you're down 19 at halftime, you're not going to get a chance to blow opportunities."

The K-State offense failed to get on track.

Though Stires and Brit Jacobson each finished with 24 points, only two other K-State players scored. Andria Jones finished with six, and Missy Decker had five.

"We just struggled to find the consistency in our offense," Stires said.

"We struggled to find any kind of rhythm. And credit Oklahoma State.

"They did a good job of spreading us out and keeping us from finding the rhythm."

> "We're not just going to come in and lay down. We responded well, even put ourself back in position."
> BRIAN AGLER
> K-State women's basketball coach

Agler said that K-State's offense must be more effective for the Cats to be successful.

"Just look at our statistics. When you run a motion offense, and you get just eight assists and 20 turnovers, you're not going to be successful," Agler said.

K-State's Missy Decker looks to drive around OSU's Yogi York in the Cats' loss Saturday. This was the fourth straight year that K-State didn't advance past the first round.

Buffs capture Big Eight title in Salina

JEREMY CRABTREE

SALINA — No. 3 Colorado is the queen of the Big Eight Conference.

After sweeping through the Big Eight regular season untouched, the Buffaloes raged through the Big Eight Tournament with three victories to capture the tournament title.

The third and crowning victory came as the Buffs jumped out quickly to defeat No. 22 Kansas 61-45.

With the three wins, the Buffs finished a perfect 17-0 in the Big Eight this season.

"This is sweet," said Colorado guard and tournament Most Valuable Player Shelly Sheetz. "I wanted my teammates to experience coming to Salina and cutting the nets down.

"It was sweet going 17-0 in the Big Eight. It's very hard to describe. It's so emotional. Now we're off to bigger and better things in the tournament — on to our next goal."

The 17 wins this season put the Buffs into an elite class of former Big Eight teams, as only one other team has ever swept through both the Big Eight regular season and the tournament undefeated.

Now make it two.

"We met both of our goals this season," CU coach Ceal Barry said. "We wanted to win the regular-season championship, and we wanted to win the Big Eight Tournament.

"This team is special."

KU coach Marian Washington said she agrees.

"I can't compare them to UConn," Washington said. "They're a wonderful champion. They played great."

Before the championship game, there was some debate in the media about who was the Big Eight's best player.

Was KU's Angela Aycock the best? Or was it Sheetz, who was named the regular-season Big Eight Player of the Year?

Aycock ripped through the first two rounds of the Big Eight Tournament, scoring in double-digits in the KU victories.

However, Aycock could only muster seven points against the CU defense.

"Emotionally, I'm exhausted," Aycock said. "They played great defense."

Then Sheetz put on a clinic on how to play point guard in the championship game, and all debate was put aside.

"I felt pretty relaxed coming out of the locker room," Sheetz said after finishing with 11 points. "I have to give a lot of the credit to my teammates."

Jayhawks favored at Kemper Arena

BIG 8 CONFERENCE

Kansas peaking at right time

KU is riding a wave of high emotion after winning the Big Eight Title Sunday against Oklahoma State.

Not only was it the seniors' last game at home, it was the 40th anniversary of the opening of Allen Fieldhouse.

The Jayhawks are hoping to continue to ride that wave all the way to Kansas City and the Big Tournament.

Kansas captured the league's No. 1 seed after defeating OSU and Missouri. The Jayhawks will face the No. 8-seeded K-State Wildcats.

In the Hawks' two previous meetings with the Cats this season, both games have been close, as Kansas won 78-74 in Lawrence and also won in Manhattan.

The key to the Jayhawks' victories this season has been the play of its forwards and centers.

Keying the Jayhawks inside have been Greg Ostertag, Scott Pollard and Raef LaFrentz, otherwise known as the "Fun Bunch" to KU fans.

Looking at the stats the Fun Bunch has put up this season, it would be easy to see why KU has been so successful.

Ostertag is the Big Eight's all-time leading blocker. LaFrentz is the Big Eight's top freshman, and Pollard is near the top in Big Eight rebounding stats.

JEREMY CRABTREE

Big Country is big key

Oklahoma State isn't looking to repeat last year's Big Eight championship game loss to Nebraska.

But if history repeats itself — like it has four previous times — Nebraska could advance to round two.

No. 2 seed Oklahoma State, 20-9 overall, 10-4 in the Big Eight and 0-4 against the Huskers in the Big Eight Tournament, will face off against No. 7 seed Nebraska.

KU whipped Oklahoma State 78-62 Sunday afternoon at Allen Fieldhouse to win the Big Eight regular-season championship.

One reason for the KU victory was that Oklahoma State all-Big Eight center Bryant Reeves was held scoreless for the first time in his college career.

"They did an excellent job of defending Bryant Reeves," Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said. "I didn't think anyone could ever shut him out."

Despite the poor showing by Reeves, Sutton said Big Country will be ready for the game Friday.

"I think he will be fine," Sutton said. "Losers dwell on experiences like he had, and winners look forward to the next game."

Even though Nebraska has been in a slump, Sutton said he still has to respect the Huskers' abilities.

PHILL SPIKER

Huskers looking to rebound

Nebraska is on the bubble, not for an NCAA Tournament bid but for the NIT Tournament.

After starting this season successfully and jumping to No. 19 in the Associated Press poll, the Huskers have plummeted down to the depths of the Big Eight Conference.

However, with a successful run at the Big Eight Tournament, the Huskers could receive an invitation to the NIT.

This would be nothing more than a disappointment to Husker coach Danny Nee, who led them to four straight NCAA Tournament appearances.

But they could make something of their season with a strong run in the Big Eight Tournament. The Huskers' first obstacle is the Oklahoma State Cowboys, who are coming off a loss to Kansas Sunday.

This could be a tough obstacle.

TODD STEWART

Threesome important for ISU

As Iowa State's big three go, the Cyclones go.

This couldn't be any clearer to Iowa State coach Tim Floyd.

"I think as the three senior starters go, we go," Floyd said.

The three seniors Floyd is referring to are Fred Hoiberg, Julius Michalik and Loren Meyer.

"It's safe to say that our scoring is coming from those three individuals. If any one of those three struggle, we struggle," Floyd said.

No. 5 seed Iowa State opens up Big Eight Tournament play against No. 4 seed Missouri.

The last time the two teams met in the tournament was a 1993 first-round game. Missouri won 67-63.

Floyd, whose team was swept by the Tigers this season, said his biggest concern is shutting down MU junior forward Julian Winfield.

"They've got a fine basketball team that I think plays off of Winfield," Floyd said.

PHILL SPIKER

Tigers overlooked in season

Missouri will try to continue to defy the expectations.

Coming off last season's perfect 14-0 regular-season conference record, the Tigers were thought to be rebuilding this year with the loss of some valuable senior leadership.

Mizzou will take a 19-7 mark and No. 4 seed into the Big Eight Tournament.The Tigers' first-round opponent is No. 5 seed Iowa State.

Mizzou has won every odd-year postseason Big Eight Tournament since 1987.

TODD STEWART

Sooners back near the top

Many believed Oklahoma's once-reputable status would improve later than sooner.

Not the case.

The Sooners collected 22 wins against just seven losses this year and finished third in a bumper-to-bumper Big Eight Conference race — all achievements much better than expected.

All this from a team that was supposed to lack a go-to guy, experience and depth. Billy-ball was replaced by some guy named Kelvin Sampson.

"I don't like to say that we are in a rebuilding stage," Sampson said in the media guide before the season. "I think we are in an improvement stage."

What stage could be next?

No. 3 Oklahoma will face No. 6 Colorado in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament Friday night at 8:20. OU is 6-0 against Colorado in tournament history.

Win or lose, the Sooners are a lock for the NCAA Tournament, a rapid turnaround from last season.

They lost three starters. They hadn't been to the NCAA Tournament but once in four years. They lost Mr. Offense in leading scorer Jeff Webster, who averaged 23.7 per game and was a consensus all-Big Eight player.

Enter Ryan Minor, Sampson and Co.

Minor led the league in scoring this year, and Sampson is a befitting coach-of-the-year recipient after sporting a perfect home record, including a win against No. 1 Kansas, in his initial season.

Supporting members include John Ontjes, James Mayden, Ernie Abercrombie, Dion Barnes and Prince Fowler.

DEREK SIMMONS

Buffs rely on Boyce's shot

For the first time since Coach Joe Harrington's first season at Colorado, the Buffaloes will not be the No. 8 seed in the Big Eight Tournament.

The No. 6 seed is Colorado's highest since the 1985 tournament.

Harrington said he is impressed with his team's play of late.

"Everybody's played well down the stretch," Harrington said. "It hasn't been one player."

But Oklahoma will be a tough first-round test for the Buffaloes. The Sooners swept Colorado during the regular season, and Harrington said Oklahoma is a tough match-up for anyone in the conference.

"They're a very tough team for anyone in the Big Eight," he said.

CU is led by all-Big Eight selection Donnie Boyce. He is considered to be one of the conference's top pro prospects this year.

This is Boyce's second year as a all-conference selection.

Six members of the K-State track team are Racing for top

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Five women and one man are on their way to Indianapolis this weekend.

Gwen Wentland, Wanita Dykstra, Jill Montgomery, Belinda Hope, Karissa Owens and Ed Broxterman will represent K-State at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships this Friday and Saturday at the Hoosier Dome.

"I think everyone going has a good chance to place well," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Wentland, Dykstra and Montgomery all qualified in the high jump.

Wentland cleared 6 feet 5 inches Saturday at the U.S. Indoor National Championships at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta.

"This week I rested up," Wentland said.

"My legs were fresh, and I jumped well."

Her victory at the meet qualified her for the World Indoor Championships in Barcelona, Spain, this weekend. However, Wentland will represent K-State at the NCAA Championships.

"Her first responsibility is to K-State," Rovelto said.

"She's a collegian, and she knows that. It was really a no-brainer."

Dykstra has a season best of 6' and finished second to Wentland at the Big Eight Indoor Championships Feb. 25.

Montgomery qualified for the meet with a leap of 5'10-3/4" during the pentathlon at the Big Eight Championships. Montgomery went on to capture first in the pentathlon with 4,093 points.

"Arizona had three jumpers qualify for nationals in the early '80s," Rovelto said.

"Since then, I can think of a couple of teams who qualified two, but none who have qualified three."

Another high jumper on a roll is Broxterman. Broxterman took home the Big Eight title with a leap of 7'4-1/2" Feb. 24.

It was his third consecutive week to clear a bar higher than 7'3".

"Ed is jumping really well," Rovelto said.

"Aside from Malesev, no one has jumped at that height as many times as he has."

Broxterman is the only person to defeat Nebraska's Petar Malesev this season. Malesev's best clearance this season is 7'5-1/2".

"I went back to the basics this year," Broxterman said after the Big Eight Championships. "Last season, I was playing around with my technique, and I just wasn't jumping high."

Owens was an automatic qualifier in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.85. She posted that time in finals of the Big Eight Championships and won the race.

Additionally, Owens captured her second gold medal at the meet by winning the 200 meters.

Hope won the 400m with a time of 54.02. She has not lost a race at 400 meters this season.

Wentland

Rovelto said all of the athletes who qualified for the national meet have shown a great work ethic and steady improvement throughout the season.

"I think that's what sets them apart from the people who are staying home during this meet," Rovelto said. "That's what is so interesting about track. You can't control what other people are doing. All you can do is work hard and improve yourself."

■ Senior Nicole Green traveled to Atlanta with Wentland last weekend to compete in the 400 meters.

Green sprinted to a time of 54.02 in the 400 meters but did not qualify for the finals.

Former sprinter Chris Pryor and assistant coach Steve Fritz also competed in the meet.

Pryor posted a personal-best time of 47.19 and narrowly missed the finals.

Fritz qualified for the semifinals in the 55-meter hurdles by setting a personal-best time of 7.85 in the event. He then bettered that time in the semifinals with a race of 7.82, but it wasn't good enough to reach the final field of eight runners.

BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT CLIPBOARD

▶Quick facts and notes about this weekend's tournament

■ The tournament has been sold out for nine straight years, including the 1995 event. The Big Eight Tournament has been at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., since 1986.

■ The No. 1 seed has won eight of the previous 18 tournaments, the last coming in 1992 as Kansas took the title. The No. 1 seed has won only one of the last six competitions, and has advanced to the title game only twice in that period.

■ Missouri leads the league with six postseason tournament titles, with the last four coming in the last four, odd-numered years: 1987, '89, '91, '93. Tigers coach Norm Stewart owns the most titles as a coach, with six wins.

■ Every Big Eight school has advanced to the title game at least once. But CU's two wins in the 1990 tournament are the only victories by a No. 8 seed. Only Colorado and Iowa State have never won a Big Eight Tournament title.

■ Tournament attendance has been at least 60,000 for the first four sessions since moving the entire event to Kemper. The 1992 semifinal crowd of 17,835 was the highest ever.

Cats prepare for tough challenge

"I don't get too caught up in this one-versus-eight thing," Williams said.

Williams' squad is led by the Big Eight's Newcomer of the Year, Jarod Haase.

Haase is averaging 15.5 points a game while shooting 44.3 percent from the field.

Haase may be the Hawks' leading scorer, but the real heart and soul of the squad is point guard Jacque Vaughn.

Vaughn doesn't have huge statistics, but he is the Hawks' leader on the court.

Then there comes Kansas' interior size, which features a 7-footer and two 6-foot-10-inch forwards.

Greg Ostertag is the 7-footer, and he is also the Big Eight's all-time leader in blocks.

He is also averaging almost nine points a game for the Jayhawks.

Forwards Scott Pollard and Raef LaFrentz are the other interior forces.

Pollard is a consistant scorer inside, and LaFrentz is the Big Eight's Freshman of the Year.

"There is great competition for playing time there," Asbury said. "Basically, if you don't produce then they will find someone that will.

"Their height just kills us."

All of these things can paint a gruesome picture if you're a K-State fan, but there is always hope that past experience against KU will help.

"We hope to get to grind the game out," Asbury said. "Maybe we can grind out a win."

The game against KU is scheduled for a noon tipoff at Kemper Arena.

Last season the Cats were routed by the Jayhawks in the Big Eight Tournament in the first round.

▶ BOARD OF REGENTS

Open admissions questioned

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Two of Gov. Bill Graves' three new appointees to the Board of Regents told the Senate Education Committee on Tuesday they support admission standards for Kansas students to attend state universities.

However, Robert Talkington and Kenneth Havner also said during their confirmation hearings the state has an obligation to educate and train those students who would not qualify for work.

"Obviously it would be nice if we didn't need them," Talkington said of setting admission standards for graduates of Kansas high schools.

But, he said, Senate needs to look at qualified admissions just from the standpoint of the physical requirements of overcrowded schools and the quality of education.

"It appears we're going to need that to maintain the high level of education we have in Kansas," Talkington said.

"My initial reaction," Havner said in responding to the same question, "is there should be some type of qualifications before entering the university level."

"But I presume there would be a certain number of people who couldn't meet that level of qualification. We would have to provide something for those people, to train them for work," he said.

Kansas is the only state that sets no requirements for graduates of its high schools to enter its universities.

Talkington, an Iola attorney who spent 20 years in the Legislature, including four years as Senate president in 1985-89, said the state's community colleges are a good alternative for those who wouldn't qualify to start out at one of the six state universities.

He said he was a product of a community college, Tyler Junior College in Texas, before he went to the University of Kansas, where he graduated and earned his law degree.

Havner, an attorney from Hays, said the state should continue to make a liberal education available to its youth, because the only goal should not be to educate people for work.

"We educate them to become better educated, to become better citizens, to become better people," he said. "Some of it goes beyond getting a job."

While Talkington said he is most familiar with Pittsburg State and has a son who graduated from PSU, and Havner graduated from Fort Hays State before earning a graduate degree from KU and a law degree from Washburn University, both said they could be advocates for higher education generally, serving all the universities.

Talkington said he believes Washburn will one day be a part of the state university system, but said he doesn't see that happening in the near future because of the state's financial constraints.

Education Committee Chairman Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, said the panel will not vote on whether to recommend Talkington and Havner for confirmation until Kansas Bureau of Investigation background checks are completed.

From questions posed by committee members, it appeared neither nominee faces any difficulty being confirmed.

A third Graves appointee, William Docking of Arkansas City, will be interviewed later.

City commission discusses youth center's structure

JILL TEQTMEIER
Collegian

The city commission Tuesday discussed the structure of the Community Youth Council.

The general purpose of the council is to plan and coordinate youth programs in the community by developing a system for coordinating financial, organizational and political resources.

The council has representatives from the city, county and school district.

"The city, school district, and county had reports of youth problems in the area. Task forces were developed to report on the problems and address the issues," Mayor Helen Cooper said.

Roger Maughmer, city commission member, said he thinks Manhattan needs the Community Youth Council, but for it to run smoothly, one of the entities should assume control.

Cooper said the discussion of the council was just another step in developing an arrangement between the three parties.

The mayor and city clerk were also authorized to execute a contract with the Kansas Human Rights Commission to investigate and attempt resolution of backlogged employment discrimination complaints in the Manhattan area.

Bill would create abortion waiting period

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate Judiciary Committee took up two abortion bills Tuesday, including one that would require a woman to wait 24 hours before she could end a pregnancy.

Meanwhile, a House committee removed from a budget bill a provision that would have restricted abortions at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan.

The action had been expected.

During the Senate committee hearing, Sen. Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg, the principal sponsor of the bill, said the proposal to ask women to wait a full day before having an abortion has thrown abortion-rights advocates into a frenzy.

But he said some abortions are so gratuitous that the state should be able to prevent them from occurring.

"If we lack that courage, perhaps we could whisper quietly, 'Could you wait a day before you do this?'" he said to the committee.

The bill would require a woman to wait 24 hours after being informed about an abortion procedure.

Presently, state law requires women to wait eight hours before undergoing an abortion.

The bill also would require doctors to notify parents of minors at least 24 hours before performing an abortion on the girl.

That notification would not occur if the minor had gone to court and received judicial permission to forego informing either of her parents.

"A waiting period may be an irritation to a woman who is determined to abort, but to a woman who is unsure or is being rushed, a waiting period will protect her from making the wrong decision," Jeanne L. Gawdun, a lobbyist for Kansans for Life, said.

"The notion that some women will be inconvenienced does not validate the state's obligation to set up a protective time frame for those who, for a variety of reasons, may need more time to reflect," she said to lawmakers.

Sharon Stringfellow, a lobbyist for the Kansas chapter of Concerned Women for America, said information about abortion should be given to a woman at a clinic.

It is presently given by mail.

"The common practice of mailing the information form to the woman subverts this contemplative process," she said.

Opponents of the measure contend the expanded waiting period is an attempt to take the decision away from women.

"The implication that women have to be forced to think about this is very condescending and very paternalistic," Peggy Jarman, lobbyist for ProChoice Action League, said.

"Women do not lose their minds when they become pregnant. They give it enormous thought before entering the clinic," she said.

Douglas Johnston, representing Planned Parenthood of Kansas, said any type of waiting period is inappropriate, even the present eight hours.

"It's a direct threat to a woman's right to choose," Johnston said. "This legislation is bad for women's health care. It's bad for women."

He pointed out that the American Medical Association has stated that "mandatory waiting periods ... have the potential to threaten the safety of induced abortion."

The committee is also considering a measure that would require the reporting of all abortions to the state Department of Health and Environment.

This includes those performed in doctors' offices and clinics. The present law requires only hospitals to make such reports.

The bill, which was passed by the House, is designed to obtain statistics only, and not the names of patients or doctors.

DATING A GREEK FROM AN OUTSIDER'S POINT OF VIEW

DATING SOMEONE WHO IS IN A HOUSE CAN BE QUITE AN EXPERIENCE IF YOU ARE NOT

The love triangle.

Greeks dating non-greeks often find their relationships divided between his, hers and the house.

Heather Burr, freshman in marketing, and her boyfriend of two years, Greg Holthaus, freshman in mechanical engineering and member of Theta Xi fraternity, are working through a greek and non-greek relationship.

"I am the Roman of the greek system," Burr said. "They are greek, and I am not."

> "I am the Roman of the greek system. They are greek, and I am not."
> HEATHER BURR
> Freshman in marketing

For Burr and Holthaus, this match-up has created challenges.

"I do not like the way they treat me, especially in his fraternity. They are quite rude to me on the phone," Burr said.

Although Holthaus lives in the fraternity house, Burr and Holthaus spend most of their time together in the residence hall where she lives.

"It is kind of nice to go over to the dorm because there is a much looser attitude. It is easier to be yourself at the dorm," Holthaus said.

They do attend some fraternity functions together and they said they enjoyed the fall semi-formal at the house, Holthaus said.

"Everyone got together and looked nice. I thought it was fun," he said.

Burr said she is usually uncomfortable at the parties because she and Holthaus do not drink. She said she is also intimidated by the other guests at the functions.

"I feel like I have to compete with sorority girls, especially for status. Sorority girls will talk to me until they find out I live in Goodnow Hall. Then they turn around and leave," Burr said.

Holthaus said some people didn't talk to Burr, but not because she is non-greek. He said he thought it was because people don't see her often.

"I get flack because she is not in a sorority," he said.

Still, Holthaus said he thinks his strongest commitment is to Burr, not Theta Xi.

"I will be in the house for five years, but if Heather and I go on, it will be more important," he said.

Burr said she has problems with the attitudes of some fraternity members, including her boyfriend.

"At the beginning of the year, he was pulling the big greek attitude like Mr. Joe Cool, and I thought about how hard I could bash him. But I didn't because I love Greg," Burr said.

Holthaus, said he plans to live in the fraternity house throughout college.

"In the house there is a feeling of home and a family atmosphere," he said.

Burr said she accepts Holthaus living in the fraternity house because he enjoys living there.

For other greek and non-greek couples, the distinction is not much of a conflict.

Michele Harding, junior in elementary education and vice president of sorority relations for Alpha Chi Omega, and Ryan Rowley, junior in construction science, find few challenges in their greek and non-greek relationship.

"I don't consider her a greek. If you ask me to list 10 things about her, that would not come up," Rowley said.

Harding said as an executive officer she has to dedicate a lot of time to her sorority.

"He is very supportive and has helped me," Harding said. "He is the permanent commitment in my life."

She said Rowley helped her address and stamp 800 letters to Alpha Chi alumnae.

Harding and Rowley said they think obligations like rush week, conferences, meetings and dinners are difficult to schedule around.

"I don't like Wednesday night dinner. They have to eat at the house, and I don't see her on Wednesday," Rowley said.

Rush week is particularly stressful on the relationship, Harding said.

"There is no time to leave the house because we do not finish until two in the morning," she said. "I hardly talk to him for a week, and that is hard."

Rowley said he has gotten to know more people by attending functions with Harding.

"All of my friends like Ryan. It has never been an issue that he is not greek," Harding said.

Rowley said he did not consider joining a fraternity. Rowley and Harding met during their freshman year when they were both living in the residence halls.

"I couldn't figure out why you would want to be in one until last semester. I am just getting used to it," he said.

Rowley said he realizes the leadership opportunities Harding has because of the sorority.

"He does not understand my feelings toward the house, but he does respect them," Harding said.

Harding and Holthaus agree it is more common to see couples who are both active in the greek system.

"There is a lot more opportunities for greeks to meet other greeks," Harding said.

'Street Scene' gives views of domestic life

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The immigrants are crammed into a lively slum area of New York. The heat is sweltering, and a murder is fueled by jealousy.

An operatic version of the Pulitzer prize-winning play,"Street Scene" will be presented at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

The production, which focuses on an envious husband who murders his unfaithful wife and her lover, will be performed by the K-State Opera Theater. The opera is a combined effort of K-State Theatre and the music department.

Marci Maullar, managing director of K-State Theatre, said the play was chosen to fit the theme of American productions.

"As far as American operas, there haven't been a lot that have been outstanding, but 'Street Scene' was highly acclaimed when it opened," Maullar said.

The play, which opened in 1929, was turned into an opera that debuted in New York in 1947.

The score of the opera was composed by Kurt Weill. The Pulitzer prize-winning play was written by Elmer Rice, and the lyrics were written by the late poet Langston Hughes.

"Langston Hughes' poetry is American, as well as Rice as a playwright," Maullar said.

SHOW TIME

"Street Scene" will be at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday at McCain Auditorium. Tickets cost $6 for students and $8 for the general public and can be purchased at the McCain Box Office.

Kate Anderson, who staged and directed the production, said she views "Street Scene" more as musical theater than as an opera.

"The music runs the gamut of musical styles," Anderson said. "What you expect in an opera is something like 'Porgy and Bess,' but 'Street Scene' spans more into musical theater."

Jerry Langenkamp, musical director of "Street Scene," said jazz dominates the production but the opera also has Broadway musical numbers.

"It's quite a beautiful score, but it's complex," Langenkamp said.

Langenkamp said the variety of music and the set of "Street Scene" make it a full-scale production.

Instead of being in Nichols Hall, where "The Crucible" was performed last year with a cast of eight, "Street Scene" will be in McCain Auditorium with more than 30 performers.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

The cast of "Street Scene" performs a dress rehearsal Monday night in McCain Auditorium. The production is performed by the K-State Opera Theatre.

"It's kind of a neat experience to put on this big of a production and be in McCain. It's not often that we get to do something on this large of a scale," Scott Blankenbaker, graduate student in vocal performance, said.

To effectively recreate a slum in New York, David Centers, stage designer, said he tried to remain true to the script.

Centers said he had to construct the apartments so they had some separation but still forced people to live together.

"The buildings are skinny and tall to help accentuate the cramming and tight feeling that is choking the people," Centers said.

Centers said he also had to provide an escape and a way out for the characters.

"When the young girl's father has just been murdered, she's in extreme turmoil and wants to get out of the neighborhood and away from all the neighbors who are gossiping about her and her family," Centers said. "We built an elevated train station to give the feeling of having a way out."

In addition to the detailed scenery, the performers will be wearing typical 1940s clothing.

Blankenbaker said he found it easy to step back into another decade.

"It's rather easy because a lot of things haven't changed, like the issues of racism and extramarital affairs," Blankenbaker said.

Maullar said the cast members have come a long way since they first started practicing at the beginning of the semester.

"We have a wonderful cast including kids and a dog," Maullar said. "They've handled the music beautifully, and I feel they have definitely met the challenge of the production."

Judge orders equal admission standards for state schools

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OXFORD, Miss. — Mississippi cannot close either a mostly black university or a mostly white women's university to claim it has ended its racially segregated system of higher education, a federal judge said Tuesday.

Instead, the state must establish one set of admissions standards for all eight of its universities, U.S. District Judge Neal Biggers said.

They now vary from school to school, with less-stringent requirements at the black institutions.

The state must also redistribute many of its higher-education programs, particularly on the graduate level, and spend about $30 million to beef up the mostly black schools.

Biggers' ruling came in a 1975 lawsuit accusing Mississippi of maintaining separate higher-education systems for blacks and whites and seeking more money and better programs for historically black universities.

The U.S. Justice Department, long critical of Mississippi's educational system, joined the case.

Biggers ruled in 1987 that the state had done enough, but the U.S. Supreme Court disagreed.

In 1992, they ordered Mississippi to remove all vestiges of the dual system, calling the predominantly black institutions educationally inferior and underfunded.

Reader confused by dress code

Dear Cassie,

I used to attend the other four-year institution that bears our state name. Upon arrival at K-State, I noticed something: people cannot accept others wearing clothing other than jeans and either a plaid shirt or a sweatshirt. If someone dares to do so, they will surely be battered with questions all day of "Why are you so dressed up?" or "Do you have a job interview today or something?"

Signed, Up the River

Dear Up the River,

People around here like to keep it simple. When you wear something other than jeans, it's either for going to church, going to a funeral or to prove that you are better than others.

Don't pay any attention to it if they're a little curious as to why you aren't wearing the "uniform." They'll get used to it after a while.

Bands at Berlin give fans taste of pure ska

PAGE GETZ
Collegian

Monday night skanked, swanked and swooned at Berlin with the very skankable Isaac Green and the Skalars, accompanied by the Pie Tasters.

About the only thing not moving at Berlin's Ska Night was the usual smog of cigarette neurotics.

Opening for the bands was Ten Thumb, a very un-ska-like Manhattan band.

"There is one obvious problem with opening for a ska band," bassist Dan Lee said. "They came here to 'this,' they're just not our audience. But we could open up for Will Rogers. It doesn't matter. It's just great to play."

Joining Ten Thumb for the first time live in Manhattan was their new guitarist, John Evans.

The band played a lot of their new songs, which have a more prowling and integrated groove.

Issac Green and the Skalars, a St. Louis band, found their roots in some punk, hard-core and a touch of reggae.

The band injected a twirly rhapsody of a more traditional inside-out, big-band frolic that was a genuine dose of pure ska.

For the Skalars, putting the music together is a group effort. Their style is decidedly non-political and non-issue-oriented.

"We're not out to try to tackle the world with ska," drummer Dave Sharma said. "We are not a ska-core band. There's no distortion in our music at all."

Sharma said the Skalars aren't a mosh band but rather a dance band and an old-school ska band.

"They're more upbeat compared to classic ska, but they're more classic ska, and they've got a good brass section," Eric Beane, freshman in advertising, said.

The Pie Tasters interrupted with a more progressive ska sound from Washington, D.C., bringing a ticklish jazz-spa that drew the remainder of the crowd to the dance floor.

The band was styling in the original ska suit-tie attire that paradoxically combined with their skankfulness like a shroom tea party in the middle of Friday night traffic.

As fans of ska music, the Pie Tasters made the transition away from various cheesy punk and hard bands to ska about five years ago. They organized their own record label called Slugtone Records.

Some of the band's influences include Alton Ellis and the Scawflaws, who are distributed on Moon Records and toured with the Pie Tasters and Toasters in the Skavoovee tour.

This time around, they have been on the road since April and will retire the tour in May.

The band's new compact disc, "Oolooloo," will be available on Moon Records this month.

If you missed the show, you can catch both Isaac Green and the Skalars along with the Pie Tasters Thursday night in Lawrence at the Bottleneck with roots band Scroatbelly.

Poet not returning to ESU after canceling

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EMPORIA — Poet Maya Angelou, who postponed a visit to Emporia State University last year after a run-in with anti-gay activist Fred Phelps, said she will not reschedule the appearance this spring, school officials said.

Angelou's agency, Dave Le Camera Lordly and Dame Inc. of Boston, cited scheduling conflicts in declining the invitation, said Paul Putman, assistant director of student organizations and activities at Emporia State.

"Apparently she didn't see it as a priority to come back," Putman said.

He said that he didn't think the Phelps protest was a large factor in last week's decision.

Angelou's agent at Lordly and Dame did not immediately return a phone call Monday.

Angelou, who read at the inauguration of President Clinton in 1993, was scheduled to appear before a sold-out audience at Emporia State last Nov. 14.

She postponed the reading after an appearance the previous night in Topeka where Phelps, pastor of Topeka's Westboro Baptist Church, and some of his followers surrounded her limousine and taunted her with anti-gay remarks.

Emporia State officials had expected Angelou would reschedule her appearance at the university this semester.

Only one-fifth of the 1,280 tickets sold for "An Evening with Maya Angelou" were returned for refunds.

Landon Lecture history prestigious, controversial

William Simon spoke to the smallest audience for a Landon Lecture.

Weather conditions forced his jet to land in Salina. By the time he arrived in Manhattan, Simon was more than an hour late, according to Joseph Hajda, Landon Lecture chairperson from September 1969 to May 1976.

As a result, the capacity crowd at McCain was dismissed, and only the lecture patrons and special guests were allowed to hear the speech in the K-State Union banquet room.

The Landon Lecture by President Richard Nixon in September 1970 was one of several to be criticized.

Nixon's speech was his first before a university audience after he ordered an invasion of Cambodia.

Students and faculty protested before, during and after his lecture, Hajda wrote.

During the early 1980s, the series was internationalized.

The risk involved in inviting international guests was demonstrated during Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani's visit, Richter said.

About a dozen anti-Saudi protesters delayed the speech. Not all the protesters could be removed safely.

McCain was emptied, and the audience was readmitted, Richter said.

"It was a decision made in consultation with security and the administration," Richter said. "It caused some inconvenience, but we weren't sure the speech could go on with the wailing."

Security officers and members of the administration stood at the doors as people were let back in. K-State students were admitted with their IDs, and patrons were admitted with their tickets, Richter said.

Avoiding international speakers was considered. James Acker, K-State president at the time, reaffirmed the decision that the benefits of international lecturers would greatly outweigh the risks, Richter wrote.

A more formal system of consultation about potential speakers was begun in response to problems with a Convocation Lecture by Ian Smith, former Rhodesian prime minister.

Smith had been scheduled to give a Landon Lecture.

However, he was removed from the schedule.

Many people didn't like the idea of bringing to K-State the ruler of a country that practiced race separation similar to South Africa's apartheid, Reagan said.

"There was a great furor over black suppression in Rhodesia," Reagan said. "There were huge forces to prevent an open discourse."

Having to seek approval from groups such as Student and Faculty Senate defeated the Landon Lecture's purpose of free discussion, Reagan said. Selection of speakers is not so structured anymore, he said.

Hajda wrote that during his time as chairperson, people occasionally complained about a perceived conservative slant to the series.

There is not much criticism of the Landon Lecture Series, Reagan said. He said he hears a lot of praise.

He acknowledged complaints about political bias. Complaints have come from both sides of the political spectrum, he said.

The response by the selection committee and the K-State president to such criticism is to look at the list of lecturers.

Anyone can point out people on the right, such as Barry Goldwater and Pat Robertson, or on the left, such as Walter Mondale and Jesse Jackson, Reagan said.

"It is information we need to know in this day and age," said LaVerne Johnson, a patron of the Landon Lecture Series. "They are very willing and open in answering questions."

The list of past lecturers sells the series to invited speakers, Reagan said.

Some observers have said the Landon Lecture Series is the best and least-expensive lecture program in the country. One observer said the list of speakers sounded like a Who's Who in America, Hajda wrote.

"George Bush said it is America's most distinguished lecture series," Reagan said.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Hobby sacrificed in order to fund relocation

Umscheid said.

No more trophies might be able to fit in the window, but Umscheid has increased room everywhere else.

Umscheid said the old building was 3,000 square feet, and the new building has 48,000 square feet.

"The increase in size makes for an easier running business, but it costs a lot more," he said.

Umscheid said the negotiator was fairly cooperative, but the state's compensation was not nearly enough to pay the relocation costs.

"I got $84,000 for the old building and property," Umscheid said.

Umscheid said he was forced to move his business.

"They were going to take me anyway," he said. "They were going to close Yuma Street, and I wouldn't have any access to my building."

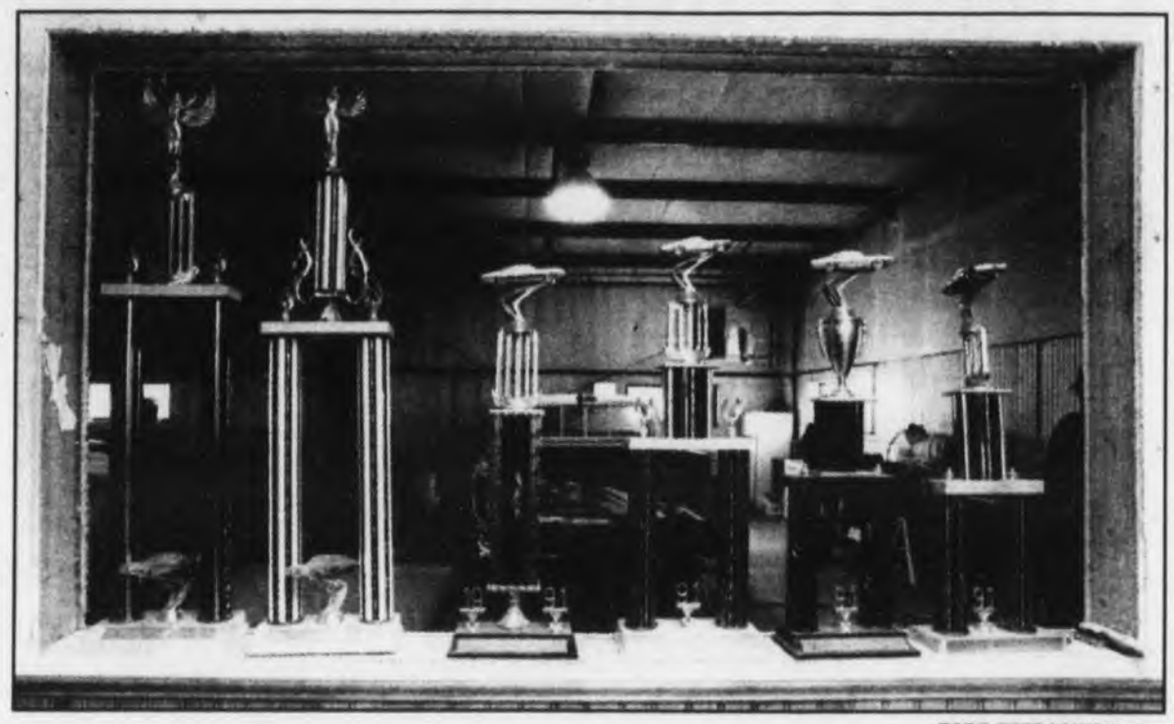
The worst part for Umscheid is he was a few years from having his business paid off.

"The move has added 10 years, maybe a little more, before I will have the business paid off," he said.

At the moment, Umscheid said he is not adding any more employees to help out, even though business might increase.

"It is hard finding good workers," he said.

Umscheid said it is hard to beat the years of experience that are handed down generation after generation.



"My father taught me the business, and Steve, the guy that works for me, was taught by his father, who was taught by his father," Umscheid said.

"You just can't beat that experience," he said.

Custom Alignment Services is now located at 323 Yuma St.

"This is a higher-traffic area," Umscheid said. "Business may pick up after a while."

Until that time, Umscheid is cheering on his nephews at the track and taking care of the guard dog that watches over the new building.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

A few of Bud Umscheid's dirt-track car-racing trophies are kept at his business. However, he won't be adding any more trophies; he had to give up his hobby in order to help finance his shop's relocation.

Councils looking to fill positions

the arts and sciences dean's office in Eisenhower Hall.

Applications are due back at 4 p.m. March 28 in the SGA Office.

People can file for more than one position, Schneiter said.

Almost 100 positions are up for grabs.

"To run for a position, a person must be a full-time student," he said.

Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said she expects about 200 people will run for the available positions.

Nolfi said Student Senate seats will likely be one of the most competitive positions to get.

"There may be seven or eight teams run for student body president and vice president," she said. "It varies year to year."

More people might be interested in Union Governing Board this year than in the past because of the issues the board is dealing with, Nolfi said.

Schneiter said UGB is the only board that requires a minimum cumulative grade point average. Students are required to have a 2.5.

UGB has four one-year spots and two two-year spots available.

The Fine Arts Council has the fewest spots open.

The Fine Arts Council allocates money generated from an $8 student fee, Schneiter said. The money goes for trips and guest speakers for various student groups.

The Board of Student Publications, which deals with its own line-item fee, has five positions open. Four positions are for one year. The last position is for two years.

The Board of Student Publications allocates money to the Collegian and Royal Purple.

Schneiter said the college councils deal with issues within their respective colleges. A student senator deals with the University as a whole.

"Only the agriculture college and art and science college council are in this year's SGA elections. Next year all the college councils will be through SGA," he said.

Be careful: Scams are out to take your dough

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Jennifer Bray, junior in kinesiology, spent an entire summer fighting telemarketing fraud.

"It was just a scam in order for them to make interest off of every idiot who sent them money," Bray said.

The company calling Bray said it was based in San Francisco, and if she would just fill out the top part of a form sent to her and pay a small fee, she would win $500.

Since 1988, the Federal Trade Commission has closed down 20 widespread telemarketing scams and obtained federal court orders against 124 corporations and individuals.

Joyce Woodard, president of the Topeka Better Business Bureau, said the two most active telemarketing groups hitting Manhattan are selling vacation certificates and offering work-at-home schemes.

"They are so good, well-targeted and organized," Woodard said.

A red herring for people to watch for is if it sounds too good to be true, Woodard said.

Amy Parish, junior in pre-medicine, said when she sees an easy-money claim on an advertisement, she usually just thinks it is a scam.

"Because nothing is that easy," Parish said.

Another clue to watch for is if the salesperson asks for your bank-account or credit-card number, Woodard said.

"Never, ever give your credit-card number," she said.

Also, do not send anything off before you check the offer with the Better Business Bureau or ask friends if they have received the same offer, she said.

"And if you ever send it in, then bingo — you are on a list forever," Woodard said.

Vacation certificates often offer low-cost trips with a partner or travel clubs, but they do not tell you about the additional costs, she said.

Additional costs also factor in when dealing with special financial-aid offers, Woodard said.

The advertisements are aimed at high-school seniors and college students and often guarantee a specialized list of scholarships, grants and loans for a set fee of $200 or more, Woodard said.

"It is the same list you can get at the library," she said.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Sergei Khushchev, the son of former Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev, talked about the lessons learned from the Cuban Missile Crisis Wednesday in Forum Hall in the K-State Union.

Krushchev outlines missile crisis

CARRIE LINN
Collegian

The Cuban Missile Crisis is a story of how two opposite worlds found an understanding, the son of former Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev said Wednesday afternoon in Union Forum Hall.

Sergei Khrushchev began his speech by explaining the basics of the missile crisis, which lasted for seven days, not 13 days, for the Russians.

"It began with President Kennedy's speech on that Monday," Khrushchev said.

When Fidel Castro took over power in Cuba, the Russians did not know who he was, Khrushchev said. They were sure Castro was a CIA agent and was working together with the United States.

All the Russians knew was that a South American dictator was being replaced with another South American dictator.

Soon, reports coming out of Cuba explained that things were changing.

Reports suggested that the Cubans had some Marxist ideas, but no one believed them, Khrushchev said.

In 1960, Castro made his first visit to Washington, D.C., but his trip was unsuccessful because there wasn't a meeting with the president. Khrushchev was told to ignore whatever Castro said because of the supposed alliance between him and the United States.

Meanwhile, the United States refused to align with Castro, and he was looking for other allies. The turning point between Russia and Cuba was the invasion of the Cuban refugees in Cuba.

Because there was not much communication, Khrushchev thought the United States was invading Cuba and not the other way around.

The Russians were sure the United States would take over Cuba in two days, Khrushchev said. It appeared to the Russians that the United States was not interested in Castro.

Castro then announced he wanted to make his country a socialist country in the western hemisphere.

Nikita Khrushchev saw this as an opportunity to prove his country's political system was better and more successful than that of the United States.

"The problem was how to defend Cuba, since every great country helps defend their alliance," Sergei said. "When my father was thinking over the missile crisis, he said that if we want to be a great country, then we must protect our allies and show America that we are not a weak country."

The officials of the Kennedy administration said the United States had no plans to invade Cuba. The Russians did not believe the United States; therefore, they felt they needed to defend Cuba.

Conventional arms would not do because Cuba was only 90 miles away from Florida, and it was almost 7,000 miles from the Soviet Union to Cuba.

There was only one choice to be made, and that was to deploy nuclear weapons to Cuba. This would mean that if the United States decided to invade Cuba, it would be the beginning of World War III.

Khrushchev said the crisis was a product of bad communication, especially when Nikita wanted to accept the terms of the peace agreement with President Kennedy.

Nikita received information that Kennedy was going to broadcast a statement to the American people.

He was afraid that it was a declaration of war. So Nikita sent a long emotional letter to Kennedy stating his acceptance.

Nikita sent the letter through the Moscow telegraph. He also sent it by messenger accompanied by one ambassador to the American Embassy, Sergei said. President Kennedy met with the Russian ambassador to go over the terms of the agreement.

The agreement consisted of America taking its missiles out of Turkey and Russia taking its missiles out of Cuba.

Sergei said this was an example of two leaders working together in the most dangerous time of all.

Khrushchev also said his father never thought about actually firing the missiles. It was only used as a threatening device, but he didn't know what Castro would do at any time.

"We all know this event well, but in the details shared today, I think that sheds more light on the subject," Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of Russian, said.

Union food decision still in the works

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

The food-service consultants hired to recommend the best method of food service for the K-State Union enhancement project got what they came for — input.

Now they must draw on what they learned during Wednesday's heated, two-hour discussion to make their recommendations in about 30 days.

"It is time well-invested as far as we are concerned," John Cornyn, food-service management consultant for the Cornyn Fasano Group, said of the comments from Union staff, students and administrators.

The consultants wanted the forum to answer questions and explain the different possible options, but they stressed one thing — nothing has been decided yet.

The eventual recommendation will work as an advising tool when deciding what is best for the University, said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and co-chair for the Enhancement Steering Committee.

"We are going to listen very carefully to our consultants," Bosco said.

Their recommendation will be either to contract food services out to another company, to lease space to a restaurant, to obtain a license for Union employees to run a name-brand restaurant, or a combination of options. The Union could also continue under a self-operational system.

The consultants are waiting for the results of a telephone survey to get more input from students, faculty and staff.

Union director Jack Sills said the survey is taking longer than predicted.

Originally, 1,000 people were going to be interviewed, but now that number will be reduced, Sills said. However, because responses have been more thorough than expected, the outcome will be an accurate representation, he said.

Kathleen Seelye, consultant from Thomas Ricca Associates, said survey results and the completion date will help decide when the final recommendation will be made.

Sills said he thinks the survey will be finished this week.

Bosco said he would like to see the people involved make the decision.

But, he said, because of the number of complicated issues, especially those concerning personnel, the final decision will rest with him.

Cornyn and Seelye described the positives and negatives of some of the options.

■ LEASE

Under a leasing option, the Union would become the landlord to a company that would lease out space and operate as a stand-alone facility.

The Union would make money from a set rent or a percentage of total sales, whichever would be higher.

The operator would pay for building improvements.

"They do that at their cost," Cornyn said.

Bosco said this is the option the current $9.2-million budget is based on.

Restaurants would offer their goods at street prices, the same as any fast-food restaurant in town.

However, Seelye said, if the product becomes unpopular, the Union is stuck with them under contract.

Leadership important for student

LINDA HARVEY
Collegian

This is the second in a series about women who have proved themselves as leaders.

When most freshmen were getting accustomed to school, Becky Keller, senior in general human ecology, was actively planning her future.

"I've been looking forward ever since I got here," Keller said.

During her time at K-State, Keller has made it a part of her life to be involved. She was also heavily involved in high school.

"I have a lot of energy, and I love to do a variety of things."

Keller is the president of Blue Key, a senior service honorary. She became interested in Blue Key as a freshman in the Emerging Leadership Lab class for recipients of a K-State leadership scholarship.

"The part I've always admired about Becky is that she's always positive," said Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life and Blue Key adviser. "She epitomizes what a leader is and how a leader thinks and looks toward change."

WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH

Keller spends the rest of her time involved in a variety of other activities. In the four years she's been at K-State, she's been involved in both the marching and concert bands. She also applied to become an ambassador her sophomore year.

Keller is involved in the Union Program Council, Kappa Alpha Theta, Kappa Omicron Nu (a Human Ecology honorary) and the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program.

She's still involved with many of these groups, but she said her time with her little-brother match, Casey, is especially important to her. Keller was matched with him three years ago this month.

"When I was in high school, I babysat for a couple of little boys and loved it," she said. "Casey's great. When you hang out with elementary-school children, you get a whole different perspective."

Keller said she puts as much emphasis on her involvement with Casey as she does in her other

▶ COASTAL MART CHOOSES K-STATE TO RECEIVE SCHOLARSHIP MONEY

Coastal Mart has chosen K-State as the beneficiary of a corporate reinvestment program.

Kevin O'Brien, central zone vice president for Coastal Mart Inc., and Vivian Luthi, manager of the Manhattan Coastal Mart store, presented a $1,000 check to the K-State Foundation.

K-State was eligible for the reinvestment program because it is within Coastal Mart's market area, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the foundation.

"The money will go into the general scholarship fund and be awarded through student financial assistance," Dowell said.

The Office of Financial Aid will determine how the scholarship money will be used, Dowell said. Financial aid could make four $250 scholarships at one end of the scale or leave it at a $1,000 scholarship, he said.

"We're grateful for the money," Dowell said.

The Foundation does not stop fundraising all year because scholarships are so important to the education of students, he said.

"There are almost 20,000 students on this campus who won't turn down a scholarship," Dowell said.

The Coastal Mart at Third Street and Bluemont Avenue is now company-owned and operated. Because the K-State community is important to the local store, the University was chosen to receive the reinvestment money, Dowell said.

The Foundation is the fundraiser for the University. K-State ranks seventh nationally and first in the Big Eight in percentage of alumni supporting the school.

Gifts to the University during the past fiscal year exceeded $20 million.

▶ LOCAL PLAYER FACES CRIMINAL CHARGES

Toosavili Ulutu, a K-State football player, will appear in Riley County Court March 20 to set a date for trial.

Ulutu was arrested Feb. 23 in Aggieville for criminal damage to property, battery to a police officer and resisting arrest.

He was granted a status check time period of two weeks by Harlan W. Graham, Riley County district court judge.

The status check allows attorneys on both sides of the case time to discuss plea-bargaining options, possibly reducing the charges.

Ulutu is a senior in social sciences.

▶ BILL WOULD REQUIRE AGENCY STATEMENTS

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee began considering a bill Thursday that would require state agencies to prepare a statement of environmental impact on every rule it promulgates.

The bill would require such a statement to include a description of the need for the rule and its environmental benefits.

It also would require the bill to include the level of risk to the environment when a state agency describes the need for a proposed rule. The Kansas Farm Bureau and the Kansas Fertilizer and Chemical Association supported the measure.

No one opposed the bill.

▶ DOLE CHOOSES NEW OFFICE DIRECTORS

TOPEKA (AP) — Sen. Bob Dole has named new directors of his Topeka and Kansas City offices, which specialize in constituent services.

Manhattan attorney Scott Hesse will head up Dole's Topeka office, while Alan Cobb, a Wichita lawyer, was named to run the Kansas City, Kan., office. Dole said they will be available to make speeches, hold town meetings and work with local service clubs.

Hesse is a native of Rossville and a K-State graduate with a law degree from Washburn University. Cobb, a Wichita native, is a graduate of Wichita State University and holds a master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania.

▶ SOLDIER CONCERNED ABOUT SAFETY AT FORT RILEY, RECALLS SHOOTING

FORT RILEY (AP) — A soldier who was shot in the arm when another soldier went on a deadly shooting rampage said the Army must do something to make the north-central Kansas military post safer.

Staff Sgt. Stanley Ellis wore a colorful shirt and seemed in good spirits as he met with reporters at the base.

He wore a cast on his left arm and said doctors weren't sure if he would regain full use of it.

Ellis was shot twice in the arm March 2 when a soldier, who was apparently angry with a supervisor, opened fire on his barracks.

The gunman, whose name is still being withheld by the Army, shot and killed another soldier before killing himself.

"I think they've got to do something," Ellis said.

"It's dangerous. I don't know how they're going to fix it," he said.

"Everyone thinks the counseling here is pretty good, but you can never have enough," Ellis added.

"Evidently, he was mad at someone. Maybe if they could've found out, he could've got help," Ellis said.

Ellis recounted the events of the shooting.

He said he had been on the second floor of the Custer Hill barracks when a soldier ran down to say someone was firing a gun on the third floor.

Ellis ran downstairs to tell the people on the first floor of the barracks and those outside to take cover.

When he heard shots, Ellis began yelling, "He's shooting outside," and ran to the neighboring building.

Ellis was shot twice in the left arm before making it behind the building.

Pvt. James Evans was killed in the shooting.

Ellis' arm was already in a cast from a basketball injury when he was shot, and doctors told him it might have saved some nerve damage.

Doctor provides aid in Rwanda, hopes to return

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

The war in Rwanda brought help from agencies and individuals world wide.

One K-State physician also made his contribution to help the victims of the war-torn country.

Traveling abroad and assisting with medical relief agencies has been a large part of the life of Daniel Martin, staff physician at Lafene Health Center.

Martin spent from Dec. 20 to Jan. 17 in Rwanda with a missionary relief agency called the Samaritans Purse, which helped pay for his food and his lodging.

All of the problems and killings in Rwanda last summer occurred before Martin went, so he did not have to bury any bodies as the workers from the relief agency that arrived before him did.

But the house he stayed in had 24 people buried around it who had been killed in or around the house.

"There was always the constant reminder that there were murdered people under that ground," Martin said.

Samaritans Purse set up a hospital in Rwanda to help the country. Martin worked in the internal-medicine ward of a 600-bed hospital.

"I tried to build relationships with the national doctors and demonstrate Western medical care," Martin said.

Martin got involved in the international medical missions in 1991, when a colleague of his at Lafene encouraged him to contact an agency in North Carolina.

"This agency has a speciality in getting physicians to places where they can serve for short periods of time," he said.

Martin went to Zaire, Africa, in 1991 to serve in a medical mission hospital for two months.

"This was a very rich experience for me. I enjoyed the place because it was a nice climate near the equator," he said.

Martin said he enjoyed the people he worked with and the patients.

"The people involved were really special, too, and I found it very easy to love and work with them. They formed a real attachment to me and supported me. It was just a nice mutual benefit," he said.

Martin went back to Zaire in 1992 and did the same thing for eight weeks.

"I worked in the same hospital and had the same experiences with the people. They were very loving, gave me a lot and accepted what little I had to give. It was a special time in my life," he said.

Martin did not have too much difficulty communicating even though the language of the educated people was French.

"A number of people there spoke English. I had two years of French in college decades ago, so it did not do me much good, except that I could write my orders in French, and that helped me a little bit," he said.

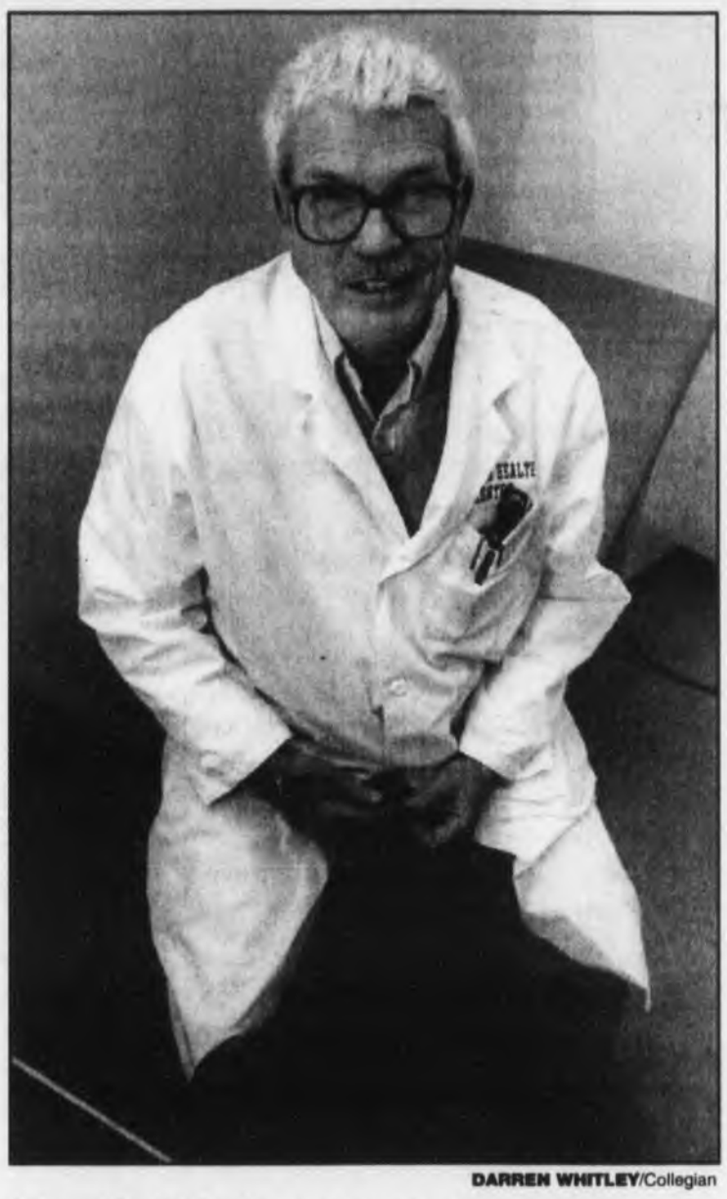
When he came back that year, he had already used up his leave time, so he spent two weeks leave without pay.

He said that it was a little hard to take.

Martin said it was worthwhile and that he does not regret it, but it was not something he thought he could do the next year.

He did not go in 1993, and things came up in 1994 that kept him from going.

"I had given up on going this coming summer, and on November 16, 1994, I received a letter from the agency that I had gone with before. They were seeking emergency people to go to Rwanda," Martin said.



He said he got two main benefits from his relief work in Rwanda.

"One was dealing with the international physicians because they were inspirational people. My other benefit was the contact with some of the Rwanda people," Martin said.

Martin said he hopes to go back to Africa because that is where his heart is.

However, he will not be able to go this summer. He said he hopes to have more time during his retirement.

"I have always had a heart for medical missions, especially for Africa, through most of my life," Martin said.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Lafene Health Center staff physician Dr. Daniel Martin spent a month in Rwanda helping in a hospital. Martin said he used what little French he could recall from his college days to fill out prescriptions. Although he said he has grim memories of his trip to Rwanda, he hopes to return to Africa. Prior to his work with Samaritans Purse in Rwanda, Martin had helped in hospitals in Zaire.

People air opposition about parking garage

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Students opposed to the placement of a parking garage within Memorial Stadium dominated conversations Wednesday at the Student Governing Association table in the Union.

"Actually, I think most of them are for a garage," Darell Edie, chair of University Parking Council, said.

"Their concerns or problems are with it being in Memorial Stadium," he said.

Student SENATE

On Wednesday afternoon, SGA sponsored an informal forum at Union Station and a table outside the Union Stateroom for students to ask questions about the proposed parking garage.

At the table, interested students asked for a petition to sign, questioned possible placement of the parking garage and asked about the safety of the garage.

Fayez Husseini, associate professor in interior architecture, said he does not like the idea of completing the stadium and putting a parking garage within its walls.

"It's almost like you're creating a beautiful trash can," he said.

But Husseini said SGA has already made up its mind because of the way it is defending it.

"I think they are here just to make us feel better," he said.

Rhonda Greenway, senior in human development and family studies and social work, said she did not like the idea of a parking garage.

"People are just being lazy. They want to drive to class and be right there," she said.

Greenway also said she felt as if the people she spoke with did not listen and wanted to convince her of the parking garage.

"I think it's already been decided," she said.

Edie said if the administration were not listening to students, the proposal would not be going back to architecture at this point in time.

Michele Meier and John Riedel, business administration senators, asked students their opinions of the parking garage.

"Not many people are really positive today," Meier said.

However, she said the more information people have, the more likely they are to think it is a good idea.

Rhona Romick, senior in interior architecture, said she cannot believe SGA is thinking about putting the garage in Memorial Stadium.

The specific site of the parking garage will be decided by a hired architect and with the consensus of the students, said Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance.

The architect who will help decide placement will be hired in May or June of 1996, he said.

In the Union Station, the flow of questions was pretty slow, said Bob Van Cleave, at-large member on the parking campus safety committee.

Van Cleave said he was in favor of the parking garage, but placing the garage should be handled carefully.

"As far as location goes, we have to be sensitive to the groups that still use the field, the football players who have played on it, and remember it is dedicated to World War I veterans," he said.

Linda Howell, junior in secondary education, said she did not like the parking garage being placed in the stadium.

"I'm a veteran, and I'm concerned about them taking down the stadium," she said.

Rawson said he was pleased with the number of questions and the interest shown at the table.

Meier said she hopes people will attend the forum at Lucky BrewGrille.

The forum at Lucky BrewGrille, sponsored by SGA, will be at 5 p.m. tonight.

Students will have an opportunity to question Meier, Rawson, Edie, Manager of Parking Services Dwain Archer and Student Body President Jeff Peterson.

IN OUR OPINION

by the Collegian Editorial Board

Free your mind with UPC activities

UPC deserves to be commended for the work they have done putting this highly varied program together.

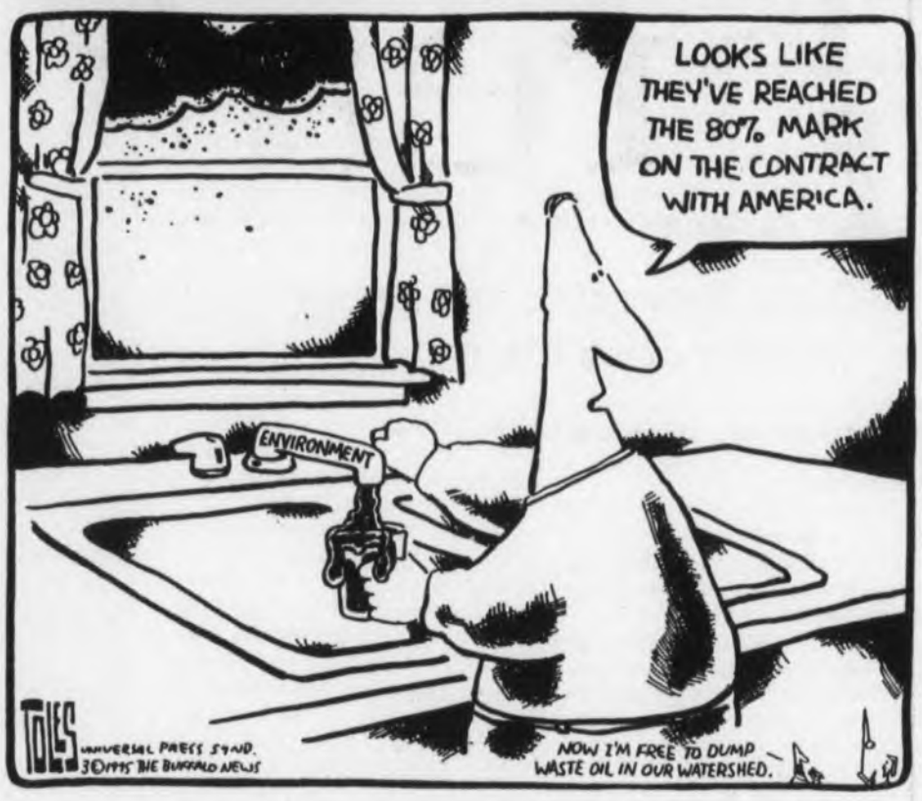
It's the middle of the semester, you have two tests and three papers, and the pre-spring break blues have settled in to stay.

Where can you find a break from the same old schedule?

The answer is right here on campus, if you know where to look.

To find a new kind of brain refresher, the Union Program Council Multicultural Committee, in conjunction with others, has put together Free Your Mind Week, an entire week of programs dedicated to bringing a taste of the rest of the world to K-State.

All events except the movies are free of charge.



The week's events kick off today at 7 p.m. with two showings of "Scent Of Green Papaya," a Vietnamese production. Comedians Buzz Sutherland and Pablo Fransisco will be performing at 8 p.m. in the Union Station.

Free Your Mind Week will continue until March 16 and features an Irish storyteller, a multilingual poetry reading and a speech by Timothy Leary.

UPC deserves to be commended for the work they have done putting this highly varied program together.

Give yourself a study break or two enjoying these unique events.

Country needs acceptance, unity to persevere

We live in a country at war with itself.

The recent shootings at abortion clinics, the increasing hostility between people on different sides of the gay-rights debate, and the continued conflict between races and ethnic groups all suggest that it is becoming increasingly difficult for Americans to agree on anything.

If our nation doesn't figure out how to be reconciled with itself, there will soon cease to be a nation to be reconciled.

A strength of Americans is that we're free to communicate different points of view. It is disturbing, however, that Americans are losing the ability to disagree in a productive manner. This is causing tremendous divisions in our society. Our country will not survive for another 200 years if we don't find some common ground, a few common denominators everyone can accept and agree on.

The question we must answer, of course, is what our agent of reconciliation will be.

The problem certainly isn't due to a shortage of suggestions about how to bring about some sense of cohesiveness in our society. Every group has its own bandwagon and agenda. America would be healed if multiculturalists triumphed or the religious right or the gay-rights brigade, etc., etc., etc.

The problem is that most groups believe unity is possible only if everyone conforms to their perspective. The truth is that any human institution with an agenda can never be completely correct. Some groups will be more right than others, but no group can have a monopoly on the transcendent objective truth.

America will never be reconciled with itself as long as each group is struggling for supremacy. Instead, we should strive to find some principles and values we can all agree on.

Conservatives often suggest that America is a Christian nation founded on Christian principles. Although we are no longer a Christian nation, it is true our country was founded on many Christian ideals. The Christian ideals our country was founded on were not so much a collection of Christian rules as the singular command spoken by Jesus in the Bible to "Love your neighbor as yourself." Incumbent in this idea is the belief that "all men are created equal" — and equally deserving of love. This command is also at the root of our Founders' vision to establish a nation in which people are free to express their beliefs but are encouraged to respect one another and live in peace.

It's no secret our government and citizens have failed at this on many occasions. However, there are some shining examples of reconciliation in our history.

The civil-rights movement is one good example. The engine that powered the civil-rights movement was essentially this notion of loving one another.

In his autobiography, "The Man from Ida Grove," former senator and presidential candidate Harold Hughes relays some dynamic examples of how high-profile political leaders from different ends of the political spectrum have been reconciled in the spirit of Christ.

Hughes, a flaming liberal, had this to say about a fellow colleague:

"John Stennis, whom I had once considered a conservative fossil, had become a warm and close friend . . . We still battled on the Senate floor over divergent viewpoints . . . but we shared a common belief in the saving grace of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The most amazing example Hughes shared about reconciliation was his encounter with former Nixon hatchet man Charles Colson. During Watergate, Colson experienced a tremendous conversion. A mutual friend suggested the two political enemies get together. "No" was Hughes' initial answer, but when he realized that wasn't a Christ-like attitude, he agreed to meet with Colson. The friendship they eventually developed has touched thousands of lives around the world and has encouraged countless political enemies to become reconciled. Our own congressman Sam Brownback and former congressman Jim Slattery are on different sides of the aisle but also enjoy this type of friendship.

Of course, there will never be a time when our country is completely reconciled. However, a few individuals can be reconciled with each other, and that can make a tremendous difference in our country and our world.

I recognize that not everyone shares this faith in Christ. Also, my faith in Christ doesn't make Christ valid. I can merely testify to what I've experienced. What you do with that is up to you.

I do know, without a doubt, that the most effective agent of reconciliation in the history of the world is Jesus. He is a person, not a bandwagon or human institution.

Republicans shun individual conscience

Both of the senators from our great state voted for the balanced-budget amendment. Though getting the required two-thirds vote proved more than Majority Leader Bob Dole could handle, he now has a more difficult task.

Dole now has to reign in a vengeful faction of his own party.

You see, not all of the Republicans in the Senate voted for the amendment. All but one did. And now some of the more imbecile members of the GOP are calling for punitive measures.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Oregon, was the sole GOP opponent of the balanced-budget amendment, and the party is none too pleased. Sens. Connie Mack, R-Fla., and Rick Santorum, R-Pa., are among the senators likely to call for the removal of Hatfield from his chairmanship of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Sound familiar? Last year, some fringe members of the GOP called for Sens. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and John Chafee, R-R.I., to be stripped of their seniority after voting for the crime bill.

But this is no fringe element. Mack is the secretary of the Senate Republican Conference, making him the fifth-most powerful Republican in the Senate.

And Mack is not alone among Republican leaders calling for Hatfield's ouster. House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, has offered his support for the removal of Hatfield.

"In the House, our guy would not be in the chairmanship after a vote like that," Armey said.

Remember, this is the same Dick Armey who recently called a Democratic colleague Barney Frank "Barney Fag," placing him just above Mama Gingrich on the "I Left Our Tact at the Office" scale. You can expect him to say really stupid things.

But the question should not be one of who wins politically. Rather, it is a question of who our elected representatives serve.

But the idea that one's position as a committee chair, a product of seniority on and, to a lesser degree, service to that committee, is subject to some strange code of loyalty to party is at best disturbing.

Hatfield was elected to serve his constituents in Oregon by shaping policy in the way he sees best. He felt that the balanced-budget amendment was not in the best interest of the people of Oregon or the American people and voted accordingly.

Hatfield could not, in good conscience, cast the deciding vote for a measure that he did not support. As a token of party loyalty, he offered to resign his Senate seat instead, lowering the number of votes needed to 66 and allowing the amendment to pass without his presence.

To his credit, Dole refused to accept the resignation of his colleague, and has yet to criticize Hatfield, though the vote certainly cost the majority leader in terms of political capital.

But the question should not be one of who wins politically. Rather, it is a question of who our elected representatives serve.

Do they defend our interests against those who seek to exploit us? Or do they serve a party political machine, geared toward nothing more than the accumulation and maintenance of power?

Some Senate Republicans have already spoken to this issue, defending Hatfield's actions despite his vote.

"It's not a healthy concept, in my opinion, to think that everyone has to fit into the same keyhole to belong to the Republican Party," Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Ala., said.

"The Republican Party is one that allows people to vote their conscience," Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Washington, said.

Obviously, this opinion is not shared by the whole of the Republican Party. But for the GOP to maintain its respectability in the political arena, it must continue to allow its members to vote how they see fit.

The standard that Mack, Armey, Santorum and others seek to impose is one of blind obedience. That is not the measure by which we should judge our leaders.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

▶ HOMOSEXUALITY

Columnist needs to find new topics

Dear editor,

I think it is great that our campus has a newspaper to keep us informed as well as entertain us.

But why is it that every time I pick up the Collegian I have to see some homosexual column written by Kevyn Jacobs?

I'd like to think there are more important issues to write about than his sexual preference. I think that it is courageous to come out and admit to 20,000 readers that he is gay and proud of it.

But why beat it into the ground?

I'd like to hear about issues that affect the student body, not Kevyn's excuses for his sexual deviancy.

It has gotten so bad that he might as well start his own paper, "The Gay Times" or "Homos on Campus." Then, he can name his "Notable Homosexual for the Week," and I am sure he won't bitch about it, although he will probably get supported on another campus about 90 miles east of here.

But until then, he can keep his unacceptable sexual-preference problems to himself, because we are tired of reading about them.

Hopefully, with a little encouragement, he will be able to overcome his urges to write only about his being gay, which will make him a more well-rounded writer.

It might take some research and creativity, but I'm sure he can find more interesting topics.

▶ COLUMN

There's no need to be a victim

Dear editor,

There's a trend sweeping our nation that is weakening and destroying it from within. The newest fad is to emphasize any difference you may have, no matter how small or insignificant, that will elevate you to the coveted "minority status." Once there, you can bash away at the rest of us poor souls, claiming oppression left and right and demanding compensation of better, yet preferential treatment, for injustices real, imagined or hundreds of years in the past.

Standards are lowered every day throughout every aspect of society to accommodate people who have an infinite number of excuses for not being able to achieve success the way the rest of us do — with hard work.

Well, the truth is, it is time to take responsibility for your own failure or success. Hard work, ambition and a little educated risk are what sets the CEO above the janitor — not race, gender, national origin or sexual preference. Don't lie to yourself — today's world is about profit and success. No employer, for example, is going to risk profit loss because of personal prejudice. So stop blaming the system for your failure.

Terrible though it may be to admit in today's society, I am a young, white, heterosexual male. There is nothing wrong with being different; diversity is one of the great things about our country, as long as you don't use it as an excuse for everything bad in your life. You imply with your cries of prejudice that you are denied some sort preferential treatment that I must be getting as evidenced by my success. Well, I resent that implication. I have worked hard for everything that I have, and if you have less than I do, then it's your fault alone.

So, Erin Mansur-Smith, your list of qualifications as a living martyr was impressive. There may never be a month dedicated to me, but that's okay. I am too busy pushing and challenging myself to be better every day. I don't have time to take a whole month off to whine and complain about what isn't being handed to me on a silver platter.

What would you ever do without someone to blame?

▶ INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTER

People should pay for what they use

Dear editor,

The arguments used for demanding student funding for the International Student Center have been used over and over again for decades to support a wide variety of programs.

Essentially, a majority of people are forced to support programs that benefit a minority. As evidenced by recent political events, this is an outmoded form of thinking.

Although these programs may only cost a few cents each to the majority, by the time you stack them all up, you are talking about a great deal of money.

Whether it be funding for the International Student Center or funding for Public Broadcasting System, we will all end up in debt.

These concepts of funding run counter to the democratic ideals upon which our nation was built.

In our pursuit for equal rights, we must learn to pay our own bills for the services that we use.

breaking out

story by nikola zytkow art by daryl blasi

Sure, they drink sometimes, but it's no big deal. My parents are just social drinkers — a few drinks after work to ease the tension and maybe a few after dinner or with friends watching the football game.

Editor's note: Names have been changed to preserve identities.

This is an all-too-familiar scenario for Julie, K-State student and daughter of recovering alcoholics.

"I was in denial all the way," Julie said she went on to explain that she, after all, had no frame of reference for a long time of what normal family life was really supposed to be like.

Julie said she saw alcohol everywhere while growing up. Images of relatives drinking and sometimes even passing out at reunions plague her thoughts.

"My dad drank after work to ease tension," Julie said. "It was hard to imagine my dad without a beer in his hand. I didn't think anything was wrong with it. It's just how I was raised," she said.

The confusion of denying the obvious and the struggle to look good for outsiders can trigger a number of emotional problems in children of alcoholics, according to "Do It Now," a publication by Christina Dye.

Julie describes three of the most common styles of dealing with alcoholic parents.

"Some people confront the parent about the drinking. Others will get buddy-buddy with them. They'll drink along with the parents. Then there's me — I left; I got out of there," Julie said.

Julie spent most of her time at her friends' houses. It was around her sophomore year in high school when she came to the startling realization that not all families were like hers.

But at a time when acceptance by others is the critical element in a young person's life, Julie said she didn't want anyone to know her secret.

"I would make up stories about my family that weren't true," she said.

By telling friends about the wonderful family she had and all the quality time they spent together, she almost convinced herself of the fantasy.

This pattern of wanting to fit in and be accepted went right along with her to college, where Julie started hanging around a party crowd.

"I believed that when I went to college, it would be a fresh start. I could be anybody I wanted to be," she said.

But instead, she took an all-too-familiar route.

"I fell into my parents' footsteps," she said.

One night after drinking quite a bit at a party, she blacked out. The next morning, Julie awoke to a nightmarish hangover and a phone call from a guy she'd met at the party but didn't remember. He had called to ask her out, and he told her he enjoyed the conversation they had the night before.

"That, along with the sobriety check, was an awakening," Julie said, describing another night when she got pulled over. Even though it was obvious she had been drinking, she just received a warning, she said.

"Those two things turned my life around," she said.

She added that this marked the beginning of her path to Al-Anon, an organization of people whose lives have been affected by alcoholics.

Annette, a local resident, had also turned to Al-Anon, but with a different story to tell.

"I'm atypical in that I did not live with the alcoholic during the active alcoholism," Annette said. "I was typical in that I was in denial about my own problem, my Al-Anonism."

Her then-boyfriend and husband is a recovering alcoholic.

"He was drinking when I met him. I don't think he was sober once during our relationship," Annette said.

But, like Julie, she had no frame of reference of what he was like when sober. Soon, though, she said she realized he had a problem.

"I would hear the pop of the beer can at six o'clock in the morning, and I would cringe," Annette said. "Other people in my world didn't do this."

Three years into the relationship, she realized she couldn't compromise with the alcohol. She broke off the relationship and joined a group that would change her life forever.

Annette said Al-Anon forced her to look at herself and what was going on with her instead of always worrying about the rest of the world.

"It's a philosophy of life that brings a consistent serenity," she said.

But she does admit the serenity and sanity didn't come easily.

At the same time that she was attending Al-Anon, her future husband admitted to his alcoholism and joined Alcoholics Anonymous.

"He grew up, and I didn't," she said. "At the end of the year, I had reached a bottom. I was emotionally a mess."

This bottom that co-dependents go through is similar to the bottom that alcoholics go through, Annette explains.

"I felt like I was totally responsible for everyone's happiness. I did a lot of soul-searching — recognizing that I'm powerless over alcohol, people, places and institutions," she said. "There was an intense amount of relief when I realized I wasn't responsible."

It took Al-Anon to help Annette understand a crisis didn't have to take over her whole life.

"My life is a sum of parts, and even though I might have a crisis going on in one part, it doesn't necessarily have to affect all parts," she said.

Annette said throughout her life she had perfected her role as the caretaker, fixer, excellent martyr and excellent victim. She said she thought all these things made her a good person. But, in fact, they were all the things that meant nothing to her husband during recovery.

"I thought my going would change him somehow," she said.

But instead it changed her.

Annette has now been in the program, which is based on a 12-step recovery program, for 10 years.

"Al-Anon is my life support. I knew it was going to be a long-term place," she said.

But for Julie, getting adjusted to the program took some time.

"I didn't want any part of the program," Julie said of her initial reaction to Al-Anon.

She was confused about the program jargon and anxious about how affectionate everyone was.

"There were no hugs in my family. So at the meetings when they hugged me, I bawled. I didn't know what to do."

Prior to joining Al-Anon, Julie's parents and sister had all joined support groups for drug addictions. Initially, it was hard for her to get used to the changes going on back home.

"They were talking and not yelling," Julie said.

She said that even though it might sound odd, she really fought the changes for a long time.

"Imagine living in a certain system and then that system changing," she said.

Finally, Julie said she turned it over to God and fully delved into Al-Anon's 12-step program.

"The thing I struggled with the most when I got into the program is allowing myself to feel. I got numb to adapt," Julie said.

Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug education service at Lafene Health Center, said this is typical of children of alcoholics.

"If expressing anger, sadness, etc., was discouraged during childhood, it may be difficult to express such emotions as an adult," Arck said.

Al-Anon is designed to help members express emotion. The mottos of the support group are "easy does it" and "one day at a time," and the solution is the 12 steps, Annette said.

While practicing the steps, she said, you learn to get in touch with your feelings, own them and realize you are powerless over those feelings.

"I also learned there is power greater than myself that can restore me to sanity," Annette said.

She said it's important to make the steps a lifelong goal to attain.

Both Julie's and Annette's loved ones decided to go to treatments on their own, but what about those who have an alcoholic in their lives who denies his or her disease?

Arck, who has a master's degree in guidance counseling, said Lafene offers advice and assistance in dealing with this issue, which is especially prominent in the college atmosphere.

"The peak drinking time is during college. Students drink more than any segment of the population," said Arck, who has an alcoholic family member.

Arck said it is also in college that some students have to deal with a lot of the problems they left back at home.

"They come to K-State as students. They're in that really dysfunctional, terrible alcoholic home. They won't admit it. They won't talk about it. They won't come to any of the therapeutic groups to discuss it. This is what we call the denial period," he said.

Arck said there are several choices concerned friends have in helping their loved one on the road to treatment.

In a situation where a son is concerned about a father's drinking, he could let his dad know by telling him he cares and has looked into some potential resources. Basically, he can say that he would like to help, Arck said.

"Dad can say three things. He can deny it: 'Oh right. I'll cut back, no problem' and not stop; or he can say that it's none of the son's business: 'End of conversation'; or admit he needs treatment."

Another option is for students to separate themselves from the problem. Arck said students sometimes need to be told that it is the parent's situation. It's his or her life. Student should not feel guilty for the decisions the parent makes.

The biggest step one could take is the major intervention, Arck said.

"We would get the drinker's boyfriend or girlfriend, friends, mom, dad, people they play volleyball with, grandma, teacher that they respect, little brother and cousins together," he said.

The next step is to persuade the alcoholic into meeting his friend in a room, not expecting to meet the whole group there.

In the meantime, Arck said he would have talked to the group.

"We would decide what they were going to say, how they were going to say it and who was going to go first and last."

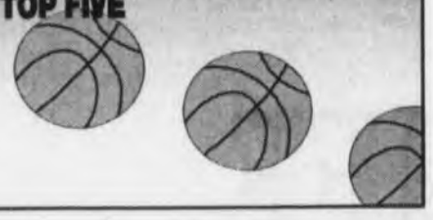
After the alcoholic enters the room and is seated, the talking starts.

"The girlfriend from back home says something like, 'We were planning on going to the prom together, but you got drunk that night and never showed up, and I was really crushed.' And you just keep going around in the circle," Arck said.

"By the time you get halfway around the circle, this person is absolutely shocked and often crying. It doesn't take all the way around the circle before the person realizes that everyone that had ever cared about them are saying they have a problem," Arck said. "When you're in it, the experience is unbelievable."

Arck said even though the alcoholic sometimes leaves the room distraught, there are also instances where they ask for help. In that case, the alcoholic is taken directly from the room to treatment.

But treatment for those whose lives are intertwined with the alcoholic does not stop there. For them it is a lifelong process.



"I would say to anyone whose life has been affected by someone who drinks to be aware that there is a solution, there are tools and a way of life that will move your life to be happy, joyous and free. I can tell you from experience that the promises of Al-Anon are free," Annette said.

Union players are the real scabs

If you pay them, they will come.

But who will pay to see them play?

I most certainly won't.

That is I won't pay to see union players play baseball.

Why?

PHILL SPIKER

Maybe it's because union players don't deserve to wear the uniform.

The reason I feel this way is the players' lack of love for the game.

See, I truly love baseball.

I grew up watching players like Pete Rose, Mike Schmidt, Willie Stargell and ever-so-famous Amos Otis.

I remember skipping school on opening day just to watch the Cubbies open their season at Wrigley field.

In those days, I remember sitting back with a bowl of popcorn and singing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" with the one and only Harry Caray.

And what about those summer nights watching the Royals during their glory days?

I will always remember that October in 1985 when the Royals went against all odds and won the world championship.

But those days are over.

Today, all I hear about is how the owners are lying to the players and how the players feel the proposed salary cap will hurt their chances of making their fair share of money.

Don't get me wrong.

I believe in the free-enterprise system, but when someone who is gifted enough to play a game that most people love complains that $1.2 million (the league average) isn't enough, I tend to not feel too much compassion for this individual.

Obviously, greed is something that has been instilled into the union players' minds.

This is why I would pay to see replacement players, or scabs, as the union prefers to call them.

Because of this name-calling, I will refer to the replacements as "the real players" and the union players as the "real scabs."

The "real players" love baseball for what it is — a game.

I think they are not out there to make lucrative contracts or endorsement deals. They're out there to have fun.

"Real players" like Royals catcher Jamie Nelson want to play because they love the game.

"I love it. I'd be a fool to say otherwise," Nelson said during an interview with the Kansas City Star.

These are the kind of people I want to see playing the grand old game.

Sure, they aren't the greatest players, but at least they will play with a real passion for baseball.

I say this because I genuinely think the "real scabs" don't care much about baseball.

If the "real scabs" really loved the game, they wouldn't have gone on strike last August — during possibly the greatest baseball season ever.

Their reasoning for this was to have something to bargain with.

What a reason.

The only thing that happened was the cancellation of the playoffs and World Series for the first time ever.

It's now March, and there is still no agreement.

Heck, no one is even talking.

I don't believe any of that mumbo-jumbo about the union doing this for future major-leaguers. This is nothing but a smoke screen to cover up the fact that the players are greedy.

But don't take my word for it.

Just listen to some minor leaguers like Rick Lancellotti, a "real player."

"The union doesn't care about minor-league guys. They always say your reward is in the big leagues. That's nice, but guys are trying to make a living down here," Lancellotti said during an interview with the Sporting News.

Some of the "real scabs" — Bobby Bonilla, John Franco, Bo Jackson and Roger Clemens, to name a few — have indicated that "real players" could face violent retaliation on and off the field.

"I've read what they all said in the papers," said "real player" Mike Twardoski during an interview with the Sporting News.

"Am I intimidated? No, not at all," he said.

I would like to salute "real players" like Nelson, Lancellotti and Twardoski.

I would be proud to buy tickets to watch these "real players" play the game I love.

But all good things will come to an end.

Eventually, there will be an agreement between the owners and the "real scabs," and the "real players" will have to leave their field of dreams and return to their original jobs.

When this fateful day finally happens, I will officially withdraw myself from professional baseball because baseball played by the "real scabs" isn't real baseball.

It's a real rip-off.

Budget increase projected for women

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

Those participating in women's sports at K-State can look forward to increased funding in the coming fiscal year.

Max Urick, K-State athletic director, said he could not give a dollar estimate, but a 4-percent increase in the departmental budget is projected.

He said most women's programs will probably get a larger increase in their budget than the men's programs.

"There is a historic deficiency with women's programs," Urick said.

"There is a human concern to help women's programs more than we have in the past."

He said program enhancement is the goal of the increased funding.

The goal is to create an environment in which teams can be successful, Urick said.

He said, based on his experience, there is a direct correlation between funding and winning across the board.

However, Urick said he admits that arguments for more funding might not stand up to analysis.

For example, K-State's women's track team is underfunded but still one of the best in the conference, Urick said.

The basketball and volleyball programs will likely receive a larger funding increase than the other women's sports, Urick said.

Basketball and volleyball are the premier women's sports in the Big Eight/Big Twelve Conference, he said.

"They have spectator-generating ability," Urick said.

"They are showcase sports to a broad base of people and can generate revenue."

Brian Agler, women's basketball coach, said his program is ready for more funding.

Even if people want to base funding on success, the basketball program deserves more, Agler said.

"In the last two years, we have made more progress than in the previous several," he said.

"We are winning now."

Urick said he wants to identify things of direct benefit to athletes already here.

Travel expenses, equipment purchases and scholarship funding are among the expenditures that should be increased, Urick said.

Inadequate scholarship funding has caused problems for the tennis program, Steve Bietau, women's tennis coach, said.

"For a couple years, we've been forced to use scholarship money to fund travel and general operating budgets," Bietau said.

Urick said the coaches would probably want more funds for recruiting the best players.

Recruiting did make volleyball coach Jim Moore's list of things for which he wants more money.

"It is important to take care of the people here," he said. "But building a program requires bringing in quality players."

Urick said he believes more in taking care of people already here.

Golf coach Mark Elliott said he agrees that travel and equipment allowances need to be larger.

In his five years at K-State, the golf program has had to cut back on travel, Elliott said.

"The girls used to go to Florida during spring break," Elliott said.

"We have not done that for two or three years."

K-State's overall athletic budget is the smallest in the Big Eight, Urick said.

Elliott said he agrees with Urick.

"OU's women's golf gets the same amount as our entire program," Elliott said of K-State golf.

"There is a human concern to help women's programs more than we have in the past."

Dream Team III slams Hay 6 for intramural title

The NCAA national champion won't be crowned until next month, but the all-University basketball championship was decided last night in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

D.T. III	70

Out of 25 teams in the playoffs, Dream Team III and Haymaker 6 were left to battle for the championship. Dream Team III beat Haymaker 6 70-37.

Dream Team III started out quickly with five treys by brothers Keith and Kevin Sides. They tallied the first 18 points to give the Dream Team an 18-7 lead after the first six minutes of the ballgame.

Keith Sides, senior in secondary education, hit his first four three-point shots before injuring his right ankle midway through the first half.

"I was pretty warm there — a guy hit the inside of my leg, and I twisted my ankle. I could've come back if I would've taped it, but with a lead like that, I didn't want to risk it," Sides said.

Dream Team III never let up and finished the half on a 23-4 run to take a 43-13 halftime edge.

In the second half of play, Dream Team III increased the lead to 40 points, 58-18.

But Haymaker 6 rallied at the 11:20 mark in the second half to put together a 19-6 run that cut the margin down to 28 points.

"We switched up and started to play a man-to-man defense — that kind of helped us get some turnovers — and we started to hit some three-point shots, finally," Shannon Brown, freshman in horticulture, said.

Dave Schmale, senior in secondary education, iced the win for Dream Team III with a one-handed dunk to capture the victory.

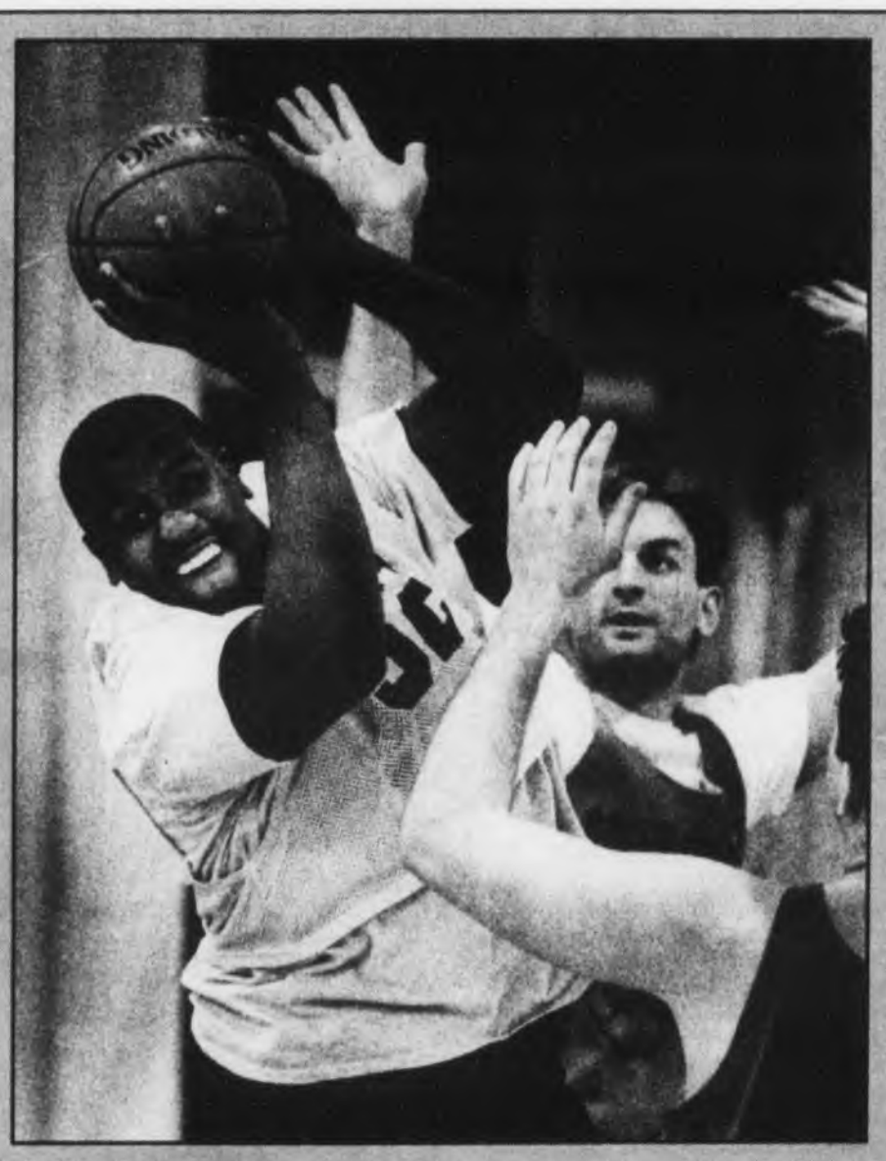
Five out of the eight players on Dream Team III played on the Ehlo squad that won the independent division last year.

Schmale said the players wanted revenge after their loss to Tau Kappa Epsilon last year in the all-University championship game.

"It really felt good. A lot of us guys on the team are seniors, and we didn't quite get that chance when we lost by eight last year. So we were really wanting to finish the year with a good one this year. I'm glad we captured that win," Schmale said.

Schmale said he respects Haymaker 6 for sticking together as a team and making it this far.

"Coming in, we didn't know too much about this team. They obviously had to play really well to beat the fraternity team. I really give a lot of credit to them — they hung with it all year. They come in here and play hard, but came up short at the end of the game," Schmale said.



Derek King, redshirt freshman football player in business administration, said he is proud of the Haymaker 6 squad.

"To tell you the truth, I didn't really think we were going to make it this far. I'm glad we made it. The team played hard, and we did the best we could. I'm proud of us," King, who finished with 15 points, said.

Both the women's and co-rec division's also crowned their champions earlier this week.

The women's all-University championship was similar to the men's final. The Champs smashed the Dudettes 44-13.

The co-rec title game was a closely fought contest with the Fast Babes holding off the Nads 50-45.

Ryan Young of the Haymaker 6 intramural basketball team takes down a rebound Wednesday evening during the all-University basketball championship game at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Young's sqaud lost the game 70-37.

K-State looking forward to Texas tournament

BERNIE HANEY
Collegian

The weather hasn't been kind to the K-State men's golf team.

"The weather kind of dictates what we're doing," K-State golf coach Mark Elliott said.

"Hopefully, we can at least get out by Friday," Elliott said.

"It doesn't make it easy on our players."

If not, Elliott said the team will have only practiced outside three times heading to the Southwest Classic in Austin, Texas.

This weekend's invitational of 16 teams will be based on 36 holes of stroke play.

The team will have a practice round on Sunday at Circle C Ranch Golf Club.

On Monday and Tuesday, each player will play 18 holes at the same site.

"This is really a pretty decent field. A lot of people don't really know these schools, but these are really competitive golf schools," Elliott said.

"A lot of southern schools have played. We're at a disadvantage because this is our first one out of the gate."

The K-State team will feature four juniors and one sophomore for the first meet of the spring season.

"The group that is going can handle it out of anybody that could," Elliott said.

Junior Troy Halterman, who had two first-place finishes in the fall season, is expecting similar things in the spring session.

"I can't go out and try to win every tournament," Halterman said.

"All I can try to do is put myself in contention to win the five tournaments. If so, some good things will happen."

With the limited practice, Coach Elliott said he thinks hitting the golf ball won't be the players' main concern.

"The hardest thing might not be hitting the ball but the short game aspect," Elliott said.

"It takes a little time to get the touch and feel back into it. What you would like to know is where the ball is going. The biggest thing for these guys is to put a good swing on it."

The team did practice outside last Sunday at a chilly Custer Hill golf course.

"It's kind of hard to go outside when you've been inside. It takes a couple of holes to get adjusted," junior Scott Hovis said.

Because of snow cover on the courses, this week's practice is at the Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

Elliott said the players will hit balls for half an hour to keep their swing going and hit 20- to 30-yard shots for short-game practice.

"Your ball can only fly 40 to 50 feet before it hits the net," Holvis said. "

"You can't tell if you're hooking or slicing or which way it's going, but at least we get to swing and hit some balls than do nothing at all."

The team had one first-place finish last fall at the D.A. Weibring Invitational.

Junior Jason Losch said the team is hoping to see where it is at right now.

"Our goal as a team is to play strong. It's a good warm-up tournament," Losch said.

"A lot of the Texas schools playing are small and really good. I think we went down there last year and those schools whooped up on us good," Losch said.

Despite a moderate finish last year, Losch said he thinks the team has a good chance for victory this year.

"I think we have a chance of winning," he said.

Six months after suffering a stroke, Karl Chen is STARTING OVER

Karl Chen ties his shoe with one hand after putting an ankle brace and his shoe back on after a physical therapy session at the Saint Mary Hospital.

Riding his bike is just one of many exercises Karl is doing to redevelop the skills he once had.

ONE YEAR AGO, KARL CHEN, SENIOR IN ACCOUNTING AND FINANCE, WAS A HEALTHY, FULL-TIME STUDENT AT K-STATE.

Today, after six months of intense therapy, Chen said he is thankful to be able to walk again and take a night class at K-State.

Last summer, Chen suffered from a stroke while riding his bicycle in Manhattan.

It was discovered after his stroke that he suffers from moya moya, a rare disease that causes the blood vessels in the brain to thin out and rupture.

"Last summer I was riding my bike down Juliette with some of my friends. I got off my bike and started walking. I felt tired, but I didn't know the stroke was causing it," he said.

Later in the evening, Chen said, he went to the house of Mike Marlett, senior in journalism and mass communications and art.

"We went to Marlett's house, and that's when the paralysis starting happening. At the time, I was playing with a napkin, and it kept falling out of my hand," he said. "I said, 'hey guys, look — I can't pick it up.'"

Chen said he did not go to the emergency room that night because he didn't realize there was a serious problem.

The next morning, Chen said his friends came to visit him at his home.

"They said I was crawling on the ground trying to answer the door," he said.

At this point, Chen said, he was taken to the hospital by his brother and a friend.

"I don't remember a thing about it. I remember being at Marlett's house, but there are selected time slots I don't remember," he said.

While at the emergency room, Chen said, he was given a CAT scan. During the CAT scan, a brain hemorrhage was discovered, and his doctors decided to fly him to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka.

"They put me on morphine and knocked me out cold," he said. "It was the best thing I ever had."

Chen said he spent almost two months in Stormont-Vail in Topeka before moving to the Kansas Rehabilitation Hospital.

While at the Kansas Rehabilitation Hospital, Chen was under the care of Dr. Donovan Lee, director of the Brain Injury Rehabilitation Services.

"It was quite serious. Anytime there is bleeding in the brain, it is quite serious," Lee said. "Karl is doing better than most people would be, given his condition."

Lee said the cause of moya moya is unknown because the disease has just recently come into light.

"They haven't isolated the gene yet. It's a fairly recent phenomenon," he said.

Moya moya typically surfaces in young adults with a Chinese, Korean or Japanese background, he said.

Lee said moya moya literally means "puff of smoke" because that is what the X-ray of a person's brain suffering from the disease looks like.

Chen is the first patient with moya moya at the Kansas Rehabilitation Hospital, he said.

A patient's outlook on life before a trauma will have a lot to do with a stroke victim's recovery, Lee said.

"In general, with a traumatic brain injury involving a young person, the recovery depends a lot on how they were before the brain injury. If they have good coping skills and a supportive family before, then they will do well," he said.

Lee said there is a chance Chen could suffer from another stroke.

"He is at risk and especially more since he has moya moya," Lee said.

Chen said sometimes he worries about his disease.

"They haven't found a cure yet to what I have," he said. "All I can do is wait and see. What happens happens."

After leaving KRH, Chen still was in either physical, occupational or speech therapy five days a week at the Saint Mary Hospital and returned once a month to KRH for a checkup.

Now, Chen still does physical therapy with two K-State physical therapy students and sees a speech pathologist once a week.

At the beginning of his therapy, Chen said he used parallel bars to begin to learn to walk again. Eventually, he started using a quad cane and then graduated to using a single-tip cane. Now, Chen said he uses the cane only to walk long distances in places like the mall.

Chen said at first he wasn't sure if he would be able to walk again.

"I thought I would never walk again," he said. "It was the scariest thought in my life."

Chen said he has been impressed with the quality of the people who have helped him with his therapy since the stroke.

"One thing I learned from this is that there are a lot of good, kind people out there who are willing to do more than they were told to do," he said. "They went out of their way to help me out."

Chen said the stroke has changed his life in many ways.

"Before the stroke, I kept things to myself, and I was kind of shy, but after the stroke, I became known as a person who babbles a lot. I almost had to find people to talk to," Chen said.

Ken George, a former Manhattan resident and Emporia State football player, was in KRH at the same time as Chen for a brain and neck injury he received during football practice.

"We did about everything together. We talked, walked, watched movies, swam and did just general rehabilitation together."

George said it was beneficial to have someone like Chen in the hospital with him.

"It makes it a lot different to have familiar faces around you. It's almost homey," he said. "It's a whole lot easier knowing you have a friend."

George said Chen was an encouraging person.

"He was a very positive person at all times. He's also a very, very, very Balancing on his left foot, Karl gets assistance from Teri Bates, a physical therapist at the Saint Mary Hospital. Karl has finished his physical therapy at Saint Mary but continues to work on developing the use of the left side of his body at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex with the help of two K-State students.

Six months after suffering a stroke, Karl, a senior in accounting and finance, is beginning to return to his old hangouts and friends. The stroke was caused by moya moya, a rare disease that typically surfaces in young adults with a Chinese, Korean or Japanese background.

Bernie Hayen, a K-State instructor, answers a question for Karl before a review session for an upcoming test. Karl is easing his way back into school by taking Business Government and Society, which meets once a week in the evenings.

Poetry readings, live music and counterculture legend Timothy Leary.

It's all part of "Free Your Mind Week," and it's all brought to K-State by the Union Program Council.

Mary Taylor, chairperson of the multicultural committee and senior in psychology, said this is the second year for the event.

"It's a way for students to experience something new on campus for a week," Taylor said. "It gets them exposed to new and alternative views in a fun and interesting way."

Last year, the week included programs about AIDS awareness, homosexuality as a college student and students' stereotypes about rape.

This year, the week will kick off with a comedy show by Pablo Franscisco and Buzz Sutherland at 8 tonight in Union Station.

During the week, guitarist Edward Cruz, baseball player David Pallone and Irish storyteller Scott Keely will be just a few of the many educators and entertainers.

Taylor said UPC brought in Cruz because a committee member heard him play at the National Association of College Activities conference and was impressed with his talent.

Another highlight of the week will be a lecture titled "Behind the Mask" given by Pallone, who will speak from noon to 1 p.m. Monday in the Union Courtyard.

"He wanted to come to K-State for a long time, and the UPC was the first ones to offer him a place and a time to speak," Taylor said.

Taylor said Pallone has a reputation of being a personable person who talks one-on-one with the students.

"Instead of preaching to you what happened, he talks with the students, not at them," Taylor said.

Taylor said the multicultural committee is organizing the week, but the other committees are taking care of their own events.

The special events committee is conducting an event involving Keely, an Irish storyteller, actor and playwright. Keely will offer an evening of humor, ballads and jigs at 7:30 p.m. Monday in Union Forum Hall.

Christy Drake, chairman of special events and sophomore in political science, said she is excited to be a part of "Free Your Mind Week."

"It's a great program, and I know the multicultural committee works hard to bring as much diversity to it as possible," Drake said.

Chrissy Hathaway, junior in Spanish and education and chair of the arts committee, said a poetry reading will also be offered during International Coffee Hours from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Station.

"Anyone interested in reading poetry should come," Hathaway said.

"I especially encourage ones about culture and other languages."

Taylor said she expects three times as many people to show up this year.

"I expect it to grow in size from thirty to one hundred for the smaller events, and when Dr. Timothy Leary comes, I expect McCain to be filled," Taylor said.

Drake said she thinks the events educate the students about other cultures and lifestyles.

"It encourages everyone to open up to new ideas and realize what's going on in their lives and realize that everyone has a different life and experiences to share," Drake said.

'American Sunset' on horizon for Purple Masque Theatre

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Normally, it's frowned upon to crunch potato chips and chew on a peanut butter and jelly sandwich during a live theatrical production, but for one campus theater show, it's encouraged.

Lunchbag Theatre, started in 1977 by Lew Shelton, provides advanced acting and directing experience to theater majors while providing free entertainment to K-State students.

"Since it's during lunch, it doesn't interfere with people's schedules. It's in the middle of the day, so it gives a way to educate and entertain people," Shelton said.

At 11:30 a.m. today in the Purple Masque Theatre, the production of "An American Sunset" by James Prideaux will be performed free of charge.

Shelton said he describes the play as a cynical drama about American values.

"'American Sunset' deals with an exclusive social club and focuses on a young male who is applying for membership," Shelton said. "There's a severe penalty if you don't pass the membership criteria — they kill you."

Shelton said the actors and directors receive credit for performing in the productions as part of the Advanced Acting and Directing courses.

The students must prepare script books and a written analysis. They meet from 3:30 to 8:30 p.m. for a rehearsal period to meet the criteria of the class.

When the program first began, the performances were closed to the public, and the class performed scenes from Greek and Shakespearean drama.

"They didn't go very well, and I didn't think they completed the goal I had of teaching the actors and directors," Shelton said. "I thought if we did one-act plays for the public, then it would prompt people to work harder."

Making the productions open to others greatly improved the program, Shelton said.

"Theater students like an audience," Shelton said. "It's sort of a payoff for them."

Office of Student Activities and Services is Currently Accepting Applications for Director of Consumer and Tenant Affairs Office

The primary goal of the director is to provide assistance to students in preventing and resolving problems with commercial concerns.
The secondary goal of the director will be to conduct an on-going program to eduacate the student body in rental, consumer, and financial matters.
The director also assists in helping students locate off-campus housing as well as the operation of a roommate matching service.

STUDENTS ELECTED TO SERVE STUDENTS

The April elections held by KSU Student Government will include six positions to the K-State Union Governing Board. Four of these positions are one-year terms and two are for two-year terms.

You should consider candidacy for one of these positions if you have talent and a few hours available each month to contribute to bettering the K-State Union operation.

The K-State Union Governing Board (UGB) is an organization of ten students, three faculty members, and one alumni appointee (usually a student). The purpose of UGB is to serve as the general governing and policy-making body of the K-State Union. The Board works with the K-State Union staff to help the K-State Union best serve the Kansas State University student and University community. Meetings are held 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. on the first Thursday of each month.

Filing information is available in the Office of Student Activities and Services or in the Union Director's Office.

An informational meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, March 14, 1995 at 7:00 p.m. in Union Room 204.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Arguing employees upset co-worker

Dear Cassie,

I work in a place where everyone is always fighting. Every time I turn away, someone is screaming about how someone else didn't do a good job on something or that someone else was incompetent.

At times, even the boss gets in on it, and anyone who makes a comment about all of the tension gets yelled down or accused of choosing sides.

I like what I am doing and the people I am with, but I have just about had it with all the bickering. How do I let everybody know how I feel?

Lost

Dear Lost,

It is about that time of the year for everyone's tolerance to be leaking a little low. With the weather and midterms, it's easy to lose one's temper.

HotWired gives Internet users new adventures

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Step into Cyberspace.

HotWired takes you on a wild ride through unexplored territory on the World Wide Web, all without leaving the comfort of its homepage.

Opening the homepage, a net surfer needs to register with the magazine and then jump into a paper that is out on the cutting edge of online media — a magazine for all tastes.

WEB SITE
Hotwired's address is http://www.hotwired.com/

Some of the things that can be found on HotWired include HotMoo, an interactive talk channel, and Soundz, a page with soundbites and a variety of other interesting stuff.

HotMoo allows people with access to NCSA Telnet to chat with each other in real time. It is a great way to meet people all around the country and world and learn something new.

One of the most interesting links on the site is called Serial. On this page, HotWired brings back the serial novel to periodicals.

The novel "Quiet Americans," by Sonia Simone and Robert Rossney, was put on Serials this winter. It is a refreshing alternative to the regular news and boring information many sites publish. They have a complete index of back issues, so be sure to start from the beginning.

Want to know what the latest web-related news is? Check this site out. Flux is a column with news briefs and editorial comment. A wide variety of interesting and net-related news is mentioned here.

A new area on the homepage is called Kino. This is a showcase of original movies and artwork.

HotWired lets readers send in their own creations and then displays them in this section. This is a great outlet for noncommercial artists and experimenters. Some pretty cool imagery is already there, and more appears regularly.

Classified advertising is also available on HotWired. Run personal ads (quite colorful, to say the least), offer items for sale, post job openings or inquire about a job. You can click on a specific section and then review only the entries that interest you.

Though HotWired has a lot of different areas to offer, the site isn't perfect in every detail.

One of the problems involves organizing all the different areas. When you enter the homepage, especially if you're new to surfing, you might not have any idea what each area means until after you are there. It can be a waste of time to hit areas not of interest.

Another problem with HotWired is that it's a graphics-rich site. They run a lot of graphics bars, photos and artwork. All the graphics make the site colorful, but they also make it slow, especially if you're trying to download from an online service.

Overall, HotWired is a colorful and refreshing change of pace from many of the normal sites found on the Web.

Renter's insurance policy can help shelter students

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

If a tornado or fire ripped through your apartment today, your landlord would not be responsible for replacing your personal contents.

The owners of a building are responsible for the building and their contents inside, like a refrigerator, said Denise Gurtiza, senior in accounting and office manager at Tim L. Engle's American Family Insurance Agency.

That means tenants are responsible for their own personal belongings, Gurtiza said.

Tim Engle said many renters do not realize this.

"Many people believe that their contents are covered by their landlord's insurance, but this is not true," Engle said.

Most students, however, are covered to some degree by their parents' homeowner's policy.

"Most homeowner's policies will cover the damages sustained for those students who are single and still consider their parents' home their home," Engle said. "But this may only be partial coverage.

"It is best to contact your parents' insurance agent for details."

Leslie Mills, secretary at State Farm Insurance, said the question is whether you feel adequately covered by your parents' homeowner's policy. If not, you may want to consider renter's insurance.

Renter's insurance provides protection against things like fire, lightning, windstorm, theft and power surges to appliances.

For a person to get renter's insurance, everybody in that person's apartment must also have renter's insurance.

"Everyone must have their own policy," Gurtiza said. "Everyone is covered, or nobody is."

Gurtiza said everyone must be covered because insurance fraud would likely result if only one person was insured.

"You don't need pictures or serial numbers of your items," she said, "but you could videotape or list your personal items to be sure you claim everything you lost."

Gurtiza said the videotape of your personal items should not be stored in your apartment.

"Leave it with your parents, or get a safety-deposit box," she said.

Gurtiza said she thinks it is in a person's best interest to get personal property replacement cost. Replacement cost is what it would cost to replace an item at today's prices.

"If a person does not get the replacement-cost option, depreciation will be figured on the contents," Gurtiza said.

Mills said the amount of coverage needed is related to the size of the apartment.

"If you're interested in a renter's insurance policy, square footage gives us a good starting point on how much coverage you would need," Mills said.

Students in residence halls, sororities and fraternities are often denied renter's insurance. Engle said that is because of the large number of individuals living together. Gurtiza said high theft is another reason.

"We can't write a renter's insurance policy for people living in a group living environment," Engle said.

But he said students in group living environments are still covered by their parents' homeowner's policy.

Mills said each company's renter's insurance policy may differ.

▶ SYMPOSIUM

Scholars to discuss culture, education

AMY ZEIGLER
Collegian

Scholars from all over the country and the world will travel to K-State for a cultural-studies symposium this weekend.

Don Hedrick, professor of English, said the program has focused on a different topic in each of its four years of existence.

This year the masters tract of the cultural studies program will be host to a symposium titled "Western Humanity Pedagogy and the Public's Fear."

"We're going to talk about what the courses at K-State should be like. It could make a big difference in what happens to the humanity courses," Hedrick said.

Last year, the conference focused on children's literature, and next year the symposium will be on literature and environmentalism.

Dean Hall, head of the English department, said it is important to bring the scholars together to discuss the role of the humanities in higher education.

"It started because of the growing response in the area of cultural studies," Hall said. "The symposium is a natural way to bring in leaders and potential leaders to talk about a certain issue."

During the symposium, the scholars will meet for forums on Friday and Saturday, and graduate students will have a panel to discuss the politics of graduate teaching at 10:30 a.m. Saturday in Union 212.

In addition to the forum and panel, the symposium has also invited a famous creative writer and an expert in the field of humanities to come in and share their experiences and ideas with the K-State community.

Ishmael Reed, an author of more than 20 books and Pulitzer Prize finalist, will be reading poetry and selections from his new book, "Japanese by Spring," at 7:30 p.m. today at the Union Little Theatre.

Hedrick said that Reed's style of writing is comical and reminds him of the pop art of the '60s and '70s.

"There's a great interest in multicultural writers, and it was quite fitting to bring in one of the most prominent African American writers in our country for the symposium," Hedrick said.

The other main event in the symposium is a lecture by Michael Perube, who will talk about "Cultural Criticism and the Politics of Selling Out" at 7:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theatre.

Hall said he hopes students will come and hear the speakers.

"It's a great opportunity and is paid by a small part of student fees, so I hope they will take advantage of it and see him," Hall said.

Work load is a challenge; living day by day is the key

she does in her other involvements.

"I choose the activities I know I will enjoy," she said. "I like challenges. Balancing them is a challenge."

Even though Keller enjoys being involved, she has had to deal with burnout. She said her junior year was especially busy.

"I didn't know when to say when, and I just got overwhelmed. I was essentially trying to do too much," she said. "I'm now just trying to balance."

Keller said none of her other commitments, such as school, suffered during that time.

"I try to live day by day," she said.

She said she is now looking for a job and that a cooperative extension opening in Colorado is appealing to her.

"I'm still looking at other job possibilities," Keller said. "I like working with youth."

Keller said she is also looking at the possibility of living with her sister near Orlando and working at Walt Disney World for a while.

"I don't want to do the Disney World thing all my life," she said, "but I do believe you learn something everywhere.

"I don't know how much of 'Welcome to Walt Disney World. Please step to your right' I will be able to handle, though."

Back here in Kansas, Keller is concentrating on graduation and being a part of her house. She got involved with the Thetas after seeing the relationships her sister had made in the house.

She said she doesn't like the stereotypes of greeks.

"I don't classify myself as the typical stereotyped greek," Keller said. "I think of my sorority sisters as my living group. I feel more comfortable calling it a group."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Companies seek students for lists

Woodard said the Topeka Better Business Bureau has received 180 telephone complaints about telemarketing since Jan. 1.

"It's a way people are making money," she said.

The Information Bureau, an independent company based in Dallas, is making money by selling lists of names and phone numbers.

Making money is the purpose of any business, representative Joe Millen said.

The bureau's business is getting copies of databases from the County Recorder's office and selling them to individuals and companies, Millen said.

Names and phone numbers are sold for 20 cents each, and a minimum order is $200.

According to Money magazine, August 1989, practically everyone in America is on somebody's list.

However, money isn't being made off student information at K-State, assistant registrar Ron Brown said.

"Data in the student information system is for official uses," Brown said.

There are two types of lists students are recorded under, he said.

The confidential list includes academic, admissions, financial aid, business, medical, counseling and other records.

These records cannot be released without the written consent of the student involved, except to other University personnel; or in connection with the student's application for financial aid; or in response to a judicial order or subpoena; or to certain state and local officials, according to the K-State student records policy.

The directory information includes information found in telephone books and student yearbooks and is released to campus departments or organizations with a faculty representative, Brown said.

"If a legislator wants it, he'll probably get it, but if Joe's company in Kansas City wants to sell credit cards, then probably not," he said.

John Fairman, assistant vice president for University relations, said he thinks telemarketers often purchase directories and call from the list.

"I honestly think a good portion of it goes strictly through telephone directories," he said.

American Collegiate Marketing, which advertises magazine subscriptions at K-State, has dealt with scam companies convincing people they are representatives of ACM.

"There are always people out there trying," said Karen Mann of the customer-service department.

The problem is they talk so fast, she said.

"Pin them down to what company they are calling you from," Mann said.

Bray said she tried several approaches to test whether she was dealing with a possible telemarketing scam.

Bray asked if she could tape the conversation, and the caller hung up.

Next she asked her father to speak and pretend to be a lawyer, and the company would call back and ask if her parents were home.

Finally, she received a pamphlet in the mail displaying all the things she could have won.

"They weren't trying to sell something — just if I said I would send the money, and they had a verbal commitment, then they could continue sending a bill," Bray said.

After her summer of dealing with a possible telemarketing scam, Bray said the best thing to do is to ask the caller not to call again and hang up.

intelligent person. Through adversity, he didn't lose himself."

George said Chen was always in a good mood.

"He did everything that he had to do to get better," he said.

"I would describe Karl as a champ," George said.

Chen said his night class, Business Government and Society, is going well, but he plans to take the summer off and take as many hours as his neuro-psychiatrist will let him next fall. After graduation, Chen said he would like to go to graduate school in Texas or take the CPA exam and go into practice.

Chen said despite the Americans with Disabilities Act, he still has concerns about finding employment in the future.

"I've been doing OK in school," he said. "I just hope after the stroke, employers won't see a slippage in my grades and think I'm not the same person."

Licensing, contract are possible plans for Union food-service

If unhappy, lease companies will have to remain until they make a return on their investment, Cornyn said.

"They are not easy to get rid of," he said.

Because of state statute, Bosco said, the Union cannot advertise because it is a not-for-profit agency.

This would still be true, Bosco said, under a lease or license situation, but the Union could indirectly benefit from a company's national advertising and promotions.

■ LICENSING

In a licensing situation, either a brand would approach the Union, or the Union would approach a company to have its food in the food court.

Union employees would run the restaurant under company standards and pay a royalty for advertising and promotion.

Cornyn said many universities are going to licensing situations.

The operator, not the company, must make the situation work.

■ CONTRACT

Food services could contract to an outside company to operate more efficiently, Cornyn said.

But contract companies, too, want a return on their investments. If not successful, they could leave at the end of their contract.

Cornyn said contracting is popular because labor costs are cheaper under contracts than under state programs.

A company, depending on its contract, hires its own staff.

Cornyn said it is rare for a company to come in and completely clean house.

He said if a company fails to hire past employees, it does not leave a good impression with the community, and it is not in the best interest of the company to go outside of experienced staff, especially in a community with a relatively small job market.

"We have heard a doomsday sense about contract, and it simply isn't that way," Cornyn said.

He said it is not definite that wages would be lower under a contract system.

■ SELF-OPERATION

Malley Sisson, Union food-services director, said part of her frustration is that different people have different financial expectations for her department.

She said a contract company would have an answer as to how much money they would need to make.

Current Union facilities, Seelye said, are not up to standards to make self-operation food service successful.

Sisson said the current design has a lot to do with current problems.

Under contemporary designs, it would take fewer staff members to run food services, Cornyn said.

SGA wants meter rates at 50 cents

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Student Governing Association decided to recommend parking meter rates at 50 cents per hour instead of the parking council decision of 75 cents per hour.

John Riedel, parking and campus safety committee chair, presented this resolution before Senate.

Riedel supports a raise in metered parking for several reasons. He said an increase in parking fees will mean less demand for parking spots. This will lead to less congested parking by the Union, he said.

The increase in parking fees could also slow down the rise in parking permits, Riedel said. However, parking-permit rates are prescribed to increase 10 percent every two years.

Steve Weatherman, business senator, said the Union's metered lot is designed for student convenience during short trips to the Union.

"If you are going to the convenience store to buy a gallon of milk, God forbid, you are going to pay more," Weatherman said. "Convenience costs money."

Parking Services was $45,391 in debt at the end of the year, according to its 1994 report.

"Money for this high-use lot has got to come from somewhere," Phil Anderson, faculty representative, said. "What we have to decide now is where this money will come from."

Chuck Haynes, business senator, said the majority of those people parking in the Union metered lot are students, and this increase would unfairly shift the burden to them. He said that he

Art museum's design upsets some students

SHELLY FOGLE
Collegian

Some students and faculty in the College of Architecture and Design think the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is an architectural design disappointment.

"The building should draw conceptually from campus. Everything on campus should be taken into consideration. I have my doubts that it was," Dwayne Oyler, senior in architecture, said.

A competition between architectural firms showcased designs from firms all across the United States.

Moore/Andersson Architects, based in Houston, Texas, was chosen to design the building.

Charles Moore, co-owner of the firm and world-famous architect, initiated the project but died during the planning phases. His partner, Arthur Andersson, took over the project.

"A building came out that was an ultra-traditional design that does not explore any possibilities," Oyler said.

Before going on stage to deliver the 100th Landon Lecture, Secretary of Defense William Perry gets his portrait taken backstage at McCain Auditorium by Dan Donnert, director of photographic services. Every Landon Lecturer has a formal portrait taken, a copy of which is sent to the speaker as a memento.

The war in Bosnia doesn't concern U.S. security, but William Perry, secretary of defense and 100th Landon Lecturer, says humanitarian concerns lead to many

There are no good options for Americans to do something about Bosnia if you carefully look at the consequences, said the U.S. secretary of defense Thursday.

Secretary of Defense William J. Perry discussed U.S. policy choices concerning Bosnia during the 100th Landon Lecture Thursday morning in McCain Auditorium.

"American casualties undoubtedly would be high if we sent ground troops to support the Bosnian government."

Perry opened his speech by explaining that America faces distinct choices and policy alternatives concerning Bosnia.

"At this time, our government and the international community support the Bosnian government, but it is true that the U.S. does not have a vital security interest in the war," he said.

Perry said the United States certainly does not have security interests as humanitarians.

"Our humanitarian efforts of sending supplies to the civilians have saved thousands of lives," he said.

As it stands right now, Bosnia's tradition of pluralism was crushed by the Serbs, leaving the heavily armed minority in control of 7 percent of Bosnian territory, Perry said.

Perry said the United States has two choices concerning the conflict.

"With choice A, we can limit the spread of the war by sending ground forces to Bosnia and enforcing no-fly zones. Or we can go with choice B, which is to lift the arms embargo, allowing us to supply the Bosnian government with weapons," he said.

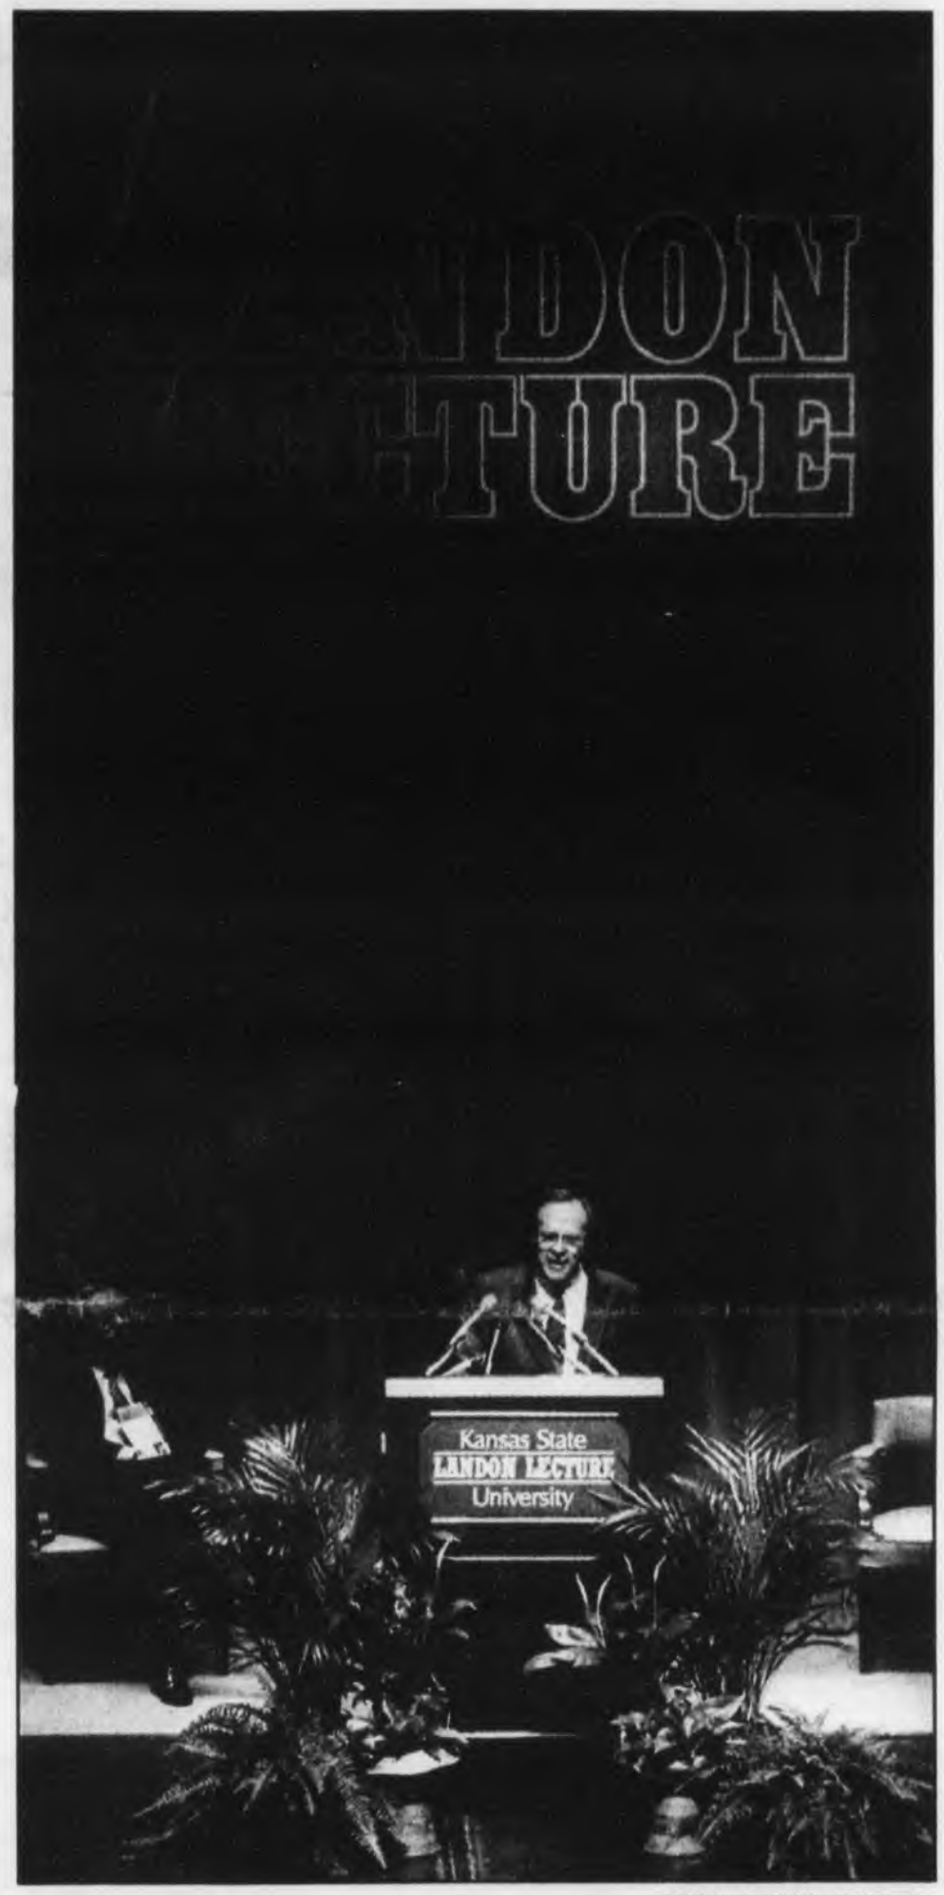
Both choices could ultimately lead to American casualties, Perry said.

"American casualties undoubtedly would be high if we sent ground troops to support the Bosnian government. We must also consider that Bosnia does not have the army or the navy to come get the weapons if the embargo was lifted," he said.

Perry said this means the U.S. troops would have to not only deliver the weapons but train the Bosnian soldiers to use them, which could also lead to American casualties.

The Bosnian proposal to the Serbs would give them control of 49 percent of the territory while the Bosnian government controlled 51 percent of the territory, but the Serbs rejected the proposal, further adding to the conflict, Perry said.

"We do not have enough leverage to enforce a settlement between the Serbs and the Bosnian government," he said.



Perry said the United States has not succeeded in achieving a peace settlement.

"Our present position in Bosnia is unpalatable. If we lift the arms embargo, it could be truly disastrous. The truth is also unpalatable," he said.

The Rev. Robert Sanders of Manhattan said he was disappointed with Perry's speech.

"I didn't feel like it dealt with the substi-

Parking Task Force adopts new view on garage location

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The Parking Task Force is changing its approach to the parking proposal.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said Thursday during the parking forum at Lucky BrewGrille that he thinks the appropriate thing to do is separate the questions of whether to build a garage and whether to build it in Memorial Stadium.

"In hindsight, maybe the task force should have just recommended that a parking structure be built and not go so far as to suggest a location. We came to that conclusion rather quickly, and we also, I think, were being kind of practical about it," Rawson said.

John Winkler, senior in history, said he did not like the idea of placing the proposed parking garage within the stadium.

"As a 19-year resident of Manhattan, a veteran of the armed forces and a history major, I have a problem with it being in the memorial and a place that I think is a beautiful venue for students and members of the community to go and exercise and have a place for recreation," Winkler said.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, said the survey passed out to students and faculty last fall showed general support from students for a parking structure.

The survey was a random sample of 1,200 people, Dwain Archer, director of parking and fire safety, said.

Rawson said the survey's return rate was about 50 percent.

Peterson said campus parking has been a problem for 30 years, and now the task force is willing to do something about it.

"I think the location problem we can deal with. The most important part is we're going to solve a major problem on our campus for students," Peterson said.

Four students from K-State's chapter of American Society of Landscape Architecture presented original drawings and suggestions for where the garage should be placed.

"We're just saying they need to open their eyes a little more," Lee Feaster, senior in landscape architecture, said.

Kristian Kelley, senior in landscape architecture; Jamie Fogle, junior in landscape architecture; Michael Burton, senior in landscape architect; and Feaster all worked for several hours Thursday afternoon preparing the drawings.

"We looked at every physical place it could fit on this campus," Feaster said.

Students also questioned the cost and funding of the garage.

Estimated cost for the garage is in the vicinity of $10 million, Rawson said.

A proposed mix of ways to fund the garage included parking meters and user fees, Archer said.

Archer also said garage security is important.

"We think we can do it with cameras, proper lighting and security," he said.

Darell Edie, chair of the University Parking Council, said one advantage of building the parking garage in the stadium is that the police department is nearby.

Greg Tadtman, senior in economics, said he is opposed to the parking garage in general.

"There are too many issues that need to be hammered out," he said.

Other issues discussed at the forum included short-term recommendations to decrease parking problems that were submitted by the task force.

These included making campus more bicycle-friendly, placing restrictions on people who can buy permits and placing restrictions on registered state vehicles.

▶ CITY, COUNTY COMPROMISE ON NEEDED REPAIRS TO KIMBALL AVENUE

Despite some earlier uncertainty about the project, Riley County plans to begin repairs on Kimball Avenue in the spring of 1996.

The repairs include new curbs for the road, repaving and new storm-water drainage, said Dan Harden, Riley County director of public works.

There was initially some question as to whether the county would go through with the repairs.

The section of Kimball Avenue in question was annexed by Manhattan last summer.

The county receives a certain amount of federal funding because of the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act.

Some of these funds were originally planned to be used on repairs to Kimball Avenue, Harden said.

The county was considering using this money elsewhere once the city annexed the road, Karen McCulloh, Riley County commissioner, said.

The city of Manhattan wanted the county to continue using these funds for the Kimball Avenue project, Bruce McCallum, Manhattan director of public works, said.

The city and county have compromised on the issue.

The county will use $360,000 of its federal funds for the Kimball Avenue project, Harden said.

The city will pay the local matching funds of $90,000 for the project, he said.

The construction will also include a new left-turn lane for westbound traffic on Kimball Avenue at the intersection of Kimball and College avenues.

Riley County plans to hire a contractor in February or March 1996. The contractor would begin the repairs when the weather clears up in the spring 1996, Harden said.

Riley County officials anticipate the construction to be completed before the next school year begins, Harden said.

▶ FAMILIES TO BENEFIT FROM LOWER LEVIES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House's top tax writer said his plan to lower levies for families with children, savers and many businesses fulfills Contract With America promises.

"If you had to track it, the contract will be 90 percent there," Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said.

"We're committed to the contract. We ran on it. We all signed it, and we'll do what we said we were going to do," he said.

But Democrats complained the tax cuts, worth about $200 billion over five years, would be a boon to the rich, paid for with cuts in welfare and other programs that serve lower-income Americans.

▶ HOUSE DELAYS VOTE ON TERM LIMITS

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans are delaying a vote on a constitutional amendment for term limits on lawmakers.

"In the next few weeks, the leadership will be working hard to cultivate the votes necessary to pass term limits," Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, wrote other lawmakers Wednesday.

Armey said the bill would not come to the floor as scheduled next week. A vote in late March is likely.

But even as Armey vowed to fight for the measure, two other members of the House GOP leadership voiced continued opposition, underscoring the difficulty of rounding up the two-thirds majority necessary for passage.

▶ BILL MIGHT LIMIT PUNITIVE AWARDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — After embracing two GOP bills aimed at reshaping the legal system, the House is taking up the package's central provision.

This provision is a measure that would make it harder for consumers to win product-liability damages.

The hotly contested bill would establish a national uniform set of laws on product liability, pre-empting state laws.

It also would limit punitive damages awarded in the vast majority of state and federal civil lawsuits, not just product-liability suits, to $250,000 or three times the economic damages, whichever is greater.

▶ K-STATE ALUMNUS SELECTED TO DIRECT DOLE'S OFFICE IN TOPEKA

A K-State alumnus and Manhattan attorney has been chosen as office director of Topeka for Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Scott Hesse will take over the position April 3 in Topeka.

Hesse said his primary obligation will be constituent outreach.

"I'll speak with groups and find out what issues are important for Kansans," he said.

Besides learning what the desires and needs of Kansans are, Hesse said he will also inform Kansans about what Dole does for the state and the nation.

He said he will spend 40 percent of his time on the road but will continue living in Manhattan.

Hesse was chosen for the position because he is a well-known, talented young man, said Dan Stanley, administrative assistant for Dole.

"Scott's well-respected in the state of Kansas, well-respected in the party and in Topeka," he said. "He's a good lawyer and a good man."

Hesse said hard work helped him get chosen for the job.

"I believe I was chosen because I have worked long and hard for the Republican party over the years," he said.

Super sidewalk to ease campus congestion

New path to be biker-friendly route, cost $264,000

MICHELLE BELCHER
Collegian

K-State and the Kansas Department of Transportation are cooperating to help end the human traffic jams on campus sidewalks.

A planned 12-foot-wide super sidewalk will start at Throckmorton Hall stretching north on Denison Avenue to Kimball Avenue and then to College Avenue.

It will turn south on College Avenue and meet up with the existing sidewalk at the entrance to Bramlage Coliseum.

The funding for the sidewalk will come from several different places.

"The Kansas Department of Transportation has given us a grant," Darell Edie, parking council chair, said.

"Also, departments in the area the sidewalk will serve are going to help — the rec complex, departments in Throckmorton Hall, the athletic department and vet med."

Taussig said the sidewalk's estimated cost is $264,000.

FORUM INFO

There will be a bicycle-registration forum at noon March 28 in the K-State Union Courtyard.

The KDOT grant will pay for $211,200.

K-State departments will split the remaining $52,800.

Mark Taussig, University landscape architect, said the need for a sidewalk is great because of the many University services the sidewalk will serve.

"Construction on the sidewalk will begin in late spring and hopefully be completed by the first football game," Edie said.

Taussig outlined several reasons to have the super sidewalk.

"A lot of people ride bikes and walk back and forth on that route. We need to get them off the streets," he said.

A second reason to build the sidewalk is to encourage alternative modes of transportation, such as bicycles.

Taussig said there has been an increase in the number of bikes on campus in the past year.

"We have been counting bikes over the past four years," he said.

"For the first three years, the number of bikes increased 10 percent each year. This year, the number of bikes increased by 20 percent," he said.

The increase in the number of bikes on campus and the need to help curb the parking problem has led to the goal of making campus more bicycle-friendly, Edie said.

"A general bike friendliness on campus will lessen the burden of parking. Registration of bikes on campus would allow that to happen," Edie said.

Edie said one idea for registering bikes would be a possible $5 fee for four years.

He said what registration for the bikes would look like is still up in the air.

"One idea is a postage-stamp type registration to put onto the bike," Edie said.

The fee would pay for the maintenance of bicycle signs, a map for bike riders on campus and a booklet showing dismount zones, regulations and safety tips.

"We are trying to promote riding a bike to campus, not deter from it," Edie said.

▶ M&M'S CANDY

And the winner is purple?

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

Before too long, purple pride may be melting in your mouth, not in your hand.

Mars Inc. is going to announce a new color for its M&M's candy on April 18. One of the possible colors is purple.

The new color is being selected by a nationwide vote that ends March 17.

The other options are blue, pink and no change.

Candy stores across the country received ballots for distribution to customers, said Mark Mingeldorff, manager of Mr. Bulky's in Manhattan Town Center.

"We can get several thousand of those and blanket the campus," he said.

Mr. Bulky's has had ballots for three weeks.

Mingeldorff said he estimates the store has given away between 300 and 400 ballots.

Mr. Bulky's has also given some ballots to other stores so their customers can vote, Mingeldorff said.

"We've already mailed out maybe a couple hundred," Mingeldorff said.

Of course, some people have left the store and mailed the ballots on their own, he said.

Mr. Bulky's has been trying to sway the vote toward purple, Mingeldorff said.

The store's campaigning includes a special display in its front window.

The display has two signs designed by M&M's that encourages people to "Vote for the new M&M's color."

Yellow, orange, green and red M&M's balloons sway in the window.

Black paw prints on purple paper track diagonally across the window to a white gift bag with a flag-holding Willie the Wildcat on it. Purple foil hangs out of the bag.

Mingeldorff said the store is serious about this campaign. The candy company knows about Mr. Bulky's activism, he said.

As the company monitors the part of the country ballots come from, it will see how dedicated Mr. Bulky's is to the purple cause, Mingeldorff said.

Blue also has active support. The Mr. Bulky's in Topeka is promoting blue in support of the University of Kansas, he said.

Mingeldorff said he is confident purple can defeat blue. He said Manhattan is more of a college town than Topeka.

"I think the town is very patriotic toward K-State and Willie," Mingeldorff said.

Anne Byers, information specialist for the rural clearinghouse at K-State, said if she voted, she would vote for pink.

"I have a 4-year-old whose favorite color is pink," Byers said.

Heather Karl, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said she would vote for blue because it is brighter and would add more color.

Some people, such as Michael Miller, assistant professor of computer science, said they would choose purple.

"Obviously, because we're at K-State," Miller said.

Sparks ignite shed beside Dykstra Hall

TRACEY STINSON

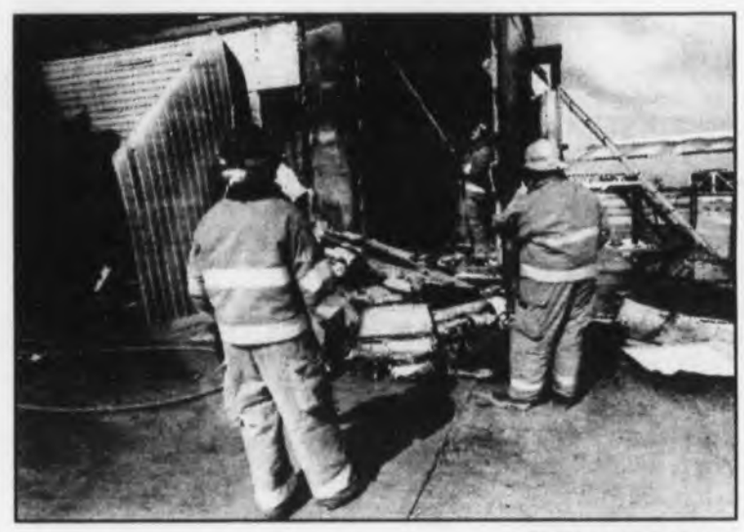
Sparks from a welding torch started a fire Thursday morning in a shed connected to Dykstra Hall.



The torch was being used to cut a support beam in the shed so that it could be torn down at a later date.

The Manhattan Fire Department found the fire under control.

"We did most of the work before they got here with the two hoses we had," said Lee Clark, sheet-metal worker at Dykstra.

It was not a big fire, and the building was empty because it is being torn down, Clark said.

Workers were in the process of cutting down a beam that led from the welding shop to an adjacent shed when sparks from a welding torch caught the shed on fire, Clark said.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Firefighters watch as water is sprayed into a shed connected to Dykstra Hall Thursday morning. Sparks from a welding torch started the fire, which was under control by the time the firefighters arrived.

Even though it appeared that the fire was already out, the firefighters tore the tin off the roof and side of the shed to make sure the fire was not smoldering underneath it.

"We need to tear a lot of the tin off, which could get ugly if the fire is still going under there," said Lt. David Sharp of the fire department.

The shed had no value because it was slated to be torn down, Clark said. There were already plans to replace it with a new shed before Thursday's fire.

Protect yourself from unsafe housing, bad leases

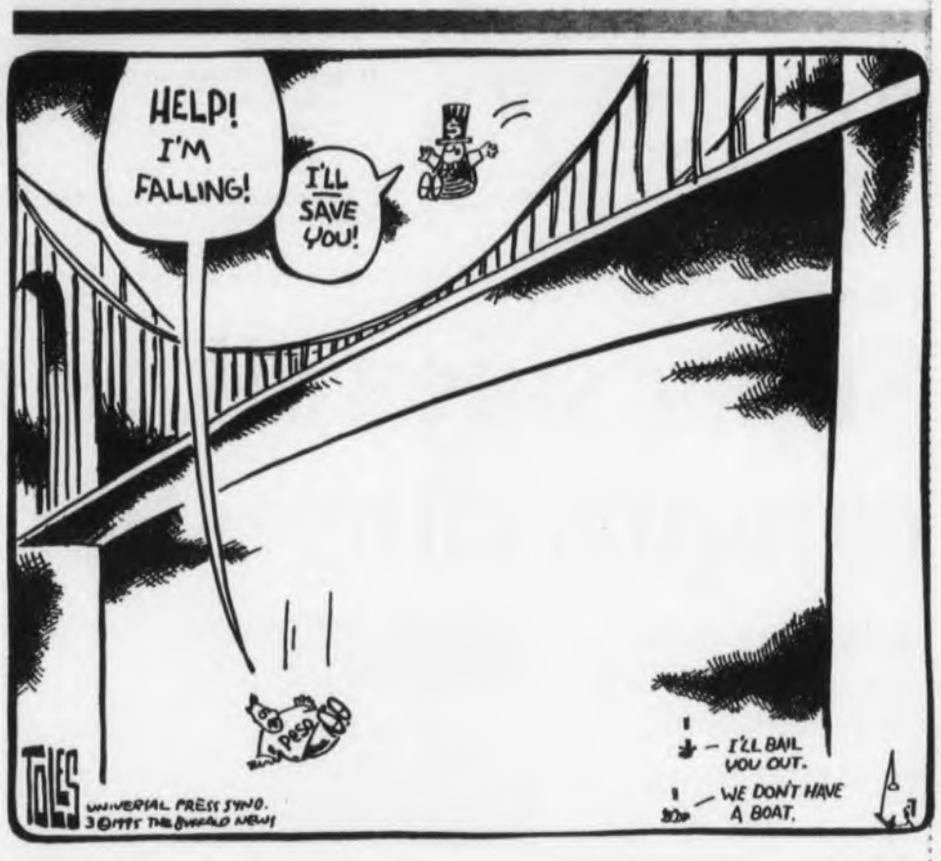
Students would be wise to take advantage of these free services when shopping for their next apartment to prevent future problems.

As students begin making arrangements to lease apartments and houses, they should take advantage of services offered on campus and through the community to protect themselves.

While there are many respectable and honest landlords in Manhattan, there are also a few unscrupulous ones who will attempt to take advantage of college students and renters in general.

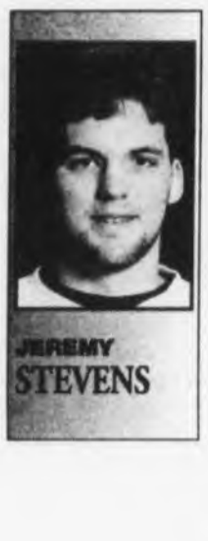
Students should take the necessary precautions to protect themselves from these individuals.

One service students can use is offered by the Consumer Relations Board in the K-State Union. Students can have the board review leases and ensure that the terms are acceptable and legal. This is a good way to avoid hassles with landlords later about lease violations.



The city inspection team is another good resource. Students can request that someone look at the rental property and check to make sure it meets the city building and health codes.

Having this inspection done could save students from ending up in an apartment that is unsafe.



Holton Hall offers students a listing of available housing in Manhattan.

Students would be wise to take advantage of these free services when shopping for their next apartment to prevent future problems.

Less government spending promising for future

JEREMY STEVENS

I've been waiting for some change.

I've been waiting for the change that is promised by virtually every candidate that runs for office, and I haven't seen any. Actually, I lost change when I was overcharged 50 cents last semester.

For two years, I've listened to rhetoric about reinventing government, but actions speak louder than words. However, the deficit doesn't slow in growth, the dollar doesn't increase in value, and crime rates don't decrease because they are asked nicely, no matter how much midnight basketball is played.

However, this year has brought some change. From Student Senate to the hallowed halls of Congress, there has been a dramatic shift in the philosophy of government.

The emphasis on creating programs has been shifted to downsizing government, and amid horror stories of mass starvation, cuts are being made, and things are changing. It's about time.

Student Senate actually reduced some salaries in its organization. While there were more amendments to readjust the wages than there are pizza joints in Manhattan, some of the cuts actually survived.

The Kansas Legislature has made its share of cuts, too. Amidst the shouts of those who say that we are doomed because tax rates are going down, a majority in the House was not intimidated and passed a motor-vehicle property-tax cut.

The Congress has passed laws that make life easier to live amidst cries that people will be living in cardboard boxes and dying of hunger.

However, some don't deal well with change. The debate over sending school lunch money to the states in block grants caused an official in Missouri to say, "School lunch as we know it will be no more." Let us venture into reality for just a minute. We are not talking about detonating nuclear weapons. We are talking about making government live within its means.

The Congress has passed laws that make life easier to live amidst cries that people will be living in cardboard boxes and dying of hunger.

Children do not depend on school lunches as their primary source of nutrition. If they did, they could sue for cruel and unusual punishment. In reality, a lot of the food the government subsidizes ends up in the trash, uneaten by the very children who received it for little or no money under the auspices they would starve and die without it.

Is this column mean-spirited? No. It's equal time. It is a look at ideas, rather than a cynical discussion of who is going to get hurt the most.

Are Republicans mean-spirited? No. They do not hate children and are not trying to make everyone poor. Both parties ostensibly want the best for everyone but have different ways of doing it. While Democrats use more government to achieve this goal, Republicans use less.

In the debate over spending cuts, many have claimed that cuts are going to hurt certain groups of people.

This is incorrect on two counts.

First, most of the programs in question involve entitlements (handouts). Per-capita income has never been increased by giving people money because it denigrates responsibility. When people are dependent on the government for money, everyone is equally worse off.

Secondly, spending cuts result in tax cuts. Tax cuts mean consumers have more money to spend. The economy is boosted by spending. More jobs are available when the economy is boosted. Fewer people need assistance when there are more jobs.

In fact, tax cuts helped initiate the evil '80s. Per-capita income increased, unemployment dropped, and the deficit grew because the majority party in Congress during most of those years couldn't settle its appetite for social spending.

Although the Democrats are out of power, the Democrats themselves haven't changed. Charles Schumer, a Democrat from New York, is investigating breakfast-cereal companies because their prices make it hard for families to balance their budgets.

Although he is concerned about families living within their means, Schumer still doesn't think government should have to and voted against the balanced-budget amendment.

The debate over funding public broadcasting is not about the possible disappearance of Big Bird and Barney or the "value" of PBS. If they are that valuable, they can survive in the private market. It is a debate over which ideas the government will subsidize at taxpayers' cost.

While some proponents of PBS contend government shouldn't establish a religion, they approve of government establishment of an ideology.

You can't have it both ways.

Amidst all the cries that there will be mass starvation and death because certain programs are cut, let us never forget that it's not their money. Every tax dollar is taken, not given. While downsizing doesn't solve everything, the past 40 years indicate government is more effective when it is smaller. Hey, change is good.

K-State student belongs on city commission

Feb. 28 was an extraordinary day for K-State.

On that day, Justin Kastner, junior in food science, finished in the primary election for the Manhattan City Commission. A Kastner victory in the April 4 runoff election would provide K-State a strong voice on important issues that affect all students. Some of these issues include:

1. Annexation of K-State

In July of last year, K-State was annexed into the city of Manhattan. As a result, all students pay local state tax on every purchase made on campus. To further strengthen the relationship between the University and the city, a special fund was created in which proceeds from the tax will be spent on projects mutually beneficial to the University and Manhattan. As a member of the University Excellency Advisory Board, Justin recommended to the city commission that University tax dollars be used to help students by constructing bicycle racks and routes, additional lighting near campus and the development of an electronic link between Farrell Library and the Manhattan Public Library.

JEFF PETERSON GUEST COLUMN

With the recent approval of a local half-cent sales-tax increase, the need for a student voice in government is even more apparent. As a city commissioner and eventually as mayor of Manhattan, Justin would play a key role, not only in recommending but in deciding how to spend student-generated money for the benefit of K-State.

2. Personal safety

In the last year, several disturbing assaults have made personal safety an issue of increasing importance to students, faculty and staff. To address that importance, a campus escort patrol has been formed to provide "safety in numbers" for anyone walking across campus. Presently, the service extends only one block off campus. To ensure the safety of the campus community, it will become necessary to extend that service several blocks beyond the campus perimeter.

To accomplish that goal, cooperation between the University and the city is essential. That cooperation can come faster and extend farther if a student who understands the urgency of the issue is a city commissioner.

3. Off-campus housing

With a majority of students living off campus, community housing is an issue of great importance to many K-Staters. Students deserve the opportunity to rent quality apartment and houses at reasonable rates. The best way to ensure that opportunity is to have a student perspective at the table when the city commission considers housing and rental issues.

University annexation, personal safety, off-campus housing and many other important issues can take on a new importance with a quality person like Justin Kastner as a city commissioner. Justin's integrity, work ethic and commitment to K-State and Manhattan make him an ideal city leader. But to maintain his margin of victory, he needs student support. Students can provide that support by voting in the April 4 runoff election.

If you are not registered to vote in Manhattan, you can do so up to March 20 at the Office of Student Activities and Services or the county clerk's office downtown.

Feb. 28 was an extraordinary day for K-State. Let's make April 4 a historic day for K-State by voting Justin Kastner on the Manhattan City Commission.

Jeff Peterson is the K-State student body president and a graduate student in animal sciences.

▶ HAYMAKER HALL

Representatives did well

Dear editor,

In response to Mr. Ruth's letter concerning Haymaker Hall's Hall Governing Board decision to unlock its front doors now, I would like to say "Bravo to the HGB!" I say this because the concerns and the needs of the residents have been addressed. Addressed not only because of convenience but because that is what the residents wanted. In my book, this shows a lot more concern for the residents than making a decision to lock the doors without listening to the opinion of the residents. If you want to talk about mistakes, that was the big mistake that the HGB made last semester.

The representatives of the HGB are supposed to represent the voice of the residents, and if the residents disliked the idea of the doors being locked, then the representatives should act upon that feeling. It isn't as if safety and security aren't still the main concern of the HGB because only the front doors are unlocked while the rest of the doors remained locked. Not to mention that the front doors are unlocked only at a certain time. Safety begins with the individual, and because many of the residents are responsible people, I think their opinions are very valuable when something such as locking the doors or any issue that concerns them is an issue.

The Haymaker Hall HGB has done many good things for Haymaker Hall, the University and the community. I do not think a reevaluation and a changing of the policy that has been disliked by the residents is a mistake. There is one line of a poem that I read from time to time, and the last line goes something like this: "Only a person who takes risks is free." To take this risk and reevaluate this policy of unlocking the front doors is not a mistake. I think it is a great step forward.

▶ TOLERANCE

Reality needed on all sides

Dear editor,

Obfuscation. Everyone is using it. Get it right here, fresh and hot. Deb Taylor's column shows one of the obstacles in toleration. We will never be able to show toleration as long as we misinterpret and twist the "other view" into something aberrant.

This comes natural to Christians who wish to show their "toleration" of the aberrant behavior. However, both sides suffer from the same duplicity. Here I use Deb Taylor's column as an example. One small paragraph is a morsel of the lies, half-truths and abstrusions which make any argument (on either side) ridiculous:

From Taylor's column: "On Feb. 14, White went to visit Robertson to ask him to do two things: 'acknowledge the growing number of hate crimes against Gay and Lesbian Americans' and to 'condemn those hate crimes and the people who incite or commit them.' Robertson's response? He had Rev. White arrested. White is still in jail."

What the hell does this mean? Did Pat suspend habeas corpus himself? Or did he get a judge to do it? Or did White actually commit a crime? No, that couldn't be it, because Taylor would have mentioned it along with the outcome of the trial. We do still get a trial in this country, right? Furthermore, why is he still in jail? Did the evil dictator Pat lock him in the tower? I'm sure (reasonably) that justice does not miscarry this far this often. My point is that Taylor's use of it is purely to darken the issue, which she couldn't have done if she enlightened us with another sentence or two of fact.

"I'm sure (reasonably) that justice does not miscarry this far this often."

KIRBY WILKERSON
Computer and Network Services

Please note my point in all of this is that both sides do this so no discussion is legitimate. So would everyone please quit flapping your gums? It's getting drafty in here. In some enlightened culture, in some enlightened time, we may speak to each other and not double-speak about each other.

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

Soon, because of circumstances beyond my control, some other lackey will take over the page is smat. Sure it won't be the Tomb, but you can't have everything.

Nah, I just thought we'd practice shooting at snow

Wait a minute. Isn't the Cold War over? Haven't Russia and NATO kissed and made up? Aren't they blissfully hitched as "Partners in Peace?"

If you believe that, I've got a little plot of beachfront property in western Kansas to sell you.

So what are roughly 22,000 troops, 130 warships and 350 warplanes from NATO doing in Norway to practice defending its vast oil fields from what sounds like Russia?

"No, no, no. It could be any country, anywhere," said Brynulf Freeberg, a spokesman for "Strong Resolve," the biggest exercise by the 16-member North Atlantic Treaty Organization since the Berlin Wall fell in 1989.

"It's just that Norway has good winter conditions, shallow waters and challenging topography for pilots," he said.

Not that they, like, happen to be the only NATO country that shares a border with Russia and is Western Europe's largest oil exporter.

So much for the big, happy family concept.

New York City police despise nekkidness

The show "NYPD Nude" won't go into reruns.

The policewoman who posed for Playboy wearing little but her handcuffs and nightstick has been fired.

Carol Shaya, 25, who made $100,000 posing in and out of uniform, was dismissed Tuesday by Police Commissioner William Bratton. He overruled a recommendation following a January departmental trial that Shaya lose one month's pay and spend a year on probation.

"The reputation of the New York Police Department is not for sale, and there's no room in our organization for anyone who would attempt to do so," Bratton said.

"We believe looking at pictures of beautiful women nude is a good thing, and positive," Playboy spokeswoman Diane Stefani said. "But many of us are frightened by the human body unclothed."

Especially New York City police officers.

'So, Jeffy, the ol' Gillooly name not good enough?'

Mayor Jeff Stone didn't like it. Neither did the Jeff Stone who works for NASA's Mission Control.

Even the guy who played Jeff Stone on TV's "Donna Reed Show" showed up Tuesday to fight Nancy Kerrigan lead-pipe conspirator Jeff Gillooly's attempt to change his name to Jeff Stone.

In the end, after a 10-minute hearing, Portland, Ore. District Judge Dale Koch decided the ex-husband of figure skater Tonya Harding could become Jeff Stone.

"Another sorry saga in the history of American jurisprudence," said Paul Petersen, who played Donna Reed's son Jeff Stone on the TV series that ran from 1958 to 1966 and remains in syndication. "We have lost our common sense. I feel for the country."

Mayor Jeff Stone of Temecula, Calif., argued that his hard-earned good name would be sullied if he were forced to share it with Gillooly.

Petersen accused Gillooly of making fun of the wholesome image of the "Donna Reed Show."

Jeff Stone, who works for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Houston, spread the word via the Internet that he didn't want to share his name with Gillooly. Nine other Jeff Stones vowed to join him, and one from Roswell, Ga., joined the court battle.

This would have never happened if he would have just changed his name to Joey Lawrence, of TV's "Blossom."

"Whoa!"

Where, oh where, is our Smatterer going?

Yes. It's true. Andrew Tomb, Smatterer and coffee lover, is going on an extended sabbatical to the Galapagos Islands to partake in the semi-centennial "Running of the Tortoises."

While he's gone (a tortoise run can take awhile), I, Smatterer X, will try to fill his shoes, which will take quite a bit of fillin'.

"No, really." "Whoa!" "Thank you. Thank you very much."

Smatterer X

Smatterings were not sponsored by Khushchev, Khrushchev or Krushchev or by the hyperactive, caffeine-addicted, no-sleepin' yahoos who can't spell.

THE ART OF TATTOOING & UNTATTOOING

Lasers, added designs conceal body art with minimal pain

Iguanas are wrapping around ankles. Yin Yangs are showing up on stomachs, and cartoon character are gracing the biceps of bodybuilders.

Tattoos have been around for more than 5,000 years, and so has the desire to remove them.

Once the needles pierce the skin and the ink is injected, the image remains for life.

The permanency of the body art may be of no concern to some people, but others go through extensive procedures to get their tattoos removed.

Sharon Blue of the Aesthetic Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery Center in Wichita said tattoos can be removed through three procedures.

"Laser is the most effective," Blue said. "The other options are to cut it out or sand it down, but both of those cause scarring. With lasers, you'll only be able to see a slight resemblance of the tattoo."

Daniel Wathnen, owner of Legacy Tattoos of Topeka, a studio with 30,000 designs, said laser treatment is effective but has some drawbacks.

"None of them are perfect," Wathnen said. "I have heard that the lasers destroy the melanin in the skin so the area doesn't tan. The vast majority is done with dermabrasion, which is when they literally sand the tattoo off because laser surgery is extremely expensive."

Blue said the cost and number of the removal treatments depend on the size, color, location and age of the tattoo. On average, professional tattoos require five to six treatments, and amateur tattoos take three to four treatments.

"The first treatment is $300-500, and it lasts no more than 15-20 minutes," Blue said. "The number of treatments depends on how big it is and where it's at."

Laser treatment causes 95 percent of the tattoo to fade, but it depends on the type and depth of the ink in the skin. More than 100 tattoo inks are used worldwide, and none of them are regulated by the Federal Drug Administration, making it difficult for physicians to predict the success rate of the laser treatments.

The Medlite laser, which is used at the Wichita Aesthetic Plastic Surgery Center, removes the tattoo with the energy of light and uses short, intense pulses for maximum ink destruction.

Because of the pain involved and the cost of laser surgery, Wathen said most of his customers choose to get another tattoo on top of the original design.

"I do a lot of name cover-ups," Wathen said. "I can't tell you how many names I've had to cover up when a relationship goes south."

Wathen said he talks to the customers before the procedure and tattoos names with a special kind of lettering so they are easy to cover- up.

"If you do a coverup and people know it's a coverup, then it's not a cover-up," Wathen said. "I think getting rid of the old design is a cop-out."

Although some people choose to get cover-up tattoos, others opt for a laser treatment. Blue said most of the customers don't ask for anesthesia to numb the pain.

"I've never had a tattoo removed myself, but as far as the patient, there's virtually no discomfort," Blue said. "It feels like a rubber-band snap."

Wathen said the majority of his customers handle the pain of getting a tattoo well, but removing one is so painful that most of them decide to keep them.

K-STATE STUDENTS who have tattoos said the pain involved in getting one ranged from feeling like a scouring pad to a razor blade cutting into the skin.

Chris Clements, a junior in architecture, said he has a 2-1/2-inch tattoo of the Pearl Jam stick figure with the word "Black" printed under it on his pelvis so no one can see it.

Clements said the procedure lasted 45 minutes and felt like a stick pin being stuck into his skin.

"When they draw the blood, it hurts," Clements said. "After 10 or 15 minutes, it went numb, and I would get a jilt of pain every now and then."

Clements said the pain involved in getting a tattoo was bearable, but removing it would be a completely different story.

"Right now, I really do like it, but I've watched programs on TV about people who get them removed because they grow up and mature and they think it's stupid," Clements said. "I got it where no one can see it because I heard that the pain of getting it removed is 10 times worse than getting one."

Clements said at Fine Line Tattoo in Topeka, the customer is first asked to select one of the hundreds of designs that are plastered on the walls of the business. Then they are required to sign a contract that assures that the customer is sober, aware of the process and won't sue if they're not satisfied.

Christine Courtney, sophomore in interior architecture, has a black panther tattooed on her abdomen. She said when she signed the contract, she felt like there was no turning back.

"The whole way there, I was nervous about the pain and that it was permanent," Courtney said. "Signing it was like finalizing getting it."

Courtney said she brought an original design of a panther into Fine Line Tattoo because she said it represented her personality.

"I think people should get something that epitomizes them and they enjoy having on their body because it will be there for the rest of their life," Courtney said.

▶ ASTROLOGY FORECAST

CHRISTY CALLOWAY

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) This week is a time to reflect on the past. From this week until early April, you will be able to see how quickly you've matured in the past year. Romance is on the edge, so just be patient. For the weekend: Slow down, chill out and be relaxed.

ARIES (March 21-April 20) You have been wanting time alone lately, and that's OK. By mid-week, a romantic partner will have you feeling like the extrovert you usually are. Finances need attention. Be willing to ask for advice in that area. For the weekend: Collect your thoughts.

TAURUS (April 21-May 21) Long-term educational and career matters are prime this week. Use past experience to help guide you with a romantic squabble. Business is going well as usual — just don't let your stubborn nature cause too many problems in the office. For the weekend: Be understanding.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21) This week has you wondering where the day will take you. Taking risks this week is a big no-no, so leave that until next week. Venus will have you feeling like a nervous wreck, so think twice before making any quick decisions. For the weekend: Take the backseat approach.

CANCER (June 22-July 23) It's time for you to take the lead when dealing with relationships of any type. Family, friends and lovers will be grateful. Start thinking of ways to get finances back together. For the weekend: Catch up on gossip with friends.

LEO (July 24-Aug. 23) This is a good time to follow your heart. Venus, the planet of love and understanding, has just entered your house of marriage. Be prepared for romantic inclinations you might not be ready for. Venus will also add a calming sensation to your life this week. Be patient with friends and you'll gain great respect. For the weekend: Follow the excitement and be worry-free.

VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 23) Last week, you felt as though the world were on your shoulders. That's because it was. Virgo is known for being very headstrong. Take time out for yourself, but remain loyal to your friends. Romantic and career surprises are on the way as Neptune moves closer to your sign. For the weekend: Hang out with an adventurous friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 24-Oct. 23) This week, the key word is responsibility. The good news is you will be free of everyone's problems. The bad news is you will have a great opportunity to deal with your own. This is an excellent time for you to decide if your current career choice is one that truly makes you happy. If it isn't, move on to something better. For the weekend: Make a getaway.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Finances need to be attended to. You'll have everything cleared up by mid-week. A female relative needs T.L.C. Be there for her. Romance may seem to have hit a drought — just sit tight; patience is the virtue. For the weekend: Treat someone else.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) The beginning of this week may seem filled with confusion, but it will clear up by Wednesday. This is an excellent time to bring forth new ideas. You'll be amazed how well you'll be received this week. For the weekend: A night on the town will do you good.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The past is over, so stop dwelling on it. Venus moves past Uranus, causing surprises everywhere. Be ambitious about future career moves, and remain logical. Your work load will begin to slow down by Thursday, but until then, keep the pace. For the weekend: Make yourself available.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Spend the week getting organized. It will greatly benefit you later. With Venus directly in your sign, you are feeling very romantic. Go with it. Family is feeling neglected, so make that monthly call this week. For the weekend: Leave your calendar open for just about anything.

K-State, KU to square off for third time

"They are so deep. I really do think that they can win a national championship because I don't see any weakness."

TOM ASBURY
K-State men's basketball coach

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State won't get to go play in a postseason tournament this season, unless Wildcat coach Tom Asbury can lead K-State to the Big Eight Tournament title and one of the biggest upsets in tournament history.

"This is our postseason right here," Asbury said.

He also knows that his team has to face one of the country's best teams, in No. 2-ranked and No. 1-seeded Kansas, in the first round at noon today.

However, history isn't on K-State's side.

In Big Eight Tournament history, the No. 8 seed has only defeated the No. 1 seed once.

That feat occurred when Colorado upset No. 1-seeded Missouri.

"They are a terrific team," Asbury said of KU. "They are so deep. I really do think that they can win the national championship because I don't see any weakness."

KU comes into the tournament on the strength of capturing the Big Eight's regular-season title with a victory over No. 2 seed Oklahoma State.

However, KU coach Roy Williams said he knows anything can happen in the Big Eight Tournament.

"I don't get too caught up in that one-versus-eight thing," Williams said. "I'm not too big of a fan of a tournament. Don't get me wrong; we're still going to try and win the doggone thing."

While the Jayhawks enter the game flying high, K-State comes into the game limping.

Two of the Cats' starters are suffering from injuries and sickness.

Demond Davis has been hobbled for the last half of the season with a leg injury, and Asbury said he still is questionable for today's game.

Point guard Elliot Hatcher was suffering from a fever earlier this week.

"I hope that he's OK," Asbury said. "We need him to be successful."

Even with Hatcher and Davis hurting, the Cats do have some firepower left in forward Belvis Noland.

After starting the season as a reserve, Noland jumped into the starting lineup when Davis went down with his injury.

It didn't take him long to produce.

Against Nebraska, Noland scored a career-high 31 points, and earlier this season at KU, he scored 23 points.

"I like to play a motion-type offense," Noland said. "It allows you to get open and come off screens."

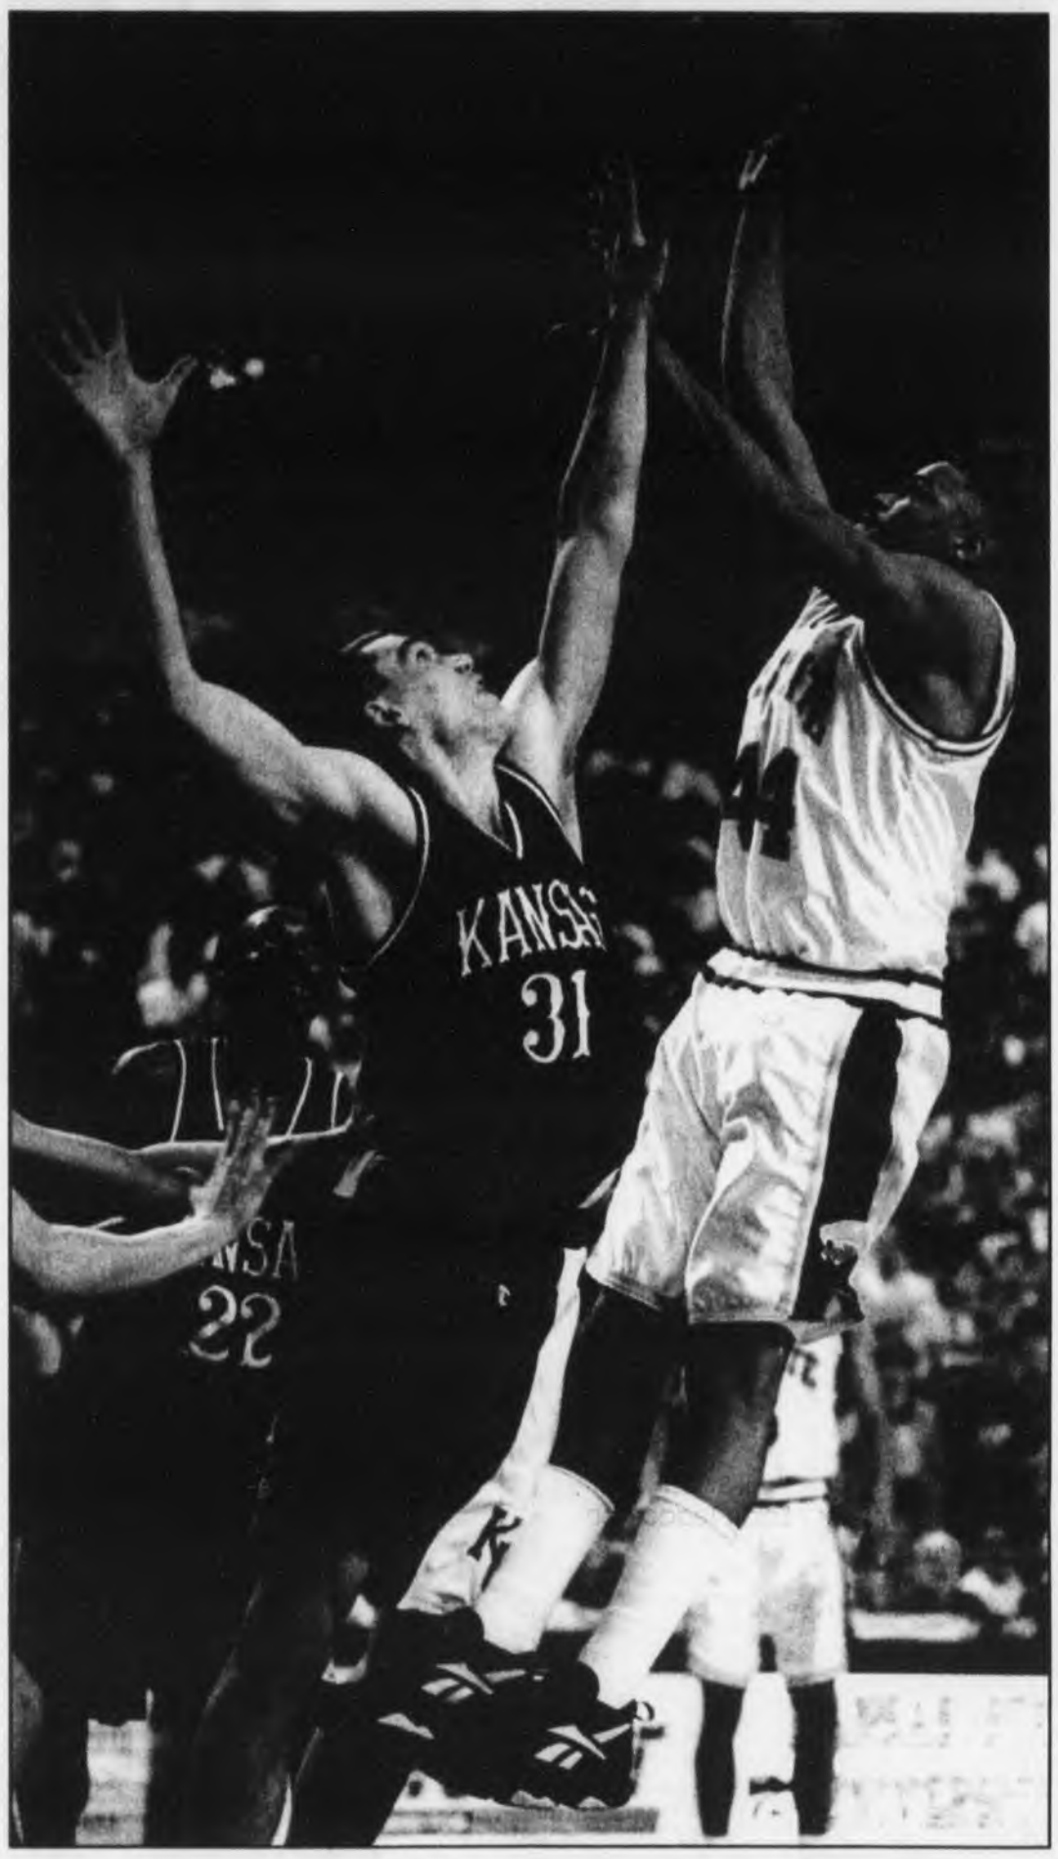
Unlike K-State, which has only one really consistent shooter, Kansas' entire starting squad has the ability to catch fire from the field.

Just check the stats.

KU has both the Big Eight's Newcomer of the Year and the Freshman of the Year.

Jerod Haase, who won the newcomer award, is the Hawks' leading scorer with an average of 15 points per game.

Then there is freshman sensation Raef LaFrentz.



During the course of the season, LaFrentz established himself as one of the conference's most consistent scoring threats inside.

"They pose much bigger problems with their height," Asbury said. "You can play at a high level of intensity and play pretty well, but you can can't defend against their size.

"There is so much competition for playing time there. Basically, if you don't produce, then they will find someone that will."

All of these things don't paint a pretty picture for the Cats, but Asbury said he thinks K-State can win.

"Maybe, we hope to grind out a win."

K-State's Tyrone Davis attempts to shoot over a Kansas defender during the Cats' loss to the Jayhawks at Bramlage Coliseum on Feb. 18.

Seven Cats to compete in Indianapolis

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Seven athletes will represent K-State in Indianapolis this weekend.

Gwen Wentland, Wanita Dykstra, Jill Montgomery, Belinda Hope, Karissa Owens, Ed Broxterman and Steve Duren will compete at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships today and Saturday at the Hoosier Dome.

"I think everyone going has a good chance to place well," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Wentland, Dykstra and Montgomery all qualified in the high jump.

Wentland cleared 6 feet 5 inches Saturday at the U.S. Indoor National Championships at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta.

"I think it's a big factor not to have to compete in so many events before the high jump," Wentland said.

"I think my legs will be fresher."

Dykstra has a season best of 6'0" and finished second to Wentland at the Big Eight Indoor Championships Feb. 25.

Montgomery qualified for the meet with a leap of 5'10-3/4" during the pentathlon at the Big Eight Championships.

"Arizona had three jumpers qualify for nationals in the early '80s," Rovelto said. "Since then, I can think of a couple of teams who qualified two, but none who have qualified three."

"I think it's a big factor not to have to compete in so many events before the high jump."

GWEN WENTLAND
K-State high jumper

Another high jumper on a roll is Broxterman.

He took home the Big Eight title with a leap of 7'4-1/2" Feb. 24. It was his third consecutive week to clear a bar higher than 7'3".

"Ed is jumping really well," Rovelto said. "Aside from Malesev, no one has jumped at that height as many times as he has."

Broxterman is the only person to defeat Nebraska's Petar Malesev this season. Malesev's best clearance this season is 7'5-1/2".

"I went back to the basics this year," Broxterman said after the Big Eight Championships. "Last season, I was playing around with my technique, and I just wasn't jumping high."

Broxterman's lone teammate in the meet, Duren, leaped 25'3-1/4" in the long jump Jan. 14 but has only competed three times this season because of injuries.

Owens was an automatic qualifier in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.85. She posted that time in finals of the Big Eight Championships and won the race.

Additionally, Owens captured her second gold medal at the meet by winning the 200 meters.

Hope won the 400 meters with a time of 54.02. She has not lost a race at 400 meters this season.

Rovelto said all of the athletes who qualified for the national meet have shown a great work ethic and steady improvement throughout the season.

"I think that's what sets them apart from the people who are staying home during this meet," Rovelto said. "That's what is so interesting about track. You can't control what other people are doing. All you can do is work hard and improve yourself."

Chiefs sign free-agent lineman away from the New York Jets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jeff Criswell wouldn't mind in the least blocking for Joe Montana. Playing for a winning team, however, was more of an inducement to join the Kansas City Chiefs.

Criswell, an offensive tackle who had been with the New York Jets since 1988 before becoming a free agent, signed a four-year contract Thursday with Kansas City.

Criswell, who acted as his own agent, described his contract as "bigger than a bread basket, smaller than a refrigerator." He reportedly had a three-year, $6-million offer from the expansion Jacksonville Jaguars.

"Jeff will be our starting right tackle," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer said.

"One of the things that made Jeff so attractive to us is his ability to play anywhere on the line but center.

"We know that in the event it becomes necessary to get somebody into the lineup for medical problems, Jeff Criswell's performance as a left tackle against the best people in this league is evident. He is a winning performer at either tackle."

Criswell said one reason for coming to Kansas City was stability. Although the Chiefs went through a shake-up among assistant coaches after last year's 9-7 season, Schottenheimer has been their only head coach since Carl Peterson became president and general manager in 1989.

Rich Kotite, fired last year by the Philadelphia Eagles, is taking over this season with the Jets.

"I've been through four coaches and three different systems," Criswell said.

"This is my ninth year in the league. I think I deserve to have a chance to win. I think this provides the best opportunity for me."

He indicated he might have been willing to stay in New York.

"It's an interesting thing that I wasn't offered anything prior to February 17," he said.

"I was told to go out in the market and see what my market value would be. I think it shocked them that a few teams came in with a high number."

Vienna orchestra begins U.S. tour at McCain

COBY HESS
Collegian

The Vienna Academy Orchestra is making its North American debut at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

The program, directed by Martin Haselböck, concentrates on works of the late Baroque and Viennese classical periods.

Haselböck said all 18 players will be playing on reconstructed instruments from the Bach era.

"We will also perform Telemann's concerto for three trumpets, which is exciting for us," Haselböck said.

Kerby Lovallo, agent for the Vienna Academy, said it is the only period instrument group to tour from Vienna, Austria.

"The Telemann concerto performance is real bright, very festive and a lot of fun, especially with three trumpets, which is rare for a chamber orchestra," Lovallo said.

Lovallo said Haselböck is one of the leading organists of his generation and has given recitals around the world, including the United States.

Haselböck said the orchestra is preparing for its North American premier at Vienna's historic Musikverein, which is where it presents a regular concert series.

"The orchestra has made about 30 recordings, which are available in the U.S. on the Swiss label Novalis," Lovallo said.

Lovallo said the Vienna Academy will perform in cities across the United States on its tour.

"On their 11-concert tour of the U.S., they will also be performing in Cleveland, New York, Milwaukee and other college towns," Lovallo said.

Haselböck said people were amazed to hear the Vienna Academy was going to start its American tour in Kansas.

"Everybody was surprised to hear we were playing in Manhattan other than the one in New York. This is my third time performing in Kansas, and I'm really looking forward to starting our series there," Haselböck said.

Haselböck said the reconstructed instruments along with the human touch portray the Baroque style.

"The pieces we will be performing were written to entertain the kings with flamboyancy and warmth," he said.

House committee considers making lottery permanent

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas Lottery opponents told lawmakers Thursday that state-sponsored gambling is undermining the Kansas economy.

Dave Schneider, president of Kansans for Life at its Best, told the House Federal and State Affairs Committee that the money people spend on lottery tickets is money they could spend at stores.

The committee is considering a bill that would make the Kansas Lottery a permanent state agency.

Ninety percent of the money raised by the lottery goes to economic development projects, and 10 percent goes to prison facilities.

"The ends don't justify the means," Schneider said. "What effect does it have on the state economy to promote the idea of get-rich-quick?"

He said government promotion of gambling weakens the values that are necessary for a healthy and stable economy.

The Senate passed a measure that would make the Kansas Lottery a permanent state agency.

Currently, the lottery must be renewed by the Legislature every two or three years. If the Legislature does not renew the lottery this session or next year, it will shut down on July 1, 1996.

Glenn Thompson of Wichita, chairman of Stand Up For Kansas, said lawmakers would not be continuing the lottery in its present form by voting for the bill. They will vote either to expand gambling under the umbrella of the lottery or to halt its expansion, he said.

He said there were two reasons why continuing the lottery would guarantee an expansion of gambling in Kansas:

- The Indian Gaming Regulatory Act requires states that allow gambling to negotiate compacts with tribes so they can offer casino gambling on reservations.
- The Kansas Supreme Court ruled that a lottery is gambling, and the 1986 constitutional amendment that authorized the lottery also permits the state to operate casinos.

"As a result of these two legal events, gambling proponents are flooding the Legislature with proposals for expanding gambling far beyond our wildest nightmares," Thompson said. "The only way to stop the expansion of gambling in our state is to let the lottery die."

Others said the state should impose a higher sales tax to compensate for the revenue the state would lose by discontinuing the lottery. The state's sales tax is now 4.9 percent.

Frances Wood of Topeka, a lobbyist for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Kansas, suggested a sales-tax increase of 0.2 percent, or 1 cent for a $5 purchase.

That would raise the $48 million the state now receives from the Kansas Lottery, she said.

Doris J. Wulfkuhle of Berryton said she would rather pay a half-percent sales tax than see Kansas lead people to gambling addictions.

"Let's make the advertisements truthful," she said. "Millions do not win millions."

American opera depicts urban life

PAGE GETZ
Collegian

KSU Opera Theatre presented the first night of three performances of Elmer Rice's Pulitzer prize-winning "Street Scene" opera at McCain Auditorium Thursday.

As one of the truly scarce American operas, the play has an untraditional and unpredictable appeal to it that reflects the contributions of Langston Hughes' lyrics and Kurt Weill's music.

"A lot of the music is not operatic. The styles run from borderline Broadway to dramatic opera," said Travis McDiffett, who plays the part of Henry Davis.

"It's a very different style of opera because it is so close to a music theater situation. But it incorporates both, so the music appeals to a lot of different styles," he said.

Aaron Olewnik, who plays both Dr. Wilson and Officer Murphy, said he agreed.

"In most music theater productions, the plot of a play will stop in the scene for the music, whereas in this play the musical plot doesn't stop, and there is a transition between the plot in the music."

Set in 1939, the show was first presented in New York in 1929.

Basically, the story is about the class struggles of conflicting cultural shifts in the United States' heavily populated urban areas, where the industrialization of the inner cities hadn't quite yet suffocated the romanticism and innocence of the timeless universality of love, childbirth, graduation, adultery and, ultimately, murder.

The stage and costumes are most noticeable first with an authentic and charmingly colorful classic, inner-city New York feel of that time period with a sort of naive and cheesy innocence that is strung through the scenes.

This opera's charm is best depicted in the 1930s bubble-gum version of a drunken one-night stand called "Moon Faced, Starry Eyed."

In the scene, Dick McGann, played by Stephen Seely, and Mae Jones, played by Jennifer Hall, liven the stage with a jitterbug-swing thing and a tipsy fling.

The direction of the play by Kate Anderson, director of theater, is notable for the many connected and well-coordinated transitions from one interaction of characters to a totally different scenario.

Seventeen members of the cast are in the K-State choir, including Anne Walker, whose character, Anna Maurrant, finds an unkind fate in the story.

"It's really nice for people to see that opera doesn't have to be the typical Italian scene," she said, "that there can be both acting and dialogue integrated in the music, and it's effective."

Other noticeable performances were in the dynamics between the characters Emma Jones, played by a turn-of-the-century version of Peg Bundy, Heather Schoenberger; and her son Vincent, played by Richard Allen, who was a comic subtlety throughout the play.

Willie Maurrant, played by Brian Phillips, was another smaller role that demanded the spotlight.

Although at times the orchestra overpowered a few solos, the play was definitely worth checking out.

"Street Scene" is not a typical definable opera.

It has the simple love-story equation with the lost, young lovers that borderlines a "West-Side Story" feel at times.

However, the irony of a light and animated continuous gossip circulation in a run-down neighborhood gives the plot a uniqueness and charm.

K-State clinic able to provide specialized care

SARA SMITH
Collegian

Advanced equipment and specialized care are the reasons Manhattan veterinarians send some of their hardest cases to the veterinary clinic housed in the Veterinary Medical Sciences Building.

Deb Mangelsdorf, doctor of veterinary medicine, said she refers many of her ophthalmology cases to the Kansas State University Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital, but she only sends about one case a month to K-State on the average.

"Often, what we do is support the wishes of the client," she said.

Mangelsdorf, a small-animal practitioner at the Konza Veterinary Clinic, said most veterinarians are general practitioners, but a lot of the doctors at the K-State clinic are board-certified as specialists in one particular area.

Ophthalmology is just one of the reasons local veterinarians would send a case to the vet clinic.

"Occasionally, I will send internal-medicine cases requiring extensive lab work," Mangelsdorf said.

Expertise in anesthesiology was the reason Richard Lewis, doctor of veterinary medicine, sent one dog to the K-State clinic. The dog had a ruptured cruciate ligament in its knee.

Lewis, who practices small-animal and equine medicine at Eastside Veterinary Clinic, said he would ordinarily fix this injury himself, but this dog had other problems that made it a special case.

"He had some heart problems. He had Addison's disease, which made him a high-risk anesthesia patient," he said.

Lewis said he also sent another case because of the ophthalmologic surgery the K-State clinic can do. One of his patients was a very young cataract case that proved to be difficult.

"They've been having a nightmare with it, too," Lewis said.

Lewis said he considered himself lucky to have the school, with its capacity for specialized care, in the same city. He refers patients for difficult diagnosis or high-risk surgery.

"We're lucky because most communities don't have this resource," he said.

Most veterinarians don't have such close access to advanced lab equipment either, Lewis said.

"I would have to have more lab equipment, and it would take longer to get results," he said.

Lab work is just one of the ways local veterinarians use the K-State vet clinic.

Lewis said he sends hip replacements to the K-State clinic and sends a lot of orthopedic cases because of the orthopedic equip-

Love people, not sexual orientation

Dear Cassie,

A number of the girls on my floor are exhibiting unusual behavior. They have rejected straight men in favor of gay men. Most avoid the company of heterosexual men, and several have become openly hostile toward them. Some of the girls even look to these gay men as sexual partners.

My problem is that the peer pressure is beginning to wear me down, and I am beginning to doubt my own values and beliefs.

Signed, Am I Normal or Are They?

Dear Normal,

I was unsure what you were really asking me. Should you fall in love with gay men? Should you support your floormates' objectives to have them as sexual partners?

I say fall in love with who you fall in love with — the person, not his or her sexual orientation.

Radim Zenkl, a mandolin soloist from Czechoslovakia, will perform at 8 tonight at the Espresso Royal Caffe in Aggieville.

Zenkl is not a stranger to the area. In 1992, he won the U.S. National Mandolin championship at The Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield.

"It's the most prestigious competition in the country, I think," Zenkl said. "I love the Winfield festival. Since I went the first time, I've had to go back every year."

David Kamerer, professor of journalism and mass communications, is one of the people responsible for bringing Zenkl to Manhattan.

"The goal is for there to be more events like this in town," Kamerer said. "Radim played at Winfield and really wowed the crowd, so we decided to bring him to Manhattan."

The festival at Winfield has been an ongoing tradition for 24 years, and some Manhattan area residents and Winfield festival regulars said they are excited about tonight's performance.

Charlie Griffin of the K-State extensions service is a fellow mandolin player and said he is thrilled about Zenkl's performance.

"Radim is quite the master on his instrument," Griffin, festival regular, said.

Griffin said he would like to see more performers like Zenkl perform in the area.

"There's a lot of potential for performers like Radim in Manhattan and smaller communities," Griffin said.

Griffin said he's surprised that bluegrass has gained popularity worldwide.

"It's interesting to see the interest in bluegrass music in places like Czechoslovakia," Griffin said.

Zenkl's interests don't include just performing. He also teaches lessons on the mando-family instruments.

"I teach lessons to unlimited ages," he said. "The oldest is 80, and the youngest is 6."

To hear Zenkl before his performance tonight, check the E-Collegian for sound bites of his latest compact disc, "Czech it Out."

Hitchhike, bike to cut travel costs

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Traveling around Europe on 84 cents a day may seem like an impossibility, but for a known traveler and author, hitchhiking and cutting corners made it a reality.

Gil White gave a informational travel speech to a young crowd of about 100 people at the K-State Union Forum Hall Thursday.

White said traveling provided a great education and put life in a different perspective for him.

"I didn't have to pick through garage cans or stand in soup lines," White said. "But I also don't expect you to spend only 84 cents a day when you travel Europe. Some of my ideas are strange and unusual."

White said there are three costs associated with traveling including transportation, accommodation and food.

He said the way to reduce transportation costs was to hitchhike and get rides.

"You need to trust people," he said. "The best way to get rides is to look clean-cut. Most rides turn into conversation lessons. People realize students need rides. It is acceptable."

White said the key to being successful at getting rides in Europe is to get to the gas stations.

He also said you should carry cardboard and markers to write your destinations on.

"Getting rides in cities is a waste of time," he said.

White said cycling is another option.

"You can rent bikes at train stations and then return them at other train stations in other countries," he said. "Renting cars is expensive."

The second area of costs is accommodation. He said he spent $3 in 40 days for accommodation.

He said universities and youth hostels are inexpensive.

"Universities are a good place to find a bed or a floor space. I really recommend them," he said. "Youth hotels are a great places to meet student travelers that have possibly been from where you are going."

He also said he had asked to stay in jails before and was allowed to stay in them.

The third area White talked about was food.

"Always carry food in your backpack. European bread is the best," he said. "The best place to buy food is at farmers' markets.

White said economizing a trip can expand the options for visiting other countries.

"If you keep a budget, you can see six or seven more countries than you planned," he said.

White said he didn't suggest staying with a travel group all the time.

Tractors, tools sent to Africa

SHELLY FOGEL
Collegian

A gift from the heartland is making a difference in Africa.

Tractors for Our Daily Bread, a program started in Manhattan, accepts donated tractors and farm implements to repair and send to Nigerian farmers.

"One Kansas farmer raises enough food for 96 people. The Nigerian farmer raises barely enough food for his family, with hardly enough to buy anything extra," said Howard Fick, attorney and volunteer for the program.

Fick said the scarcity of food in Africa is unfortunate because the country has tillable land that is not being planted.

The program began four years ago when Chris Akhimien realized Africans were not using the correct tools in agriculture. Born in Nigeria and educated in England, Akhimien came to the United States to launch Tractors for Our Daily Bread.

The program members took their cause public by asking for Ford 8-N tractors and farm implements. The implements, such as discs, cultivators and planters, are used to till, prepare and plant the land.

The small tractor manufactured by Ford Motor Company in 1946 was the ideal machinery for the project, Fick said.

"It was a tool used around the homestead, not large fields," he said. "For the small garden farmer, it is invaluable."

Most of the tractors and implements are in need of repair. They are stored at the Rotaract Club, a junior rotary club in Manhattan, and K-State helps with the repair of the implements.

"The Rotaract Club members go out and scrape, paint and provide a lot of the labor for the tractor implements," Pat Wilburn, Rotaract president, said.

Area vocational-technical schools also help repair the tractors.

Farm-machinery dealers sell parts for the equipment at cost. After the tractors are in good repair, truck drivers haul them to a port in Houston. From the port, the tractors are shipped to Nigeria.

"One trucker got paid, but other than that, everything has been donated," Fick said.

Since the program began, more than 30 tractors have been donated. Fick said tractors have come from people in Kansas, Wyoming, Washington and Nebraska.

"There was a church in Washington state that got a tractor and did a publicity stunt by driving the tractor on the highway to Manhattan," Fick said.

That tractor went to the right place in Nigeria, but some of the tractors did not. A national strike in Nigeria caused the first shipment of tractors to be sent to the wrong place in the country, Fick said.

"Because of political problems, our people could not get parts or gasoline to the tractors," he said.

He said unless the political strife is worked out, no more tractors will be sent to Nigeria, but they will be sent to other regions in Africa.

"We want to put the tractor in the hands of a farmer so they can raise the most food," Fick said.

The program is designed to ensure that African farmers know how to operate and maintain the equipment.

A retired mechanic from Washington traveled to Nigeria with the first shipment of tractors to teach the farmers about tractor safety and machinery upkeep.

Fick said the tractors are loaned to the farmers for one year's use. If the tractors are maintained properly, the farmer can continue to use the equipment.

The goal of this project is to help mechanize farming in Africa, Fick said.

"We do not have to do this ourselves. We just have to make the producers realize we can succeed with mechanization. We need to show them the equipment is there and that we can do it," he said.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Museum's design fails to impress students, faculty

Gary Coates, professor of architecture, taught a design studio during the 1993 spring semester to investigate the art museum design. Students in the studio met with Andersson.

Andersson listened to the students' suggestions and was cooperative, Oyler said.

"The issue that certain people do not like the museum design is an old issue," Nelson Britt, director of the museum, said.

"I do not understand why the issue of design is being brought up now, after construction has begun.

"The overall design is an excellent concept," he said.

Jessica Reichman, curator of the museum, agrees with Britt about the museum design.

"The design is outstanding. The building will make a statement on campus," Reichman said.

According to an article by David Meis, K-State alumnus, in Archnews, the museum archways are tight and narrow, similar to architecture found in Italy.

"The pathways on campus are wide open spaces, not tight like those found in Italy," Meis wrote. "After all, the art museum is to be built in Kansas, not Italy."

Oyler said students were told the archway would serve as the gateway to campus.

The campus already has an entrance, Higinbotham Gate, in the southeast corner of campus, Oyler said.

"When people go through the Higinbotham Gate, they go just a little further and have to walk through yet another gate. It is silly," Ray Streeter, associate professor in architecture, said.

The two museum entrances signify an open-arms approach, both to the community and the campus, Reichman said.

Oyler said he thinks the building will not stand out against the other structures on campus.

"It will blend so well that in a few years people will not know when it was built. It does not look like a '90s building. It does not say 1996," Oyler said.

Streeter said the traditional style of the campus buildings is to form a quadrangular shape. The museum does not follow this traditional pattern.

"I am less than impressed with the building. It is less than I had hoped for for this University and campus," Streeter said.

Any work of art, whether architecture or sculpture, is open for public dialogue and debate, Britt said.

Senate discusses garage resolution would prefer to increase the price of parking permits because faculty and staff also pay for those.

Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, said many students had called him to express their opinion against this fee increase. He said he would vote against the bill to protect the interest of the students.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, sponsored an amendment that would recommend leaving the metered-lot fee at its current level of 25 cents per hour.

This amendment failed 16-35-3.

Senate passed the motion to recommend 50 cent-per-hour fees in metered lots by a vote of 36-15. The increase would exclude metered stalls at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

Students interested in voicing their opinions about fees in metered lots before the final decision should attend the parking council meeting at 3 p.m. today in Union 207.

Senators also heard first readings on a resolution that recommends building a parking garage. The bill recommends that students, faculty and staff have input into the location of the structure.

Michele Meier, business senator, said students expressed similar opinions during parking forums this week.

"A majority of students that I talked to favored the idea of a parking garage, but they didn't want to build it in Memorial Stadium," she said during committee reports.

Senate will vote on this resolution at Thursday's meeting.

A resolution opposing a fee for international students also came up for first readings. The administration is proposing a $15 fee for international students to pay for an additional full-time secretary in the International Student Office.

Senate also considered first readings of three allocations bills.

Chimes would receive $192 for restoration and display of the Bluemont Bell. Taiwanese Student Association is requesting $434 for Taiwanese Cultural week. Newman Club would receive $603 to fund a community service project in Kentucky.

The resolution opposing an international student fee and the three allocations bills will be voted on Thursday.

Vet refers eye surgeries to K-State clinic nary medicine, said she also sends a lot of orthopedic surgeries to K-State.

"I refer almost all of my orthopedic cases to K-State because they have bone-plating and bone-pinning equipment I don't have," said Kalmar, a small-animal practitioner at Little Apple Veterinary Clinic.

Kalmar said she sends eye surgeries to the K-State clinic because they have an operating microscope, which she can't afford.

"The cost to my clients would make it not feasible," she said.

Although Kalmar said she sends maybe one case a month to K-State, she said she doesn't send them anything she could do herself at her own clinic.

"If it's something I can do just as well, then I'll do it here," she said.

Kalmar said she only sent cases that required a piece of equipment or special skill she didn't have. Endoscopy is one of the things she sends patients to K-State for.

The vet clinic also receives patients who require diagnosis for neurological or dermatological problems, said Michael Lorenz, professor of small-animal medicine and section head for small-animal medicine at the clinic.

Lorenz said the clinic has many referrals for diagnostic work.

"K-State has the only state-operated animal diagnostic lab in Kansas," Lorenz said.

Perry: Casualties will result if U.S. intervenes in Bosnia tute issues of military matters," Sanders said.

"If we have an economic policy that integrates the U.S. economy with international economy and important industries abroad, then, as in Mexico, we must be prepared to economically sustain or militarily intervene in foreign countries."

Bill Byrns, commander of Air Force ROTC at K-State, said he appreciated Perry's speech.

"I think he did a great job by presenting all the facts about Bosnia and showing us that we have a difficult decision to make," Byrns said.

▶ ASIAN CULTURAL NIGHT

Asian Americans enjoy an evening of food and fun

STEPHANIE STEENBOCK
Collegian

Asian American students, faculty, alumni and guests gathered Saturday night for an evening of food, fun and friendship.

Asian cultural night was sponsored by the Asian American Students for Cultural Awareness as a part of Asian American Awareness Month.

Asian-American Awareness Month

The evening began with a potluck dinner, which was a potpourri of Asian and American dishes.

Betty Low, senior in management information systems and president of Asian American Students for Cultural Awareness, said she wanted to have the night to celebrate all of the backgrounds represented in Asian American culture.

Vandy Paul, sophomore in computer science, said she organized the night because she thinks Asian Americans lose a lot of their background.

"I think they lose touch with their culture," Paul said.

The first performance of the night was by Namfone Lumdubwong, graduate student in food science, who performed two piano pieces from Taiwan.

Ashley Souther, sophomore in political science and international studies, said he enjoyed watching the next part of the program, the fashion show with native Asian clothing.

"It was cool to see the beautiful fabrics because it is so different from what we (Americans) wear," Souther said.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies at K-State, jams with Tabitha Steffens, a third-grade student at Ogden Elementary, Friday afternoon at All Faiths Chapel. Wilson used jazz versions of songs like "Itsy-Bitsy Spider" and the theme from "Sesame Street" to keep the children's interest during his 30-minute performance.

Sparking an interest in music

Concerts expose children to different kinds of instruments

Collegian

Do you remember your first favorite song, or the first time you saw live music?

You may not, but after the ninth annual Young People's Concert Series, about 2,600 children from the Manhattan and Ogden areas should.

"You just don't know at what time in a person's life you will touch them," said Dennis Wilson, assistant professor of music and director of jazz studies, who played the trombone and acted as director of the KSU Student Faculty Jazz Ensemble.

Friday marked the last of 15 concerts in 11 days that were coordinated by the Manhattan Arts Council and USD 383 at All Faiths Chapel for children in kindergarten, first, second and third grades.

In addition to Wilson, the ensemble consists of "Sweet" Willie Singleton, graduate student in music; Dena Sly, freshman in music education; Brad Ratliff, senior in social science; Jena Pralle, freshman in music education; Brian Brooks, sophomore in music education; and Robert Roman, pianist.

The program was a result of a dinner conversation between the show's organizer, Mary Ellen Titus, and John Biggs, the executive director of the Arts Council.

It was their hope to expose children to classical and jazz music and to introduce them to instruments they wouldn't otherwise be able to experience from music on television and radio, Biggs said.

They are targeting the series toward younger children, although in the past, the concert has reached a broader spectrum of ages.

"The Arts Council should be commended for supporting this and keeping it going," Wilson said.

"They are a total non-profit organization, and I know they need money, but they always find a way to make it happen."

As many of the children were leaving, they shook Wilson's hand. Some high-fives were exchanged, and many of the teachers congratulated the ensemble for being the best yet.

Many of the children sang along to the songs catered especially to them, including the "Sesame Street" theme, "The Itsy-Bitsy Spider" and the theme from Barney.

Wilson and Singleton paraded down the aisle and encouraged the kids to touch the instruments and to be a part of making the music.

"It's important for them to feel a part of it," Wilson said. "Letting them know that we care about them is more important than any administration or budgeting.

"It has to be done for the kids," he said.

▶ ESSAY CONTEST

Children write about women they admire

JILL TEGTMEIER
Collegian

Moms, grandmas and prominent women in history were the essay topics for area elementary and middle-school students as the finale for Women's History Month.

Seven winners were chosen out of more than 200 entries in an essay contest sponsored by the Diversity Taskforce for the College of Education, said Marjorie Hancock, assistant professor of elementary education.

WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH

The winners were presented certificates, and each one received a different book at a reception Friday in the Bluemont Instructional Media Center.

"I really want to thank K-State Union Bookstore, The Children's Book Shop, Claflin Books & Copies and Waldenbooks for donating books the past three years. That's a really special service we appreciate," Hancock said.

She said students wrote about women they admired most or who had the biggest effect on their lives.

Hancock said this was the third year for the contest and that there were more entries this year than in either of the past two years.

"It was well-received by the schools. We invited all the District 383 schools and also Paxico, Westmoreland, St. George, Wamego and Riley County schools," Hancock said.

Hancock said in past years, grade-school students submitted the most entries, but this year there were more from the middle schools.

"It was a pleasant surprise to have so many entries from the older students. Sometimes, they are not so willing to do things like this

KSUARH elections have candidates wanting change

JANICE MELIA
Collegian

The Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls elections on Tuesday have the candidates striving for change.

Residence hall representatives form the KSUARH general body, which will be voting to fill 10 positions on the executive board. The presidency has three candidates running, while the vice presidency has two.

The idea of returning the power of KSUARH to the general body and to the hall residents is a recurring theme among the candidates' platforms.

Eric Keen, junior in mechanical engineering, is running for president.

"I felt it was a good opportunity to lead in the residence halls," Keen said.

Keen said he would like to see more power with the residence halls.

One way that Keen suggests to do this is by increasing the number of KSUARH representatives.

Keen said he would like to see one representative for about every 200 residents.

He said he would also like to form more committees with members from each hall for the bigger projects. This would involve residence hall members from the beginning rather than the executive board making the initial decisions and then asking the residence halls to carry out the plans.

"That will get them in from the beginning so we can do what they want instead of guessing," Keen said.

Although KSUARH elects the president and vice president separately, Julia Trowbridge, sophomore in architectural engineering, is unofficially running with Keen.

"If Eric does not win, I will be stepping down. I would like to see the president and vice president run together on a ticket since they will be working together," she said.

Trowbridge said they are considering the idea of an electoral college, which would have stricter standards as to how KSUARH representatives vote.

Currently, KSUARH representatives can vote for candidates by their own personal opinions, receive the input of a few, or have a hall

Change made in election regulations

MARY EMERSON
Collegian

A change in election regulations will allow student candidates to continue campaigning for a position even if they violate a set guideline.

"We want to give them the right to run and let the voters make their own choices with the information we provide," Chad Schneiter, Senate Elections Committee chair, said. "The main change is we've taken out the nit-picky guidelines."

Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said instead of going through the Tribunal process, all violations of the guidelines will be printed for voters.

After the elections, all of the election winners have to be approved by Student Senate.

"This is when they can bring up any violations for discussion and approve or disapprove the winners," Nolfi said.

Past violations have centered around inaccurate expenditure reports and other mistakes.

"In the past, violations have been posting materials too early, distributing things too late or covering up someone else's materials," Nolfi said.

The other change in election regulations focuses on the party system.

Candidates for president and vice president can affiliate with other candidate members, but they can't share money. Every member has to be on all party materials, and the names have to be the same size and font, Schneiter said.

As part of the new party system, expenditure reports will be turned in separately for each candidate, instead of one for each party, Schneiter said.

The reasons for the changes is to allow students more leniency in campaigning, he said.

"Students who run have other things going on besides elections, like classes and work. We all make mistakes, but this way they can still run," Schneiter said.

Few students ever run on a political party ticket

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Although political parties are allowed in campus elections, few students actually run as a party ticket.

Chad Schneiter, Elections Committee chairman, said he didn't know of any active political parties yet this year.

In years past, The Wild Turkee Workers party and Students for Change have been active, he said.

Parties must be registered one week before the student body election, Schneiter said.

Students choose to run as part of a party for several reasons, Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said. Otto was member of the Students for Change party.

"The two of us agreed on a lot of stuff last year," Otto said. Otto and his partner were both elected.

Both senators were new to student government at K-State, and they had worked together on several projects, he said. The two decided to run as a party to combine their support, Otto said.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator and Union Governing Board member, said he ran with a party in 1993.

"That year, I don't think there were any advantages," he said.

He was one of 15 members in the Alliance for Change party. All the mem-

▶ NEW BILL MIGHT STOP ABORTIONS PERFORMED AT KU MEDICAL CENTER

TOPEKA (AP) — This year's debate on abortions at the University of Kansas Medical Center didn't end in the House Appropriations Committee as expected.

It was introduced to the House as a bill on Friday, and a vote is expected on the issue by the end of the session.

For years, amendments to the Board of Regents appropriations bills were proposed, prohibiting state funding for abortions performed at the Medical Center. This year that amendment passed, but the House voted to refer the bill back to the appropriations committee, where the amendment was removed and placed in a separate bill.

The bill prohibits the expenditure of public money for abortions at any state-owned or leased facility, unless the abortion is necessary to preserve the life of the mother. It also requires that other efforts to preserve the life of the child be made.

Its opponents say the Medical Center must teach students abortion procedures in order to meet accreditation requirements. Its supporters say public funds should not be used to support abortions.

Rep. Rob Jennison, R-Healy, chairman of the appropriations committee, said the amendment had a large number of supporters and deserved a fair debate.

Rep. Henry Helgerson, D-Wichita, said he supported making the amendment a separate bill, even though he's pro-choice. As a separate bill, he said, the House could debate the issue without worrying about its effect on the appropriations bill. But he said he still plans to vote against it.

▶ CRITICS ACCUSE FDA OF STIFLING SCIENCE

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — A tractor-trailer backed into the Food and Drug Administration loading dock and dumped 300,000 pages of patient charts and chemical tests — all for a new antibiotic.

Dr. Susan Alpert hunched over the pages and looked for proof the medicine worked, that the manufacturer didn't finagle the science or hide side effects.

"People think, 'Oh, an antibiotic's an antibiotic — what's to check?'" recalled Alpert, a veteran drug reviewer who now heads the FDA's medical device evaluation. "It has to be done. You can't just put drugs out there and see what happens because patients might get sicker or die."

But critics accuse the FDA of holding medicine hostage, and they're demanding that Congress revamp, or even dismantle, the nation's oldest consumer protection agency.

▶ U.N. SUMMIT WORKS TO STOP HUNGER

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Committing themselves to a pact on fighting poverty, world leaders wrapped up a summit Sunday agreeing that misery can lead to violent social upheaval, but differing on how to cure it.

The weeklong U.N. gathering, which brought together 190 countries and 120 heads of state, was an ambitious attempt to pull together governments and aid groups to set a global policy.

"The cry of millions of infants worldwide whose lives are threatened by hunger should be enough to consolidate our resolve," said Malta's prime minister, Edward Fenech-Adami.

In speeches before the adoption of the declaration, poor countries accused richer ones of shirking their duties. Many Third World leaders also agreed reforms were needed in their countries to boost production and fight corruption.

▶ SECRETARY OF STATE QUITS INVESTIGATION

JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher, sharply critical of a large American oil company's lucrative contract with Iran, said Sunday he had dropped out of the Clinton administration's ongoing review of the deal because Conoco had retained his law firm.

Among the options under consideration by the administration is ordering Conoco to abandon the contract to develop a huge offshore oil field in the Persian Gulf.

The deal, worth about $1 billion, is with a government whose evil hand is evident everywhere in the Middle East, Christopher said before he had learned Conoco had hired O'Melveny & Myers of Los Angeles.

Christopher was chairman of the firm before he became secretary of state two years ago.

He is vested in its retirement fund.

■ In a graphic printed in Thursday's Collegian, it was incorrectly reported that Allstate Insurance charges $145 for its annual premium without replacement cost and $181 with replacement cost for a $10,000 renters' insurance policy. Actually, the company charges $83 without replacement cost and $104 with replacement cost. Also, not all insurance companies or offices in Manhattan were included in the graphic.

■ Because of to an editing error, it was reported in the story on William Perry's Landon Lecture that Perry said the United States certainly does not have security interests as humanitarians. Perry actually said the United States does have security interests as humanitarians.

Austrian Ensemble

Vienna Academy Director Martin Haselböck, playing the harpsichord, leads the rest of the Austrian ensemble. The Vienna Academy orchestra unrolled its music Sunday afternoon at McCain Auditorium, presented by the Kansas Arts Commission, Friends of McCain and the K-State Fine Arts fee.

Ensemble brightens McCain

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

The works of Georg Philipp Telemann, Johann Sebastian Bach and Antonio Vivaldi came to life on the stage Sunday at McCain Auditorium.

As part of its North American debut, the Vienna Academy, a period orchestra, stopped to perform for a crowd of more than 600 Manhattan residents.

The Academy, under the direction of Martin Haselböck, performs music from the late Baroque and Viennese classical periods, using reconstructed instruments from that era.

The first piece the orchestra performed was Telemann's "Concerto for 3 trumpets and Orchestra in D major." The use of three trumpets in a chamber orchestra makes this piece unique for this period.

The transitions and lyrical movement in this piece were excellent. The orchestra played this concerto very smoothly, as if they were the ones who originally wrote and performed the piece.

"Concerto for Flute and Orchestra in D major" was the second piece performed by the orchestra.

The Academy's performance was typical Vivaldi, only at his finest.

The flute is the dominate instrument in this piece and is designed to imitate the songs of birds, hence the name "Il Cardellino" (The Goldfinch.) This piece was played to perfection, with a balanced, soft accompaniment behind an airy flute solo.

Haselböck announced a program change for the third piece. "Violin Concerto in A minor" by Bach was put in the program in place of a second Telemann concerto.

The orchestra seemed to thoroughly enjoy performing this piece for the crowd. The violin solo was fluid and smooth, dancing along the melody.

Coming back from intermission, the Academy performed Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 5."

This piece, written in three movements, featured a duet with the violin and flute and a harpsichord solo. The violin and flute danced back and forth in this piece, reflecting similar rhythms and melodies at different levels.

The harpsichord solo was definitely a treat for the audience. Most people who have never heard a harpsichord were treated to an outstanding performance by Haselböck himself.

Haselböck ran through rapid chords and notes in an impressive manner, making the music very entrancing and enjoyable.

Bach's "Orchestral Suite No. 3 in D major" was the final selection performed by the orchestra.

Written in six parts, it highlights strings, trumpets and timpani. The entire piece was an excellent example of movement from one section to another, as the melody moved around the orchestra.

After the performance, Haselböck left the stage and then came back and sat at the harpsichord. He announced the orchestra would play the final movement from another Bach suite as an encore.

The encore, something a bit unusual for a chamber orchestra, was a rapid movement, highlighting strings and the trumpets. An excellent close to a very impressive performance.

If you didn't get to see the performance, you missed an excellent opportunity. The quality of music and the group's enthusiasm made the show pure enjoyment.

If you missed the show or are interested in quality music, check out the Vienna Academy on compact disc through Novalis. They have more than 25 titles available, covering a variety of composers.

IN OUR OPINION

by the Collegian Editorial Board

Hold on these last 5 days before spring break

Five more days of classes, and then you'll have a week of rest and relaxation.

It's that time of year again when Frisbee sounds better than physics, and students are sleeping in instead of studying.

With spring break right around the corner, it's easy to throw aside the books and jump into the vacation mentality a week early.

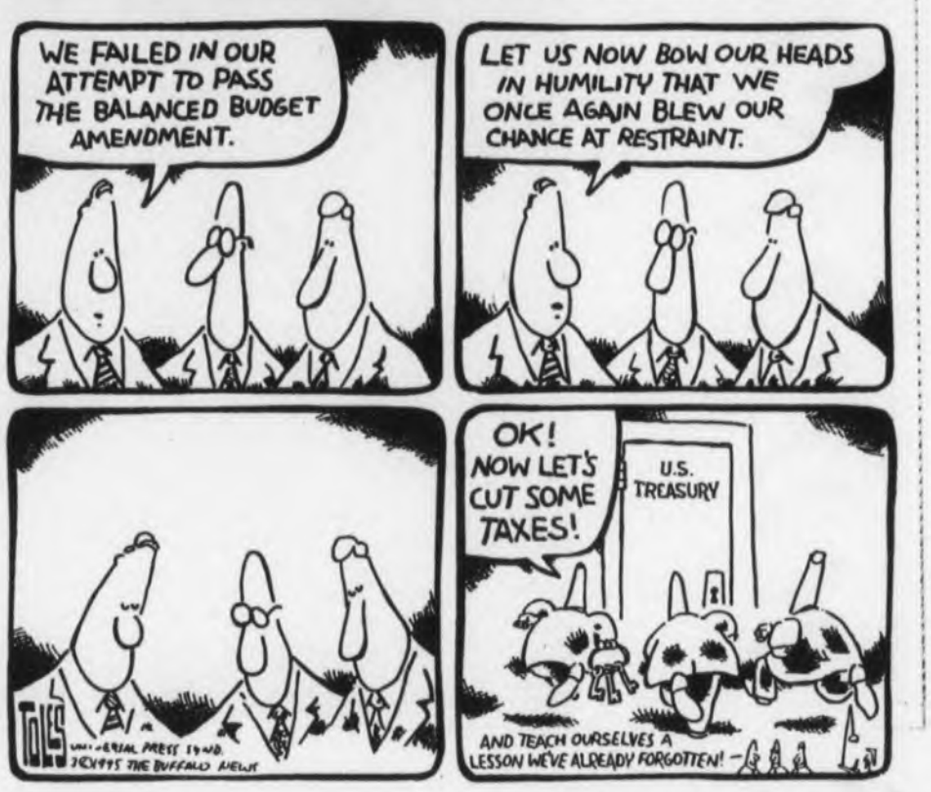
It may seem like it's downhill from here, but remember there are five class days left until spring break.

During these five days, we encourage you to go to class, study and turn in your assignments.

Going to class is just as important this week as it is any other time during the semester.

Getting yourself out of bed to get to class is the first step to being a responsible student.

The next step is to pay attention.



The bright sun and escalating temperatures provide excellent sources of distraction, but try to keep your minds on your classes instead of daydreaming about the beach.

Spring break will get here soon enough, and you'll be grateful when your report card comes if you continue to go to class and get your work done.

Try, even if it seems impossible, to study, cut down on excuses for late papers and focus on your classwork.

Five more days of classes, and then you'll have a week of rest and relaxation.

Homosexuals who shun mainstream values generate feelings of homophobia from others

Recently, there has been a lot of talk about homosexuality and homophobia.

Many have been looking for the reasoning heterosexuals use for being homophobic.

For some heterosexuals, accepting homosexuality isn't difficult. This may be due in part to their values. For a lot of people, an experience with a gay family member may have changed their beliefs about homosexuality.

Others, however, have a great deal of difficulty accepting homosexual behaviors. Unfortunately, we often look to mainstream America as the source of these fears. While to some extent that is true, homosexual rhetoric causes problems for itself.

For example, on Jan. 31, 1995, Michael Warner wrote, "I thought to myself to take precautions, but I could tell by the heady thrill that my monster was in charge." This appeared in "The Village Voice."

He also wrote, "Suddenly I had to think about why I wanted risky sex, knowing that the danger was part of the attraction."

These two statements should be enough to frighten anyone, gay or straight. These are the ideas portrayed to America about gays by the gay population, and we need to ask why heterosexuals are homophobic.

"Suddenly, he had to think ..." maybe he should have been thinking before that point. With the spread of AIDS and more and more taxpayers picking up the tab, statements like this only add to the fear of homosexuality.

These are the ideas portrayed to America about gays by the gay population, and we need to ask why heterosexuals are homophobic.

Not only that, but gays have been forcing their values down our throats for quite some time. They want us to not only accept their behaviors, but allow them to teach our children that homosexuality is satisfactory.

Most people are fairly tolerant of alternate behaviors, as long as they are still permitted to have their own values. In a public school, abstinence isn't taught because it is a moral value.

On the other hand, homosexuals want to be able to moralize their behavior in public-school classrooms.

Homosexuals differ from heterosexuals by more than just sexual preference. If most heterosexuals were asked about who they are, they would answer with information about their job, their achievements and possibly their family. Their first 20 responses would not have anything to do with their sexuality.

My sexuality is not the first thing I think of when I am asked about who I am. In my experience with gays, one of the first things they mention about themselves is their sexual preference.

Another problem heterosexuals may have with homosexuals is the perceived difference in values. In the heterosexual community, monogamy is still aspired to.

Most of the gays I know are extremely promiscuous. They don't have the same values regarding sexual relations that mainstream America has. This moral difference can help to build tensions.

Men being attracted to other men is on some biological level explainable.

However, for the heterosexual community, understanding why gay men are attracted to men dressed up like women is a little difficult to for most heterosexuals to stomach.

Gays who conform to some of the values given by mainstream America meet with far less resistance. They are in a monogamous relationship, and their sexual practices are consistent with being gay.

They don't do things that directly contradict their alleged sexual preference.

However, when men find what appears to be a woman attractive, heterosexuals question the validity of homosexuality.

Isn't it logical to be confused by a man who claims he is attracted to men, when he goes looking for a man dressed like a woman?

Pallone, Louganis make standards of masculinity difficult to define

"You throw like a girl!"

How often have little boys heard these hurtful words?

In our culture, little boys are obsessively encouraged to reject femaleness, to not be a "sissy."

Any behavior or trait in a little boy that is seen as even remotely female must be violently extinguished, most often using the tools of scorn, ridicule and exclusion.

Traits such as physicality, competitiveness and aggression are viewed by our culture as stereotypically male traits.

That is why strong, athletic and competitive women are so often looked at with distrust: "she's probably a dyke" is a common sentiment toward women who are competent and able to compete on the playing field, in the military or in the corporate world.

This same mentality also believes that homosexual men are unmasculine, effeminate little pansies.

But nowhere is this "traditional maleness" more jealously enforced than in the hypermasculine world of sports.

When a man can't meet the rigorous athletic standards of masculinity, he is scornfully written off as being a "sissy" or a "fag."

Somehow, the warped mentality of the U.S. male sportsman has decided that physical ability in sports equals masculinity.

This is the mentality that believes that athletic women are too masculine, and are probably dykes. And, stereotypically, that all lesbians are big, athletic, rough-and-tumble types.

This same mentality also believes that homosexual men are unmasculine, effeminate little pansies.

This idea is so patently ridiculous that it's almost funny.

Some of the most masculine men I know are gay.

In this warped world view of sports being the domain of the masculine, there is no place for those men who are the most "feminine" of all — homosexuals. It follows that, if gay men aren't masculine, and men who play sports are masculine, then gay men don't play sports.

This world view can't reconcile the idea of a gay man being masculine.

That's why someone like Dave Pallone is so troublesome to this American myth of masculinity.

Dave Pallone is a good-looking, masculine, athletic guy.

He was a professional baseball umpire for 18 years, 10 of them in the National League.

Dave Pallone is also gay.

Pallone has joined the ranks of American sports figures who have come out of the closet and lived to tell the tale.

Figures such as Oakland A's outfielder Glenn Burke, Mr. Universe bodybuilder Bob Jackson-Paris, Olympic Gold Medalist swimmer Bruce Hayes, San Francisco 49ers running back Dave Kopay, and of course, Greg Louganis, the great Olympic diver.

Pallone has written a New York Times best-seller called "Behind the Mask: My Double Life In Baseball." In this excellent book, Dave recounts what it is like to be a gay man in the ultra-macho realm of baseball and the prejudice he faced when his sexual orientation was revealed to the world.

He also talks about some major league baseball players who are gay — although he doesn't point out any of them — and what life is like for them playing for a sport that is unable to face the reality that masculine, macho men can be gay, too.

Pallone breaks those stereotypes by his very existence and by his courageous speaking out.

That is why I am very excited that the Union Program Council Multicultural Committee has brought him here to K-State.

Pallone is speaking today at K-State as part of UPC's "Free Your Mind Week."

Pallone has joined the ranks of American sports figures who have come out of the closet and lived to tell the tale.

He will be appearing at 3 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre to talk about his struggles as a gay man in the ultra-macho world of baseball and to give a fascinating behind-the-plate view of baseball.

But even if you are not a baseball fan, I'd encourage you to hear Dave speak.

His is an almost universal story among gay men — the struggle to overcome self-doubt and negative societal programming about homosexuality.

It's a story made even more entertaining by its setting of major-league baseball.

I'll bet no one would dare tell Dave Pallone he throws like a girl.

Graduate students — ready to teach?

Imagine that you have recently been hired as an assistant professor.

You are asked to teach two (or more) existing courses the first semester and to develop a new course for an upcoming semester. Of course, you have other responsibilities, including committee assignments, grant writing, and establishing research programs.

What do you do first?

Have you ever developed an entirely new course, written a comprehensive syllabus, or devised a fair method of grading? Are you adept at advising students or speaking before large groups? How do you select and review textbooks for your classes?

Are you comfortable with your new role as a teacher?

Or, maybe you are still looking for your first position. Will you get the job if your prospective employer's interviewing process includes a research seminar and a teaching seminar? What if they ask for your teaching portfolio, or want your opinion of how to improve the curriculum in their department?

Are you prepared to teach?

On May 16, K-State graduate students will have an opportunity to address these issues at a university-wide workshop on Preparing Graduate Students to Teach. Speakers will include Dr. Laura Border of the Graduate Student Teaching Program at the University of Colorado, and Dr. Frank Vattano of the Graduate Teaching Program at Colorado State University.

GUEST COLUMN

Graduate students will hear how teaching preparation and experience fit into trends in both faculty hiring and in faculty roles and responsibilities. We will hear what other universities do to prepare their graduate students for a teaching role, and how K-State stacks-up against the competition. Grad students will also have the opportunity to include their views in the discussion of how to improve graduate student education at K-State.

Time to sound-off, graduate students. The speakers are interested in your views about both the level and extent of teaching preparation which you are receiving. As a member of the committee which is producing the workshop, I will forward to the speakers your answers to the following questions:

- Are you a Masters or Doctoral candidate; GRA or GTA; what is your Department?
- Have you received any formal training (workshops, classes, monitored activities) in teaching? If so, to what extent was the preparation?
- What emphasis do your major professor, committee, and your Department Head put on teaching preparation, in terms of allocation of your time with regards to other activities (such as research)?
- In your view, how valuable is teaching experience in both getting a permanent faculty position and in receiving tenure?

I will keep your identity confidential (no Connie Chung shenanigans from me), so please be candid.

▶ PARKING

Lots should cost differently

Dear editor,

Is the solution to the K-State parking problem as obvious to anybody else but me?

The whiners on one side don't mind paying more so that they don't have to walk from Weber in sub-zero wind chills. The whiners on the other side don't mind walking, but they don't want to pay more.

It only stands to reason that we need two (or more) parking permits — a cheap one for the far-away lots to satisfy whiner type II and an expensive one for the close lots to satisfy whiner type I.

Since everybody agrees that parking is not a problem if you don't mind walking from halfway across the state, this system will spread out the empty spaces across campus.

If we further restrict the sales of the permits for the "good" lots to just a few over the actual number of spaces, everyone with an expensive permit will just about be guaranteed a spot. These permits could be sold at a premium (making parking services happy), while students could still get cheap permits (making those students and their checkbooks happy).

▶ TRUTH

Truth is absolute

Dear editor,

I feel compelled to share some aspects of Truth. An absolute standard of Truth does exist, and it is not relative. Truth does not change; our perception of Truth changes. Here are some examples of this, starting with one of Janusz Jaworski's that appeared in the March 7 Collegian.

A person is swimming in a pool, and let's say that the water is 80 degrees. Suppose a friend comes up and asks how the water is. The first person says the water is fine, but when the friend jumps in the water, the water feels cold. Here is a difference of perception of being hot or cold. The truth is that the water is 80 degrees regardless of whether it feels hot or cold.

Another example taken from Jaworski is the belief in the past that the sun revolved around the earth. Today, we know that the earth revolves around the sun. Two different perceptions — but the truth is that the earth does indeed revolve around the sun (as it did 2,000 years ago) regardless of what people believed to be true.

I believe there is a sovereign God; you don't. God either exists or He doesn't. We cannot both be right. I do not claim to know what the Whole Truth is about, but I do know what the Whole Truth is, and I know that God is the Whole Truth. God does not change, and He does encompass the entire universe.

The Truth is that God loves each and every one of us despite our perceptions. All you need to do is honestly look to God and you will begin to know that Truth.

▶ STUDENT FEE

Everyone uses center

Dear editor,

Recently, a letter appeared that stated international students should start paying for what they use. I'd like to remind this person and others that international students do pay their own way — $3,714 per semester as well as application fees. Why should international students have to pay more for services integral to the University?

Should undergraduates have to pay an extra fee to use the admissions office? Should graduate students have to pay an extra fee to use the graduate school office? Should students who sit and watch TV in the Union have to pay an extra fee for furniture and TV use? Should surveying students have to pay a grass fee for using the campus grass? Should nuclear engineering students have to pay an extra fee for the opportunity of having a nuclear reactor on campus?

Furthermore, it's not just international students who use the International Student Center. American students attend many of the events conducted there. In addition, American students can sign up for a conversation partner from another country there. Without the International Student Center, many American students would never get the opportunity to learn about or to meet people from other countries.

The International Student Center provides services to all students on campus who choose to make use of them. If you choose not to, that's not the fault of international students.

▶ TOLERANCE

What exactly is correct?

Dear editor,

This is an open letter to John Hart.

There have been many letters and guest columns that have appeared in the Collegian recently regarding your political and moral views. Most have not been in favor with your column. This letter will continue with the tradition of slamming your ideas, but I would also like to make a suggestion.

It is fruitless to resist the thinking of the Correct. I do not understand why you continue to express a viewpoint that is not compatible with the Correct Mind.

Is not the purpose of the university to teach us all to think alike? Your thinking lies outside of what we see as acceptable, so it has to be wrong. As soon as you and radicals like yourself conform to our thinking, we can all get along. I strongly recommend that you change your views so that they are in accordance with the Correct Mind on our campus.

John, I would like to personally invite you to come over to the Correct way of thinking. Life is easier here. There is no need to rationally examine our principles and beliefs, for they are Correct (and they sound good, too).

Do not worry about searching for the truth here; we make our own rules. And if these rules fail, we can always blame the failure on people like yourself who question the rules. What a wonderful way to learn at a university!

It is not good to be outside the realm of the Correct. I really hope you decide to convert your thinking to the Correct Mind. Only then will you be with the truly diverse and tolerant of this campus.

K-State shuts out Hastings, goes 1-2 during weekend

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

K-State accomplished something Sunday they haven't done for more than a year.

The Wildcats shut out Hastings College Sunday afternoon 14-0.

The shutout was the first by the Cats since Feb. 19, 1994, when K-State whipped Peru State 11-0.

K-State 14
Hastings 0

"We got a shutout. It's been a long time since we got one of those," said K-State coach Mike Clark, whose team raised its record to 5-6.

K-State opened the scoring in the first when Chris Hess scored on a Brad Harker single, but the Cats weren't through. Harker would then score on a Scott Poepard double to extend the Cats' lead to 2-0.

This would be all the runs the Cats needed, but they didn't stop there.

K-State would score four more runs in the second, capped off with a three-run home run by Todd Fereday.

In the sixth inning, the Cats exploded for five more runs.

The inning was capped off by a three-run blast to left by Tim Decker, which gave the Cats an 11-0 advantage.

The Cats would finish off their scoring binge in the eighth with three more runs to make the final score 14-0.

K-State was led by Decker and Fereday, who both hit three-run dingers, along with going two-for-four with four RBIs. Hess also went three-for-five to extend his hitting streak to 10 games.

Jack Witt started the game and got his first win of the season.

Witt went six strong innings and recorded eight strikeouts.

Dan Albrecht came into pitch three solid innings for his first save.

Despite the Cats' strong performance at the plate, Clark said the Cats did have some problems.

"Offensively, I thought we had some good spurts," Clark said.

"We had some innings where we didn't execute very well."

Clark said the positives definitely outweighed the negatives.

"We got some kids some playing time, some at-bats, and we got a win."

Unfortunately, the Cats didn't fair as well during their Big Eight opener against Oklahoma State in Stillwater.

During the weekend, the Cats got swept by Oklahoma State 8-7 and 22-10.

In the first game, K-State stuck close with the Cowboys but lost on a wild throw by Larry Walty during a sacrifice bunt by the Pokes' Rusty McNamara in the 10th inning for an 8-7 Pokes victory.

"We put ourselves in a position to win the first ballgame," Clark said.

"It might have been the best college game that we have competed in."

"We blinked in the 10th inning, and that was the difference in the ballgame," he said.

The second game was a different story.

The Cowboys pounded out 17 hits and three home runs, slamming the Cats 22-10 to complete the sweep.

"I think the pitchers found out that if you don't throw strikes — particularly against great teams like Oklahoma State — what happened Saturday will happen," Clark said.

The Cats will return to action today against Hastings College. The first pitch will be thrown at 1 p.m. with junior Matt Koeman getting the start at Frank Myers Field.

▶ MEN'S BASKETBALL

Hawks slam Wildcats for second-worst loss in K-State history

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — When K-State entered the Big Eight Tournament as the No. 8 seed, the Wildcats knew their basketball season was surviving merely on life support.

Well, the Cats had the plug yanked out on the life support Friday, as Kansas pounded K-State 90-45 in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

Kansas 90
K-State 45

"You don't want to get hammered like that to anybody," Coach Tom Asbury said. "It's pure and simple — they just absolutely drilled us. They are a lot better than we are right now. There is no question about that."

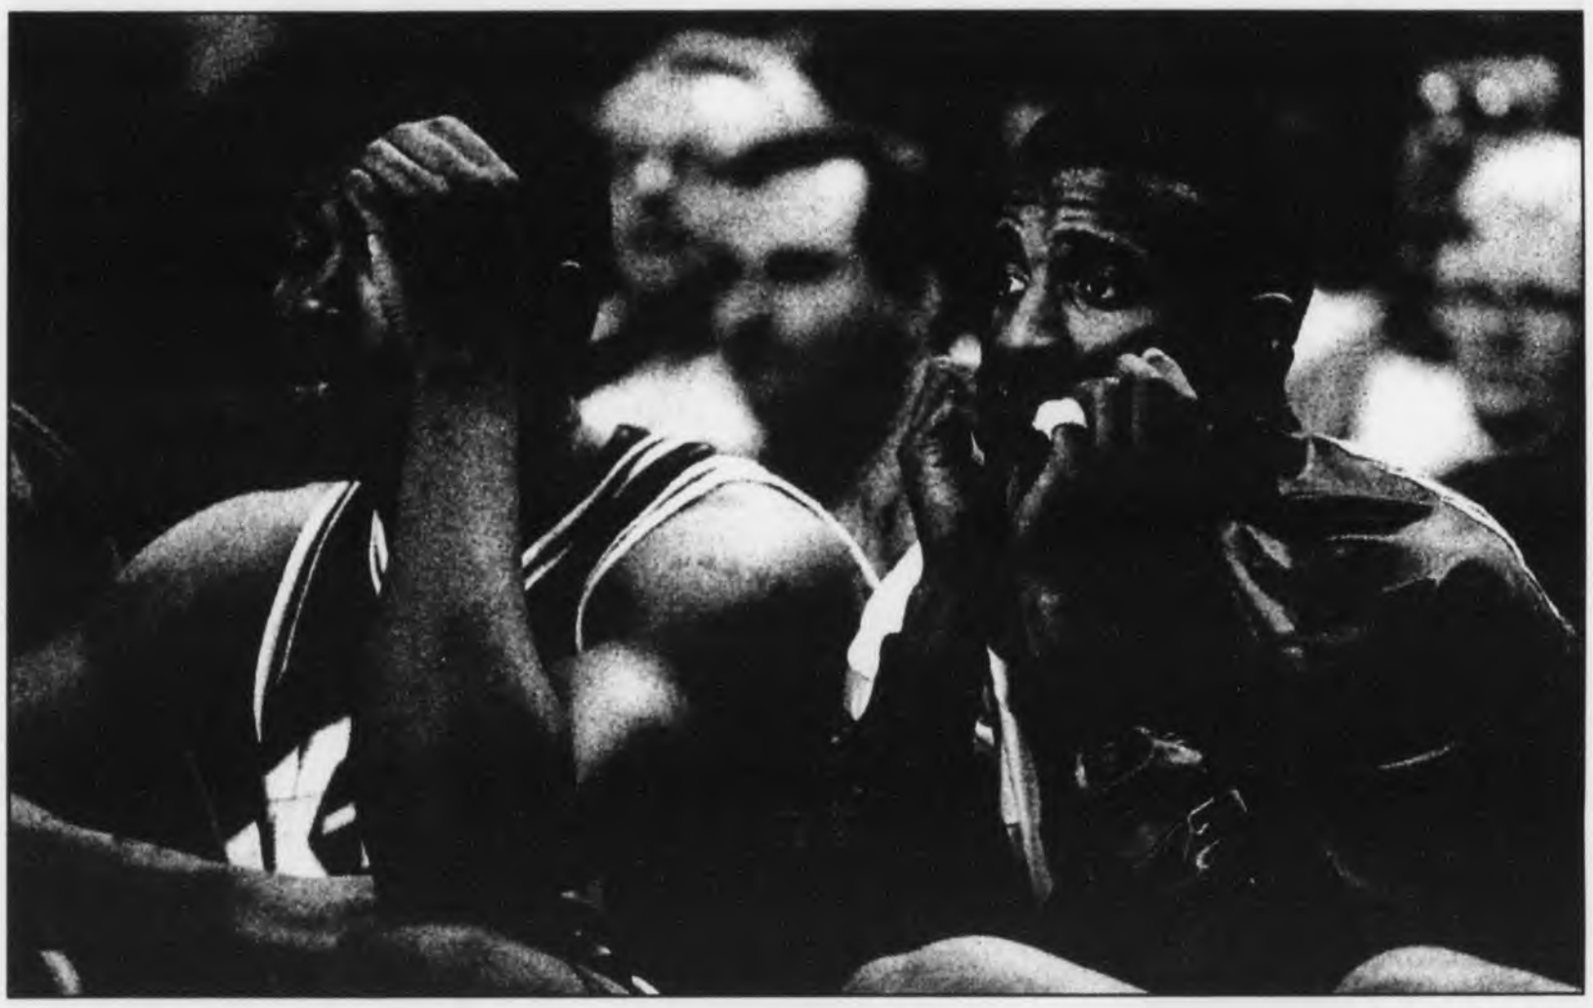
In fact, it was K-State's second-worse loss in the school's history. It was a loss that proved the K-State basketball program has a long way to go before it is ready to compete on the same level with the talented teams in the Big Eight.

"There is a huge discrepancy between the two programs," Asbury said. "We've just got to challenge our underclassmen to go out and start assuming responsibility so we can start to narrow this gap.

"Certainly as coaches we need to go out and recruit better players to help narrow this gap in a hurry. We will do that, because I'm not sitting through this too much longer."

The game didn't start as ugly as it ended, as K-State jumped out to a quick 7-0 run sparked by a bucket and three-pointer by Belvis Noland.

However, the Cats' lead turned out to be a mirage as KU woke up and went on to outscore the Cats 44-12 the rest of the first half.



"Lack of poise and turning the ball over is what hurt us," Noland said. "They did a couple of things like get a couple of big rebounds, got the ball out on transition, and they played really well."

What sparked the Kansas run, which included a 22-4 in the last six minutes of the period, was the play of its big men.

Most notable was the play of KU's 6-foot-10-inch Scott Pollard. Pollard came into the lineup and sparked the Hawks with eight points and six rebounds in the first half.

The Jayhawks also used 7-footer Greg Ostertag and 6'11" Raef LaFrentz to frustrate the Cats inside.

"I think in this game they demonstrated clearly their size superiority over us," Asbury said. "That was probably the major difference. Their overwhelming size took us out of our game.

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

K-State's Belvis Noland and Elliot Hatcher look on in disbelief during the Cats' 90-45 loss to the Kansas Jayhawks in the first round of the 1995 Big Eight Tournament at Kemper Arena Friday afternoon. The loss ended the Cats' season at 12-15.

"I just think that they executed their offense better. It was a little bit more inside-oriented than the first two games. They just executed perfectly, and we were in excellent position several times. If they execute perfectly, you're not going to stop them," he said.

K-State forward Demond Davis, who is only 6'4", said the Cats' size wasn't even close to matching up with the Jayhawks.

"Look at it — they have three seven footers out there, and our biggest man is Tyrone, and he's 6'5" or 6'6". That's what really hurt us."

After KU delivered the huge run, the game was over by halftime as the Hawks led 44-19. But there was another half left to be played, and things didn't get brighter for the Cats.

KU picked up right where it left off, as the Hawks went to their inside muscle even more, which allowed LaFrentz and Ostertag to catch fire.

For the game, the Hawks' three big men finished with 38 points, four blocks and 28 rebounds.

"We worked on our swivel in the post during practice this week," LaFrentz said. "This helped us keep our defenders behind us and made getting the ball to us easier. I was prepared for a rough-and-tumble game."

While things were going smoothly for KU, things remained rocky for the Cats. Combined with KU's height advantage and 29-percent shooting, K-State only scored 26 more points in the second half.

However, if there can be any positives from a blowout loss, Asbury said it was the fact that the Cats never quit.

"I was satisfied with our effort," Asbury said.

"We never quit or gave up. We just didn't execute, and their size killed us."

▶ BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT

Cowboys shoot down Clones

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kemper Arena was transformed into the small-town basketball capital of the world Sunday.

O-State 62
Iowa St. 53

Instead of the BMWs and Mercedes that usually line the streets around Kemper, pickups and station wagons were the norm as the Big Eight's smallest schools played in the championship game of the conference tournament.

Iowa State advanced to the final round by upsetting No. 1 seed Kansas on Saturday.

The Cyclones had almost 12,000 fans in the arena who let their presence be known throughout most of the game.

But it was Bryant "Big Country" Reeves, from Gans, Okla. (population 300), who crashed the Cyclones' coming-out party.

Reeves, who scored 21 points, led the Cowboys to a 62-53 victory.

"Bryant is the most amazing player I ever coached," OSU coach Eddie Sutton said.

"When he first got here four years ago, I never would have thought that he would be this type of player."

Reeves said the Big Eight Tournament title makes up for the Cowboys' second-place finish in the regular season.

"There still is a void from where we lost in the round robin," Reeves said.

"But I think that this will help fill that void. I feel great right now.

"This was small-town basketball in a big-town setting," he said.

"Bryant is the most amazing player I ever coached."

EDDIE SUTTON
Oklahoma State basketball coach

After starting the half up by eight points, Reeves scored four straight points and extended the OSU lead to 12.

"The guards put it exactly where I need it," Reeves said.

"Every time that I would get a seal down low, the guards would have the ball right there."

Then the Clones made their run — a run that brought them to within two points with 4:44 left on the clock.

That was as close as ISU would get, as OSU's Randy Rutherford nailed a three-pointer to end the Cyclones' threat.

Still, the main story remained — Reeves, who was selected the tournament's Most Valuable Player.

Reeves ended his tournament career with 167 points.

This ranks Reeves seventh on the all-time list.

"I think that I had a pretty good tournament," Reeves said.

"We played really hard."

Magic beats the Spurs at home; Shaq finally beats Robinson

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — Defending home turf, Shaquille O'Neal insisted, was more important to him and the Orlando Magic than the personal satisfaction he got from finally beating David Robinson.

"We just wanted to come in and get a win," O'Neal said after Sunday's 110-104 victory over the San Antonio Spurs improved the Magic's NBA-best record to 48-14, including 32-1 at Orlando Arena.

Magic 110
Spurs 104

"I was 0-for-5 against Mr. Robinson, but I wasn't worried about the Admiral vs. Shaq matchup," he added. "I was just trying to keep the home streak going."

Nevertheless, the Spurs were the only team the Magic hadn't beaten since O'Neal entered the NBA three seasons ago. Robinson holds the statistical edge in six meetings between the All-Star centers and had 34 points and 12 rebounds to O'Neal's 28 points and 13 rebounds in the latest matchup.

"I thought it was a great battle," Robinson said. "You couldn't get much more hype for a game, but it worked out. It was well-played for the most part. They made some big shots down the stretch."

Anfernee Hardaway led the Magic with 31 points, 20 of them in the second half. Nick Anderson scored 13 of his 21 points in the fourth quarter when Orlando, playing without injured starter Horace Grant (bruised hip), pulled away from a 90-90 tie in the final 5:52.

Hardaway and Anderson carried the Magic until O'Neal, who struggled much of the fourth quarter, delivered a highlight-film dunk and two free throws in the final minute.

The victory was Orlando's 11th straight at home and was particularly sweet because earlier this month, the Magic had lost to the Spurs, the NBA's hottest team with a 34-9 record since Dec. 10, by one point at San Antonio.

"I'm just glad to be on a good team with other superstars and role players," said O'Neal. "They help make me, and I help make them. That's what being on a good team is all about. Helping each other out."

O'Neal was only 10-for-24 from the field and had been outscored 14-2 by Robinson in the final period before slamming in an offensive rebound for a 104-99 lead and hitting two free throws that made it 106-100 with 36.7 seconds remaining.

Robinson finished 12-of-21 and got offensive support from Sean Elliott, who had 20 points for San Antonio. Dennis Rodman had 11 points and 23 rebounds, while Avery Johnson contributed 18 points before going scoreless in the last quarter.

"We knew it would come down to two things — defense and rebounding," said Orlando coach Brian Hill. "We were getting beaten very badly in both areas at halftime. ... We came back and out-rebounded them 22-18 in the second half and cut down their fast break baskets."

San Antonio held a 31-14 rebounding advantage and led the Magic 53-47 at the half. Rodman led the way with 15 rebounds, 12 of them in the opening quarter.

Orlando trailed 60-49 before finishing the third period with a flourish. Hardaway's three-pointer capped a 28-17 spurt and sent the game into the fourth quarter tied at 77.

"He looked like he really raised his game to another level," Robinson said of Orlando's All-Star guard.

SPRING BREAK '95

WITH SPRING BREAK ONLY FIVE DAYS AWAY, STUDENTS GET READY

BY KIMBERLY HEFLING

Spring break.

That magical time when students can drive off into the sunset or just collapse on the couch at home is just around the corner.

Art Fink, sophomore in biological and agricultural engineering, said instead of returning to the potentially dangerous city of Memphis, Tenn., for spring break, he and two of his friends have opted to spring break in South Padre Island in Texas and New Orleans.

"Last year, we went to Graceland, and it was a lot of fun, but it was a very scary town," Fink said.

Fink said there was bars and chain-link fences around a McDonald's he went to, and the Days Inn where he stayed had security guards with dogs.

"I'm going to Aggieville with my friends."

Fink said they decided to head south for break because he has relatives in that direction. Therefore, food and lodging will be free.

"I hear Padre's a good time, and I hear the drinking age is 18 in Louisiana," he said.

Fink said he has made the trip to the southern states with his mother quite a few times, but they've never had car problems because they have the car checked out before they leave.

"We always just make sure we change our oil and get the car tuned before we leave," he said.

Seth Yount, sophomore undecided, said he's taking a road trip with friends, but he's not sure exactly where they're going.

"Probably New Mexico or Minnesota — one of the two," he said. "We're either going to be cold or warm."

Yount said they probably won't make definite plans before they leave.

"Who knows where we're going," he said. "We'll just find an attraction and stop. We just want to drive and get away for awhile and relax."

Melissa Dunkle, junior in dietetics, said she plans to go to Dallas for break.

"We'll probably go to Hard Rock, Six Flags, Planet Hollywood and definitely the bars," she said.

Dunkle said she is not dreading the eight- to 10-hour road trip.

"I think it's going to be fun," she said.

For some students, the opportunity to rest and work in Manhattan is inviting.

In the past, Kit Chapman, sophomore in agribusiness, said he has gone skiing in Colorado, but this year, Chapman said he is low on funds and plans to find a job and relax during break.

"I'm looking forward to doing nothing," he said.

Chapman said he doesn't plan to do any homework during spring break.

"I'm just going to live in Aggieville with my friends," he said.

Like Chapman, Shakir Daughtery, sophomore in industrial engineering, said he plans to stay in Manhattan and does not plan to study during break.

"I'm taking a break," he said. "That's what spring break is for."

Daugherty said he has four tests the week before spring break.

Jason Crook, junior in criminal justice, said he plans to stay in Manhattan for break, but he's not sure if he'll have much fun.

Crook said he has to work and write a midterm paper for one of his classes.

KIT CHAPMAN Sophomore in agribusiness

"It's due right after break," he said.

Some students have plans to return home for the week.

Jeff Dougan, sophomore in mechanical engineering, is going home to Overland Park for break, but not by choice. Dougan has to have a third surgery done on a finger he broke playing football.

"I'll pretty much be looped up on pain medication for spring break," Dougan said.

Dougan said it would be impossible for him to have the surgery during school because of side effects from pain killers.

"For a whole week, I would be completely out of it," he said.

Angela Bass, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said she's looking forward to going home to Wichita to see friends who attend the University of Kansas and spend time with her boyfriend.

"I'll also probably sleep a lot and bum around," she said.

Bass said her decision to not leave Kansas for break was partly financially based.

"I'm completely broke," she said. "I have a credit card, but I'd rather not mess with that. I'd rather just go lie around at home for a week."

Like Bass, Mark Sanner, freshman in architecture, said he's also looking forward to going home to Wichita.

"I'll probably go home and certainly rest," Sanner said. "I never get enough rest here it seems like."

Sanner said it's been three months since he's been home.

"I'll definitely spend time with my little brothers and visit friends," he said.

NO MONEY? SO STAY AT HOME THIS YEAR

BY JANICE MELIA

You want something fun to do, but you have very little money, and spring break is just around the corner.

Don't despair yet. There are things that can be done during break without a lot of the green stuff.

Traveling to visit family is on the agenda for some.

"The first part, I'm going to Colorado Springs," Jennifer Axon, junior in marketing, said. "We're going to see my boyfriend's parents."

Brenda Clark, office assistant for photographic services, is going to see her sister near Columbus, Ohio.

She is traveling with her family, including her parents, so there will be seven making the trip.

At the end of the journey a large family picture will be taken to update the last one that was taken five years ago.

"As long as you can do something with your family — I think that's what is important," Clark said.

If she were not traveling, Clark said she would probably spend break working.

"Most of the time, I would have continued working and caught up on work while everyone was gone," Clark said.

Physical activity and enjoying nature may also lead to relaxation.

Larry Weaver, professor of physics, suggests hiking the Konza, walking in the creek at Pillsbury Crossing or renting a canoe from the recreation center.

Playing basketball, tennis or just getting out to do something are what Ryan Rindt, junior in civil engineering, suggests. He said the activities can be done as a group or as an individual.

Andy Park, junior in nutrition and exercise science, said he is unsure of what his plans for break include because he is considering several possibilities. But for others, he suggests the option of a two- to four-day biking trip depending on the weather.

"It would be fun for me but not for everyone," he said.

Park said camping out with a tent would make the trip cheaper, and taking a friend would make it more fun.

"Take your time. If there's a lake, go around it and make the trip scenic," Park said.

Weaver also suggests enjoying nature.

"Get up early, take a friend with you and watch the sunrise," he said.

Clark mentioned some inexpensive activities around Manhattan that could be done with friends.

She suggested playing pool, going to the movies, bowling, having people over or just hanging out. Renting a movie complete with chips and dip can be a possibility.

One person suggested eating for free in Kansas City.

"Go to Kansas City and pretend to be homeless. Burn off of others and get your meals for free," Scott Gustafson, freshman in architecture and design, said.

He said to take an old blanket to enhance the effect and go down by the library or south side of town.

He said it is not the safest way to spend spring break and recommends taking an ATM card in your shoe in case people don't give you money.

For a safer alternative, try learning something new that indirectly relates to one of your classes.

"One Christmas break, I spent a ridiculous amount of time figuring out a problem that a professor had thrown out in a lecture," Weaver said.

Books are cheap, and paper is cheap, so read or write something that you want, not what your professors want, Weaver said.

"Drive around and see all of the stupid little sights."

"Drive around and see all the stupid little sights in Kansas," Vanessa Smith, senior in graphic design, said.

It could be pretty funny if you could get enough people to go, Smith said.

Viewing the Biggest Ball of Twine in Cawker City, Rock City at Minneapolis and the Largest Prairie Dog are a few of the options Smith mentioned.

"Expensive is when you stay for a long time," Sonya Coppinger, junior in apparel and textile marketing, said.

She suggests taking a short trip close to home to save money.

For example, Lake Perry is only two hours away at Ozawkie and you can camp out for a minimal charge.

"It's really cheap to camp out there. Any place that's not far away is good," Coppinger said.

VANESSA SMITH Senior in graphic design

Or you can camp out at Memorial Stadium.

"Chain yourself to the old stadium to protest the parking garage or camp out there," Gustafson said.

Using your ID to get into the swimming pool will save you money on showers. You can get your tent either by borrowing one or buying one at a store, he said.

But to save money, after you're finished with the tent, take it back with your receipt. Tell them you're not satisfied with it and ask for a refund, Gustafson said.

Travel agencies also have advice for spring break activities.

David Garvin, owner of Creative Travel Inc., said the best dollar value is going to Chicago. The round-trip airfare is $105. Take a friend and just get away for a while to visit the museums, restaurants and shops, Garvin said.

"That's a great deal. You just can't beat it," Garvin said.

However, Garvin said that may not be for everyone.

"What is expensive to me may not be to you. That's a relative term," he said.

So what if you don't have plans yet? It's not be too late, but you may have to pay more.

"We're trying to help everyone we can," Myra Pearson, at Kansas State Travel, said.

She said it's best to make your plans early if you want them to be inexpensive.

"Start very, very early to get the bargains. You have to start in the fall, and that's frustrating," Pearson said.

Do you have the necessary forms?

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

Contact your employer now if you have not received your W-2.

That is the advice of LeJuan Shrimplin, owner of H&R Block in Manhattan.

A W-2 is an employer's report of an employee's earnings and the taxes withheld during the previous year. The information on a W-2 is needed for completion of income tax forms.

First, contact your employer to see if there is a problem on that end, Shrimplin said.

Make sure your employer has your current address.

"If the address was wrong and it went back to the employer, the employer will hold it until they hear from the employee," Shrimplin said.

The employee's name and Social Security number should also be verified with the employer, said Janice Lawrence, an employee of the IRS Public Affairs Office in Wichita.

You may contact the IRS, visit a local office or call 1-800-829-1040 for assistance in getting a W-2.

A letter and blank W-2 will be sent to the employer.

Employees are asked to have an employer's name, address and federal employer identification number when they call the IRS.

The federal employer ID number is a big help to the IRS but is not absolutely necessary, Lawrence said.

An employer's federal ID number is sometimes found on check stubs, Lawrence said.

A substitute W-2, Form 4868, may be used if an actual W-2 cannot be obtained, Shrimplin said.

Substitute W-2s are available from the local IRS office or by calling 1-800-829-3676 for IRS publications, Lawrence said.

The publications number gets pretty busy this time of year, Lawrence said.

She said she recommends calling during the mid-morning or mid-afternoon.

Records of wages and salaries are needed to complete a substitute W-2.

The employee must also indicate what efforts were made to obtain a W-2.

"I would recommend very highly that when you go to work for someone, keep records of what you earn," Shrimplin said.

A four-month time extension may also be filled to give more time to sort out problems with W-2s.

An application for an automatic extension of time to file is available from the IRS and at any public library.

Even with a time extension, a person's projected amount of taxes must be mailed by the April 17 deadline, Shrimplin said.

Electronic filing saves time

MICHELLE BELCHER
Collegian

Once again, the income-tax deadline is fast approaching.

For people who remember to fill out their forms around April 14, take a deep breath and relax.

Taxpayers may now file their taxes electronically. Filing electronically saves time and speeds up the process of receiving refunds.

"Last year, 13 million people electronically filed," Robert Wade, spokesman for Beneficial National Bank, said. "The IRS is spending $9 million upgrading their technology."

The service has been available for at least five years, LeJuan Shrimplin, owner of Manhattan H&R Block, said.

Taxpayers have two choices. First, they may prepare their own taxes and then take them to be electronically filed.

They would need to take their W-2 forms, two forms of identification and the completed tax form.

People can have their taxes prepared and then electronically filed. They need to bring all bills, deductions, W-2s and identification.

"Fees vary depending on which product you are processing," Shrimplin said.

Taxpayers may use the Refund Anticipation Loan, where fees are withheld from their refund. At least $300 must be refunded for the process to occur.

They may also choose to have their refund placed directly into a bank account.

Electronic refunds may take anywhere from three days to three to four weeks, Shrimplin said. This is compared to six to eight weeks by mail.

"It's pretty cool. You fill out the form, and it goes directly into your bank account," Josh Nelson, freshman in humanities, said.

Filing electronically is not only convenient, but the IRS prefers you to do it this way.

"The IRS is trying to encourage people to file electronically. I will be honest with you — it is because it saves them work," Shrimplin said.

There are several advantages to filing electronically.

For example, it is very safe and effective.

"If a return is accepted by the IRS, we know it has been received because each one receives a number, much like a Social Security number," Shrimplin said. "The good thing is the taxpayer won't get a letter two years down the road saying we didn't receive your return."

There are also several advantages from a college student's point of view, Wade said.

"If they are looking forward to spring break or just to paying for books, if they file electronically and get a RAL or a partial refund, they then have money to carry them through for a couple of weeks. They still will have money deposited in a couple of weeks," Wade said.

Unfortunately, the whole idea of filing electronically leaves many people skeptical.

"I would rather be there to know what is really going on, to do it myself," Heather Kautz, freshman in pre-nursing, said.

Tom Turner, Manhattan resident, said he doesn't want to spend the money to file electronically.

"I figure I'm going to get the money anyway. It costs me $25 to do it, so I'll save $25," Turner said.

Wade said he thought filing electronically would expand.

Nelson said he thought it's the sign of the times, that the government is finally catching up with technology.

Federal income-tax forms must be sent by April 17, and Kansas income-tax forms must be sent by April 15.

Between here and town where the hills rise up from North Valley
Old oaks stand in a circle alone.
They wave and laugh in the wind, dance like the hoop dancer.
Branches twist trunks turn leaves tremble.
Crazy women in a circle game
no one knows.
I wonder. And watch winter cover them in white shawls gnarled, arthritic limbs slouched, huddled, waiting for spring
and newborn green,
to dance again,
these dancing trees

Fleeting moments

All around, as far as the eye can see a still and immobile city:
ice-covered houses,
streets glazed with slick frost, trees twisted into contorted forms that glaringly repel the harsh morning sun.
A solid world of statues that defies destruction, defies the wane sunlight, the feeble wind;
a frozen world that refuses to disintegrate, whose inhabitants trudge wearily on.

Below, stretching in all directions,
a still and silent shining kingdom:
miniature glass-blown houses,
streets encrusted with glimmering diamonds, trees of crystal bent into magical shapes that playfully reflect the crisp morning sun.
A fragile, icy world that may soon be gone with a ray of golden sunlight, a gentle breath of breeze; an ephemeral world whose end is near but whose inhabitants rush blindly on, unaware...
Unaware of the beauty around them,
of the little time they have to recognize it before it swiftly passes by.

The crystal kingdom below;
You and I its rightful rulers —
A precious, fragile moment to cherish between friends who are aware ...
Aware of the fleeting moments in which true beauty is suspended before it softly passes by.

Worker goofs off on company time

Dear Cassie,

There is a lady who works in our office that continuously screws off. She reads magazines, takes long breaks and gossips with the students and professors who walk into the office.

We brought this to our supervisor's attention, and he admits he "doesn't deal well with confrontation."

I don't think our supervisor realizes how close everyone is to putting his/her name on the transfer list. How can we get our supervisor and co-worker to do their jobs?

Signed, Just Doing Our Job

Dear Just Doing,

In my opinion, confrontation is the best policy. Maybe your co-worker doesn't know what she is doing is annoying and disrupting. Approach her in a non-threatening manner about her behavior.

because they think they have outgrown it," she said.

Caitlin Laura Cash of Manhattan's Eugene Field School was a winner in the second- and third-grade division.

Cash wrote her essay from a book she read for enjoyment, titled "Susanna of the Alamo."

Her essay was the story of a woman who lived during the time of the Alamo and her struggle to survive.

"Susanna was a very brave wife of one of the men who fought in the battles," Cash said.

Cash had visited one of the battlefields of the Alamo and found it an interesting topic to write about.

"I was so surprised that I won. My teacher read the letter that said I won. My classmates were happy for me. They were like, 'great,' and said congratulations to me," Cash said.

Tim Ubel, from Manhattan Middle School, was a winner in the seventh- and eighth-grade division.

Ubel said he decided to follow his teacher's advice and enter the essay contest. His essay topic was Amelia Earhart.

"She was the most famous woman I had ever heard of, and she did a really spectacular thing for the world of aviation," Ubel said.

He said this was his first year to enter the essay contest, and winning was a total surprise.

"I can still enter in high school, so I think I'll probably do it again next year. It was fun," Ubel said.

Other winners were first-grader Lela Waters of Manhattan's Bluemont School, third-grader Joe Ben Wilburn of West Elementary School in Wamego, sixth-graders Alicia Garcia of Paxico Junior High and Liesl Ott of Manhattan Catholic Schools, and eighth-grader Sheri Ludlum of Wamego Middle School.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

New rules will affect party tickets

bers were in for different reasons, and nothing ever developed out of the party, he said.

"In the recent past, I think they've been put together for free press," LeDoux said.

He said candidates have been more interested in generating free press. The Wild Turkees have almost a cult following, but they have traditionally stood for something, LeDoux said.

Jason Dechant, sophomore in pre-law, and a friend also ran for Senate in a party last year.

The Gumbo party was not very successful, Dechant said. He and his friend were not elected, but Dechant said he would be running again this year in a new party.

"The two of us were very naive," he said.

Dechant said they did not have any experience in student government, and they did not put any work into the election.

One thing Dechant said he learned about running as a party is that both members of the party have to put forth the same amount of effort into the election.

An advantage to running with a party is candidates can get their names out a lot more, Schneiter said. Party tickets must use party money equally on all candidates registered in that party, he said.

If a sign is made, all the candidates' names must appear on the poster, and the names must be the same size and lettering.

Members of the party do not have to make equal monetary contributions to the party in order to be on the postings, Otto said. Last year, all members of the party had to make an equal contribution.

Another advantage for party members was listing the candidate's party affiliation next to the name on the ballot, Otto said.

Students who were voting for a friend but could not remember the names of the other members of the party could just look for the party name, he said.

Dechant said students running in a party who make signs together can decrease the amount of advertising on campus. Candidates can put up party material instead of all of them putting up individual postings, he said.

Dechant said he saw the size of parties as a potential problem. If the parties become too large, smaller parties and individual candidates could be squeezed out of the election, he said.

The drawback to advertising with the party is the names will be smaller because of size limitations on the postings, Schneiter said.

One thing that is different this year is parties do not have to file a separate expenditure report. All party expenses will be reported by the individual senators, he said.

If 10 senators are running together and the poster costs $1, then each of the senators would report a 10-cent expense for that poster on their expenditure reports, Schneiter said.

As long as no candidate in the party spends more than $82.50, then everyone is OK, he said.

Student body president and vice president candidates can be members of a political party, but they cannot advertise with the Senate candidates, he said.

Both student body president and vice president teams and Senate candidates can advertise with the party name, but they cannot purchase ads together, Schneiter said.

Last year, parties were allowed to file separate expenditure reports, and the money was separate from the regular spending limits.

"We're hoping that's stopped," Schneiter said. "People are very ingenious about how they get away without doing some of this stuff."

LeDoux said he thought the success of a party was dependent on the party's issue. If the party was based on an issue close to the students, then it would do better, he said.

Troupe teaches grace, beauty of culture through dancing

The Filipino Dance Troupe performed for the group to end the program.

One of the dances was called "Pandanggo Sa Ilaro," or "Dance of the Light." The female dancers held a candle in each hand, and one candle was attached to the top of their heads. This dance is done for weddings and special occasions. The purpose of this dance is to show the grace and beauty of the Filipino culture.

"I miss my culture, and I learned more about my culture by dancing," said Larry Teroy, dancer with the Filipino Dance Troupe.

Souther said he felt the dancing required agility and endurance, and it was also graceful and beautiful.

Vuong Nguyen, freshman in engineering, said he attended the night because he wanted to experience the different cultures and see what they are like compared with his own.

"I wanted to get a better understanding of my culture, too, because you should understand your culture and never forget it," he said.

Two movies will be shown as a part of Asian American Awareness Month. "Heaven and Earth" will be shown at 7 p.m. Tuesday, and "The Joy Luck Club" will be shown at 7 p.m. Thursday. Both movies will be in the K-State Union Little Theater.

Candidates focus on resident input, communication vote and then use that opinion when they cast their votes in the election, Trowbridge said.

Another team that is unofficially running together is Jason Oblander, junior in history and political science, and Charisse Wilson, senior in pre-law and history.

However, if one does not get elected, the other member of the ticket will keep the position if elected.

"Our general goal for ARH is the same. If I could better implement my ideas as vice president, I see no reason to drop down," Wilson said. "I'm open to working with anyone, but I prefer to work with Jason."

Wilson said the executive board has a lot of power, and she would like to see that power returned to the halls.

"I would like to see more reps in the halls because the organization really belongs to the students. With better representation, the power would go back to the residents in the halls," she said.

Wilson said she would like to have standing committees that meet on a monthly basis to allow more student input rather than having one decision maker.

Wilson also said she wants to begin administering surveys about residence hall life and issues.

"We can find out what they want out of ARH rather than what we think they want," Wilson said.

Wilson's platform also includes a change in the way KSUARH grades the residence hall programs.

Wilson said she believes the system is unintentionally biased in judging because the executive board does the decision making. She said she would prefer to see the National Residence Hall Honorary do the job.

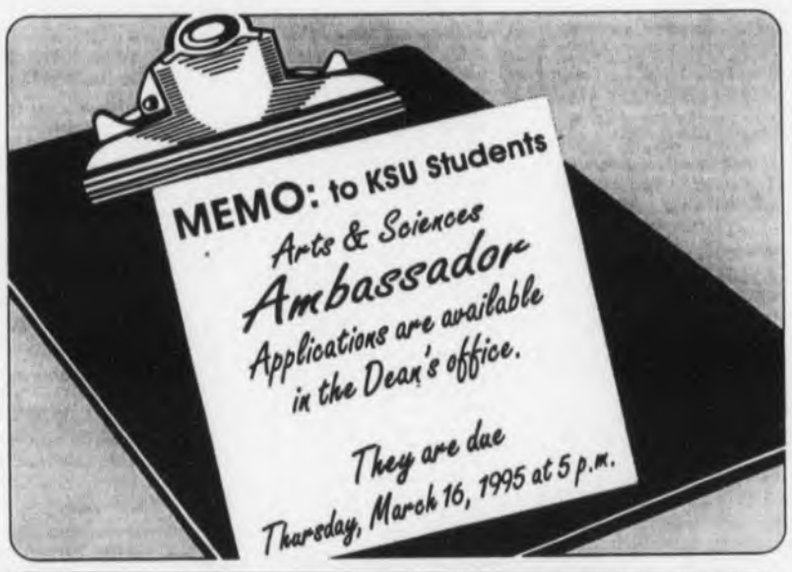
Oblander said the NRHH is the organization that does most of the judging on other campuses.

In addition, Oblander said he would like to change the financial power of KSUARH so the general body helps the executive board in making some of the financial decisions.

"I just feel the reps aren't involved in the decision-making process at this time. The reps are used primarily as gophers to relay information, and I think they could be used more in the process," he said.

Scott Hagemeister, junior in sociology/criminal justice and a KSUARH presidential candidate, said communication is a problem between the halls and KSUARH.

"I saw a lot of tension between halls and ARH. They had a lot of misinformation and were blaming ARH," he said.



Hagemeister said many see KSUARH as a bureaucratic system rather than a student government.

Student involvement at KSUARH meetings is also very important, he said.

"Even if you don't have a hall position, attend the meetings," he said.

There are eight other positions that need filling, but only one candidate is running for each of those positions.

The voting procedure is on a slide-down scale. For example, if a presidential candidate is not elected, the person may then run for vice president.

Forget the drugs;

Leary now preaching the virtues of virtual reality

by Sara Smith

Turning on and tuning in to virtual reality will be an opportunity for K-State Tuesday night.

Dropping out is optional.

Dr. Timothy Leary will speak at 7 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

His lecture, titled "Using Virtual Reality Technology to Free Your Mind," will incorporate a videotape of visual images designed to take the audience to a better understanding of the speech, said Sarah Hadley, program adviser for the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

Leary is expected to take the audience step by step through virtual-reality techniques advocated by himself and others in the futurist field of psychology.

Hadley said although the audience might expect Leary to focus on his studies of the hallucinogen LSD, that is no longer what he represents.

"That's what he was back in the '60s, but that's not what he is now," she said.

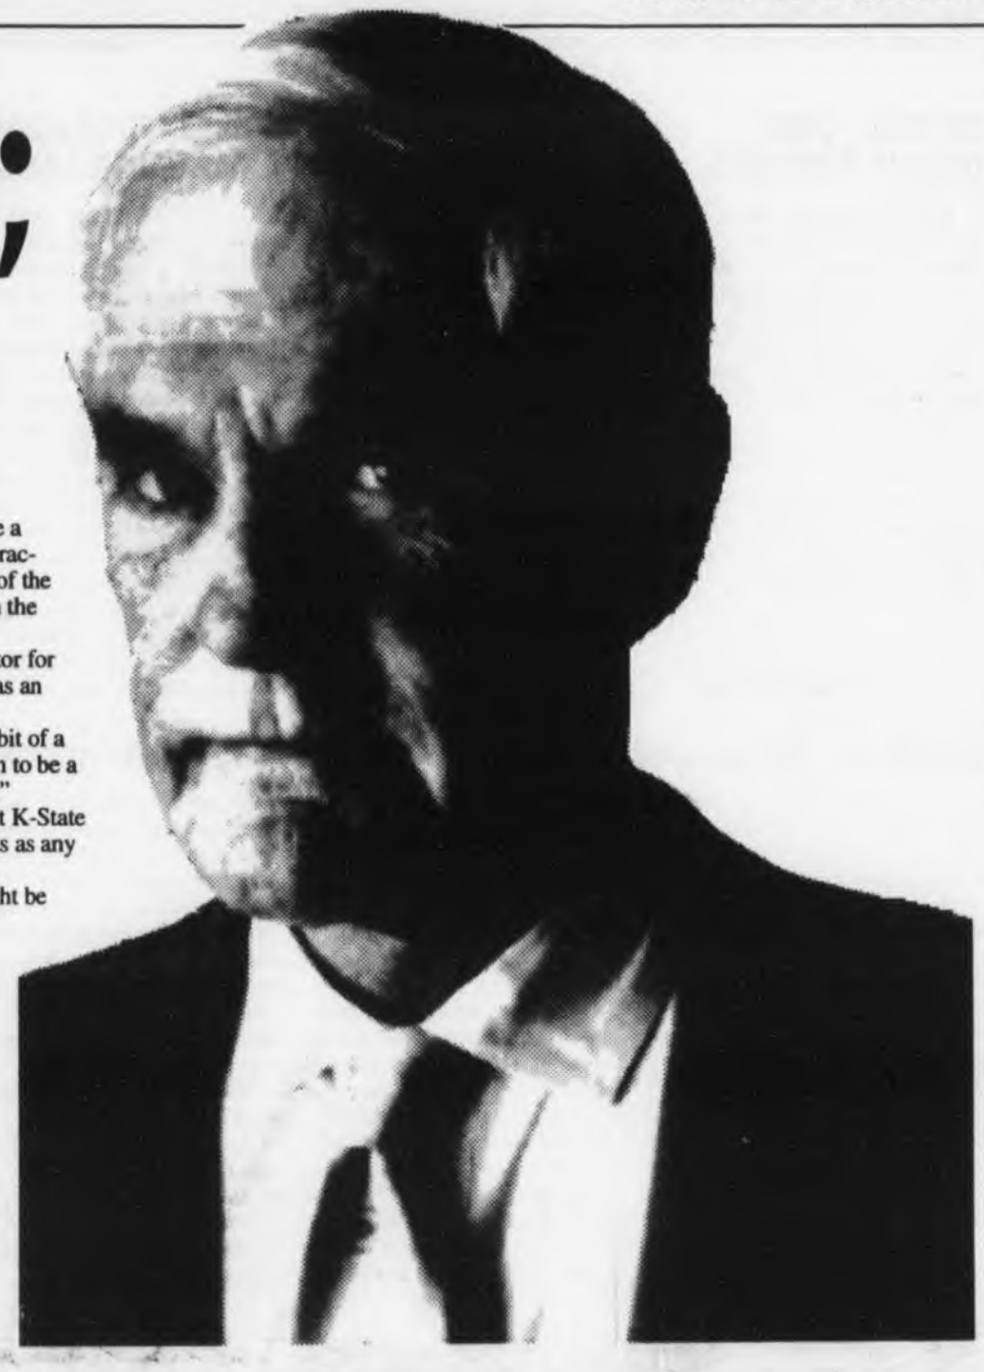
Hadley said she thought Leary had something to say to the generation of the '90s and the one before it.

Leary's lecture, a part of Free Your Mind Week, is expected to draw between 1,800 and 2,000 people, said Pat Carney, chairman of the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee.

"We're expecting attendance to be better than Joe Clark, and he was just under 1,700," Carney said.

Carney said he hopes Leary will inspire students to take another look at the system.

"Maybe it's time for students on this campus to challenge authority," he said.



Leary, who coined the phrase "tune in, turn on, drop out" abandoned his promotion of mind-altering drugs to become a pioneer of virtual reality and interactive computer software as a part of the futurist psychology movement in the '80s.

Ann Claussen, program director for the K-State Union, said Leary was an important figure in pop culture.

"Certainly, he's considered a bit of a legend," she said. "I consider him to be a fairly important figure in history."

Claussen also said she thought K-State would be as open to Leary's ideas as any other campus.

"I think any college town might be open to Dr. Leary," she said. "A lot of people have considered him to be on the cutting edge of a lot of different ideas."

Who the heck is Timothy Leary, you ask?

Dr. Timothy Leary was a professor at Harvard University in 1961 when he and a colleague discovered the "spiritual visions" of psychedelic drugs and began experimenting with hallucinogens, including LSD. The two were fired, because their experiments involved undergraduates, and they began a "drug-based religion," the League for Spiritual Discovery. He is best know for urging students to "tune in, turn on and drop out."

In an interview in 1969, Leary said, he saw himself as the leader of a spiritual revolution that would overthrow "original sin, the Book of Genesis and the whole Judeo-Christian bad trip."

"There is some possibility that my friends and I have illuminated more people than anyone else in history," he said.

Funding changes made before elections

The Student Senate Allocations Committee has revised the funding regulations. Some big changes are moving the date of spring allocations and defining where organizations should go to apply for funding.

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

The Allocations Committee released revised funding guidelines to Student Senate after working on them for six months.

The committee presented the revised funding regulations to Senate for approval Thursday.

"I've felt like there were a lot of problems in there," Ben Clouse, allocations chair, said.

Clouse said the regulations did not reflect the way Senate makes decisions about allocations.

"The first thing changed was the timing," Clouse said.

Allocations used to be done once a year, and they were very close to the elections. Clouse said they moved spring allocations a couple of weeks earlier to keep them from becoming an election issue.

During the spring round of allocations, Clouse often reminded senators not to consider the views of groups requesting funding in deciding to give them money. That section was taken out of the revised regulations.

A big change defines where organizations should go to receive money.

Bryndon Meinhardt, Privilege Fee Committee chairman, said he helped define the role of college councils and the Sports Club Council.

Organizations needing money for fine arts programming or exhibits should request money from the Fine Arts Council. Academic or professional groups should go to their college council. General organizations not referred to other sources will have their budget requests reviewed by the Allocations Committee, Clouse said.

"It was a needed change," he said.

Many students were frustrated because there was no clear guide to where organizations should apply for money, he said.

"Before, I had to make the decision," Clouse said. "I was not comfortable with doing that."

The Allocations Committee and Senate have a difficult time getting enough information about groups sponsored by college councils to make informed decisions on funding, Clouse said.

"College councils have a better idea about the funding needs of their students," he said.

The regulations for travel allocations were also reworked.

"The way it was worded, it prohibited travel," he said.

Senate was funding some travel expenses anyway, Clouse said. The intent was not to prohibit travel, so the revised regulations clarify when travel will be funded by Senate, he said.

Organizations will not be allowed to receive funding from more than one line-item fee, Clouse said. The clause will not affect groups who already have two line-item fees established for their equipment or budget needs, he said.

For example, the Office of Student Activities and Services, which has its own line-item fee, cannot receive money from the student activity fee as well, Meinhardt said.

Clouse said the clause was written to keep organizations from applying, for example, to the Fine Arts Council for money and then applying to Senate through the allo-

▶ WOMEN'S MONTH

Women work more, control less property than men do

STEPHANIE STEENBOCK
Collegian

Women make up half the world's population but do two-thirds of the work, earn one-tenth of the world's income and control 1 percent of the world's property.

Marlene Howell, professor of women's studies, discussed the plight of women in the world today as part of International Women's Month on Monday.

Amnesty International sponsored the event at Smurthwaite House.

In 1980, the United Nations designed a conference specifically to address women's issues.

Howell shared statistics from the conference to show the role of women in society.

Howell said women's issues are about human rights.

"We can't ignore how sexism plays a role in defining our lives," she said.

In 1995, these numbers have not significantly changed, she said.

Howell said feminism is saying women have had enough, are tired and want to create something new for themselves.

One group of wealthy American women has done just that.

These women started a business called Women's World Banking. Their business underwrites loans for women in poor countries who want to start their own businesses but do not have the resources and credit to do so.

She said this business had been around for about 10 years and has yet to have a loan go into default.

"This speaks volumes about the possibility for changes to happen and for women to work together to empower one another," Howell said.

She said there are many questions women must ask, such as with whom women want equality and the place for women in the world today.

Jennifer Arnett, senior in political science and modern languages, said she thinks it is important for people to become aware of women's situations globally.

"Women's issues haven't disappeared. You can't separate women's issues from human-rights issues," Arnett said.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Scott Keely performed a one-man show depict the Shanachie, which was a turn-of-the century Irish storyteller, in Forum Hall Monday night.

▶ UPC EVENT

Man teaches Irish spirit through stories

REBECCA SHULZ
Collegian

A light flickered behind the curtain as the storyteller meandered his way onto the stage through the darkness.

He called out into the audience and the darkness to try to orient himself as to where and when he was.

The Shanachie, an Irish storyteller, said his appearance before the audience was due to the little people, who had transported him through time. It was his duty to tell his tale to the audience so they too might believe in the little people.

"The Shanachie: An Irish Storyteller" was a one-man show performed by Scott Keely on Monday in Union Forum Hall. Keely was invited to perform at K-State by the Union Program Council in connection with Free Your Mind Week and St. Patrick's Day. About 250 people attended.

Christy Drake, UPC chairperson of special events, said Keely was highly recommended by other schools and sounded like a good performer for Free Your Mind Week.

Keely, who also wrote the script for the performance, depicted a Shanachie, a turn-of-the-century Irish storyteller whose purpose was to spread local history, genealogy, beliefs and mythology.

The Shanachie used humor, myths, ballads and anecdotes about banshees, pookas and leprechauns to entertain and inform his audience.

The storyteller began his performance by explaining how upset the little people were, which was the reason he was there.

Taking a few swigs from his whiskey jug, the Shanachie started to weave his tales. Keely said he wrote and performed the Shanachie to share a little Irish spirit and an understanding of part of the Irish culture with his audience.

"I'm trying to remain true to the Irish spirit of the Shanachie," Keely said.

Keely tried to appeal to the audience by talking to them and gazing convincingly into the crowd, admitting he often saw the little people in the audience. He encouraged the audience members to let down their guard and to start to believe in the little people.

First, Keely told a tale about Dennis O'Brien and the leprechauns. He proceeded to sing a few Irish ballads.

The storyteller then invited the audience to sing "Jug o' Punch" with him.

"It don't seem fair that I be having all the fun," Keely said.

After a short intermission, the storyteller returned and picked up his guitar and whiskey jug like he had never left.

"Well, I'm back, and I can see you can hardly contain your joy of seeing me," Keely said.

The storyteller finished the show by explaining what pookas and banshees were. He said pookas are mischievous spirits and banshees are spirits warning of death.

Keely closed the show by blessing the audience and wishing them well in life.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ NAME OF FORT RILEY SOLDIER RESPONSIBLE FOR SHOOTING RELEASED

The soldier who killed himself and another soldier and wounded a third in a March 2 shooting on Custer Hill has been identified.

The Army released the name of Pfc. Maurice Wilford Monday morning after his relatives had been notified.

Sgt. Greg Binford, Army spokesman, said Wilford purchased a shotgun off-post because he was angry at a supervisor.

"Those are the facts we have from the preliminary investigation," Binford said.

"It is still an ongoing investigation, and as more updates become available, we will release that information," he said.

During Wilford's open firing at Custer Hill, Pvt. James Evans, 21, originally of McGuire Air Force Base in central New Jersey, was killed. Staff Sgt. Stanley Ellis, 28, of Griffin, Ga., was shot twice in the left arm.

Ellis might not regain full use of his arm, Binford said.

Wilson, a member of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry, had been stationed at the post since January 1994.

▶ SOLDIER FOUND DEAD IN BARRACKS

A Fort Riley soldier was found dead in his barracks room on Custer Hill Sunday from an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound.

Pfc. Scott Gundy was with Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry, and had been at Fort Riley since Oct. 21.

Gundy, 22, of Tacoma, Wash., was a cavalry scout.

"The incident is still under investigation by the criminal investigation division," Deb Skidmore, public information officer, said.

▶ PILLS RAISE RISK OF HEART ATTACKS

NEW YORK (AP) — Patients concerned about a report that certain blood-pressure drugs might raise the risk of a heart attack by 60 percent should continue their medication and consult with their doctors, researchers said Monday.

The report, presented Friday at an American Heart Association meeting, prompted thousands of calls to researchers and doctors from patients taking the drugs, called calcium channel blockers.

The generic names of the drugs are nifedipine, diltiazem and verapamil. They are sold under such brand names as Adalat, Calan, Cardizem, Dilacor, Isoptin, Procardia and Verelan.

▶ CLEANER GASOLINE HAS CAUSED ILLNESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — A cleaner burning gasoline used by millions is among the most efficient ways to cut air pollution, but there is a growing controversy over whether it makes people sick.

A conference on the toxicity of gasoline Monday included several papers purporting to show that an additive called MTBE causes cancer in animals at high doses, although no link between the animal tests and humans was made.

Critics of the gasoline, which includes MTBE to increase its oxygen content, said complaints from motorists about illnesses after using the gasoline have been frequent enough to raise concern.

▶ HOUSE BILL WOULD GIVE $449 MILLION TO KANSAS BOARD OF REGENTS

TOPEKA (AP) — The House was to take a final vote Monday on a proposed budget for the state university system that made relatively modest cuts in Gov. Bill Graves' spending recommendations.

Passage would send the bill to the Senate. It contains about $449 million in state tax dollars for the Kansas Board of Regents and its institutions for the 12 months beginning July 1.

The vote came a day after the House debated and tentatively approved the bill. It contains about $5.8 million less for the universities than Graves proposed.

The action in the House also came a day after its Appropriations Committee endorsed a proposed budget for the state Department of Education, which distributes state aid to local school districts. It would appropriate more than $1.73 billion in state tax dollars, about $7.7 million more than recommended by Graves.

During both debates, conservatives failed to further their goal of cutting sales and motor-vehicle taxes significantly. But at the same time, Democrats failed to add more money for universities and community colleges.

Conservative House Republicans have a goal to remove $100 million from Graves' budget recommendations and essentially hold state spending flat. If they can do it, the state can cut sales and motor-vehicle taxes as much as conservatives would like.

To make good, conservatives would have to get the Legislature to trim $50.1 million from Graves' recommendations for the Department of Education and another $13.7 million from his proposals for state universities.

But even they acknowledge they haven't had much success.

"I'm going to get an inferiority complex before too long," Rep. Robin Jennison, R-Healy, a conservative and chairman of the Appropriations Committee, joked to colleagues.

Edgar Cruz plays a classical guitar during his one-hour performance at the K-State Union Monday afternoon.

Guitarist awes crowd with ability, style

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

Guitarist Edgar Cruz performed songs ranging from classical Renaissance pieces to Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody" in the K-State Union Courtyard Monday.

Students strolling through the Union stopped to listen to the wide variety of sounds Cruz created on his acoustic guitar.

Cruz used no pick but instead used four of his fingernails to play the bass, rhythm and lead guitar parts of many of the songs he played.

Using this style of playing, Cruz said, is four times as difficult, but you can do four times as much, and it sounds four times better.

The crowd was definitely impressed, especially those who had experience playing the guitar.

"The guy's phenomenal," Brad Hobson, pre-pharmacy student, said.

Jason Nation, Manhattan resident, said Cruz was one of the best guitarists he had ever seen.

"You have a different appreciation if you play the guitar," Nation said.

While Cruz's ability might have been humbling to aspiring guitarists, he was actually quite modest. After performing a super-fast Spanish piece that drew applause from the crowd, Cruz said he made 100 mistakes.

Cruz, who is from Oklahoma, has released three albums of songs ranging from Bach and Beethoven to Christmas songs and 1930s and '40s pieces. Cruz also knows many more contemporary selections. In fact, Cruz said he knows more than 400 songs.

Cruz built up his repertoire of songs in part by playing accompaniment to his father, who plays guitar in a Mexican restaurant in Wichita. Cruz said people would request songs to be played at their table.

Because people would request all different types of songs, Cruz said it was necessary to know many selections. Cruz said his father knows more than 1,000 songs.

Cruz's selections Monday included "Live and Let Die" by Paul McCartney; Renaissance pieces by Bach and Beethoven; "In the Mood" by Glenn Miller; and "La Bamba," which had the crowd clapping along.

Umpire relates stories of baseball, gay life

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

He made baseball history when Pete Rose shoved him in a 1988 Mets-Reds game.

He again grabbed national attention when he got fired from his job as a major-league umpire because of his sexual orientation.

David Pallone gave a lecture titled "Behind the Mask" Monday afternoon at the Union Little Theatre as part of Union Program Council's Free Your Mind Week.

After a brief introduction about his struggles as a gay man in the world of baseball, Pallone opened up the floor for questions from the audience.

The crowd, which consisted of about 40 students, asked questions about everything from the baseball strike to Pallone's experience with coming out.

During the 1-1/2-hour question-and-answer session, Pallone said he led a double life in baseball until he came to grips with his sexuality.

Pallone said he became intrigued with baseball as an 11-year-old when his father took him to his first game. Eight years later, he walked onto a professional team as an umpire and later was hired and fired in 1988 by the major league because he was accused of being involved in a teen-age sex ring.

"I can't tell you how much I miss baseball," Pallone said. "I wanted to be who I was, and I had my dream taken away from me."

After he was fired in 1988, Pallone toured college campuses and wrote a novel titled "Behind the Mask."

"I didn't write it just for the money," Pallone said. "I wrote it purely for me and to get the record straight for my life."

Pallone said his book touched the lives of people across the country.

"I got 50,000 letters, and I am still continuing to get them," Pallone said. "I had mothers, fathers, young, old, straight and gay to thank me for something I thought I was just doing for myself."

Because he was fired, Pallone never was able to reach his ultimate goal of going to the World Series, but he still managed to reach his dream.

He received a letter from a 17-year-old who was contemplating suicide but decided against it when he saw Pallone on "Donahue."

"When I got a letter like that, I knew I had reached the World Series," Pallone said. "I didn't get a ring, but no ring could ever save someone's life."

Pallone said he has gone across the country to spread his message but has noticed hate in all of the college campuses.

"Posters with my picture on it have been defaced or torn down," Pallone said. "Organizations don't want me to appear. How do they expect to learn if they don't open their eyes?"

Frank Axell, graduate student in college and student personnel and former president of the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, said he applauds UPC for having enough courage to bring in a speaker like Pallone.

"People stereotype gays as being in the-

IN OUR OPINION

by the Collegian Editorial Board

Greeks need to remember neighbors this week

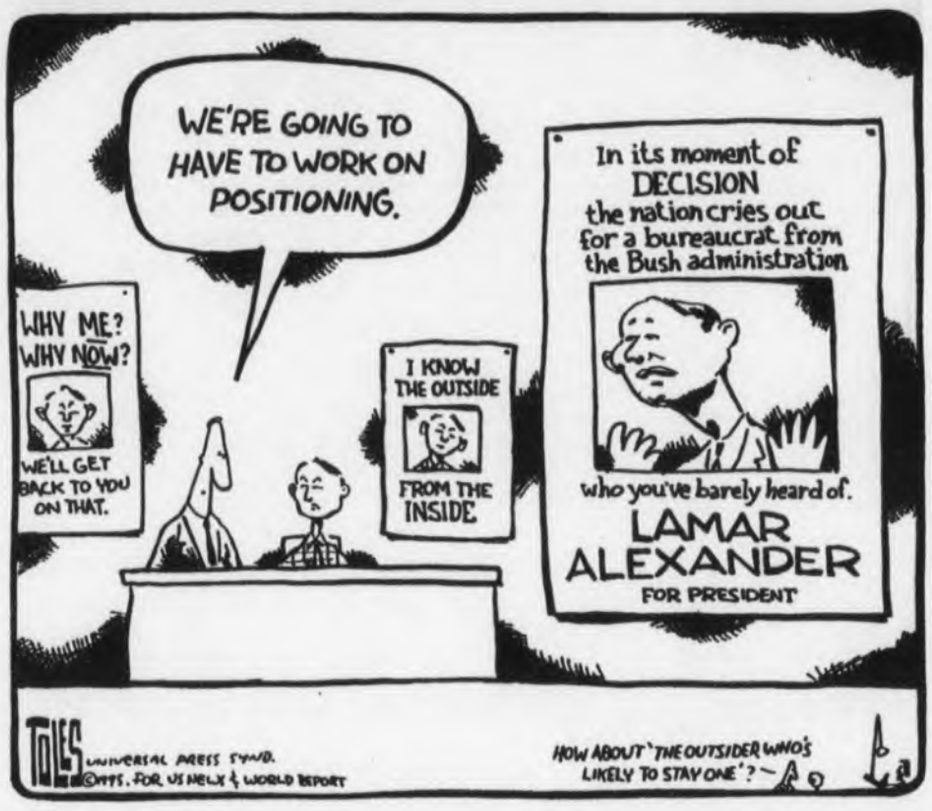
These activities may not necessarily be bad, but they can be disruptive to other members of the Manhattan community.

Homecoming bid week is a fun time for members of the greek community.

It is time in which fraternity and sorority partners are picked by mutual selection for homecoming events next fall.

Some activities for the week include serenading, toilet papering and even panty raids.

These activities may not necessarily be bad, but they can be disruptive to other members of the Manhattan community.



Both Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council, the groups governing activities for homecoming, discourage acts that would break the 11 p.m. noise ordinance. Also, they encourage greek houses not to use items such as toilet paper that could blow into other people's yards.

In addition to this being homecoming bid week, it is also mid-term week for many K-State students. This is another reason to keep the noise level down.

The reputation of the greek community is easily tarnished. Homecoming bidding activities could easily worsen the opinions of non-greek members in the community.

For the good of both parties, the greek community should have a good time, but it should also be considerate of its neighbors.

K-State Union needs parking garage

STEFFANY CARREL

GUEST COLUMN

The parking garage.

Sure, we all have an opinion on it.

Students, faculty, staff and administrators. We are all stakeholders here, and we all have a voice. But before we make up our collective mind on this sensitive issue, I'd like to put some more food for thought on the table of discussion.

First, just to simplify things, I will tell you that I believe the parking garage issue is really two separate issues — two separate questions that we are grappling with.

On the one hand, we have the question of whether we even need to construct a parking garage — ultimately, does K-State have a parking problem?

The other half of this dilemma is if K-State does indeed have a parking problem and a parking garage is the proposed solution, where do we put the gosh-darned thing?

Today I do not want to touch on location. Don't get me wrong ... I know how important it is to discuss the "where" of the parking garage, but for today's intensive purposes I want to restrict my discussion to the question of the real-life need of a parking garage at K-State.

I will state right off the bat that I believe there is a need for a solution to the "parking problem," as we've all come to know it.

And honestly, a parking garage is the best fit for our needs.

K-State is essentially landlocked. We can't "go" any farther to the south, east or west. Perhaps north, but even that option for general University expansion is limited. So what do you do when your lateral space is limited? Why, you build "up," of course.

So a parking garage, as opposed to another parking lot, is logical.

Now I want to tell you why I believe we need to solve our parking woes.

Aside from student parking needs or faculty/staff parking needs, we are missing a rather large constituent of the parking issue: the K-State Union.

The Union's point of view in the midst of this discussion has been largely absent, and unfortunately so. If you will recall, the students of K-State recently made a hefty commitment to the Union in the form of a semesterly $25 fee to support the Union Enhancement and Expansion Project.

In light of this commitment and of the large role the Union plays in the community and beyond, it is crucial that we hear its side of the story.

The Union estimates that as many as 10 events are lost monthly due to insufficient parking. This means departmental conferences, community functions and other conference groups. Let's look at what kind of revenue just one mid-size conference can generate for the Union.

Imagine a conference, "The Midwest Regional Nose-blowers Society," and imagine that they, with their 300 members, decide to come to the K-State Union to hold their annual meeting.

It will be a typical two-day conference requiring meeting rooms, both large and small, exhibit space, refreshments, two catered lunches and one catered dinner.

The revenue from the room-rental fees and delegate fees alone could gross between $2,000 and $3,000, depending on how many breakout rooms and which of the large meeting rooms they need. Now consider the catering for this event, and we add another $6,900 to the pot.

Further, our conference guests will undoubtedly visit the Union bookstore. You can see the snowball effect. Now obviously there are expenses (food, labor) to cover for this conference, but any "extra" money generated by the Union goes right back into the Union ... not to line the pockets of those running the show, but back into the Union itself for its improvement.

This money goes back into Union operation, maintenance and repairs; back into providing services for students and faculty; and back into helping support non-revenue generating programs and the Union Program Council.

The money earned from our dear Nose-blowing friends is like a check ing account that supports the big picture of the Union. And if the Union can support itself, life is good.

We lose customers, we lose conferences, but more profoundly, we seriously limit the Union's ability to reach out to the community.

The more revenue created from these sorts of internal means, the less likely the Union is going to have to appeal to the students for help on, say, a Union Enhancement Project ...

Gets you thinking, doesn't it?

Right now, we have University departmental conferences that would prefer to go to other locations here in Manhattan than to come to our Union because of parking.

Right now, we have groups planning their events to coincide with spring break or groups who simply won't come at all when the students are here because of parking.

We just lost a banquet in January because the reserver thought he had reserved on a day when classes were not in session. However, classes were in session that day, so the event was cancelled here because of parking.

Aside from conferences, customers of the Union Bookstore would rather go to Aggieville or downtown than to "fight the parking lot."

More terrifying yet, customers have come in several times asking the bookstore to call the police to break up a fight over the parking spaces.

We need a parking garage.

Every day, the Union is affected by the parking problem.

We lose customers, we lose conferences, but more profoundly, we seriously limit the Union's ability to reach out to the community.

And in that failing, we at K-State lose as well.

Steffany Carrel is the public relations coordinator for the K-State Union.

Return of spring should renew spirits

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

The first real spring rain has fallen. I can smell it coming, rolling up over the burned-out prairies like some biblical prophecy of doom in fistfuls of blue-grey clouds.

I love that smell. It reminds me of fresh, baked bread or the cinnamon rolls my mother would make for me when I was a child. It makes me hungry for something I can't really name in a deep down part of me.

I long for freedom, or maybe it's liberty. Maybe it's just a big, bean burrito with homemade salsa. I can't really put a name to the craziness. I just have this lunatic craving to shove whole handfuls of fresh dirt into my mouth to fill the gaping holes winter punches in my abdomen every time.

I can resist it, but only barely.

It has been a bruising winter, and I have been slow to recover from it.

After the last snowstorm, everyone lost their minds, and I especially became unlovable for a time.

My temper was short, my concentration was nil and my attitude more abrasive than one of a 400-pound gorilla with hemorrhoids and a hangover.

I am only now beginning to behave like a human being and look forward to spring break to make my transformation complete.

It is a time needed by all, I think. There is something about a long, cold spell that kills the decent, civilized part of us all. Around mid-February, forbearance goes the way of disco, and courtesy is abandoned.

This winter seemed especially difficult, maybe because spring faked us out for a week there. Almost everyone I knew suddenly grew fangs.

The newsroom became like an ongoing scene from "A Clockwork Orange" meets "All the President's Men": cut-throat and nasty.

I got used to cleaning up the blood off the floor, but do any of you realize how hard it is to get rid of a body?

I think some of my professors have barely kept their tempers through sheer practice and professionalism.

I know I don't have that kind of talent.

I wouldn't have been at all surprised to find out my own students were plotting to have Scotch slipped into my Willie Mug, just to put me in a better humor.

I admit, I'd considered doing so for some of them.

But now, with the barest trace of deep, moist earth coming out in the air, the pagan in me assumes it will not continue.

It is that instinctual part of us all, who remembers when mud meant "home" and spring meant more food will reassert itself.

We'll all take a deep breath for the first time since November, slough off the old skin and spin round right in the new one.

We'll all go away, have a party or get some sleep, eat like we want to, when we want to.

Then, we'll come back fresh and make friends with one another again.

I hope.

Erin Mansur-Smith is a senior in English, theater and pre-law.

Desecration of Memorial Stadium isn't a parking solution

WADE SISSON

GUEST COLUMN

Students of K-State, huddle up!

Memorial Stadium needs us, for a plan to build a parking garage in the middle of this monument to war dead is in the works.

Don't believe what they are telling you — that Memorial Stadium is just an option in adding those precious parking spaces.

Share with your student leaders and administrators what the majority of you believe — that desecrating Memorial Stadium is not an option.

Perhaps we have forgotten the basic lesson of Memorial Stadium. Let's learn again from the majesty of this building before we make an uncorrectable mistake.

As its name implies, the stadium is a memorial to our fellow students, 48 of whom gave their lives in World War I.

Kansas State Agricultural College football coach Charles Bachman put it best when speaking to 2,000 students on April 25, 1922.

"It is because the stadium is itself a manifestation — an outward and visible sign of loyalty in its most superb form. Our soldiers have given the highest proof of loyalty that a man can give, and in dedicating this memorial to them, we are but faintly echoing their noblest deeds. They made a great sacrifice for you and for me, and we are now privileged to show our gratitude by erecting to their memory this monument of loyalty.

"Do you realize that you cannot have loyalty without sacrifice? You can never appreciate this college and what it has done for you until you have done a service for it — until you have given something to it, or made a sacrifice for it.

"Give so that you may be more loyal to your college as students today and as alumni tomorrow. So that when you return, you may point with pride at this stately monument and say, 'I helped.'"

On that day in 1922, the students did help. They raised $76,000 in pledges toward the $500,000 goal.

It was student activism that created this memorial in 1922, and it is student activism that will preserve it now.

It was student activism that created this memorial in 1922, and it is student activism that will preserve it now.

In helping Memorial Stadium, we can give something back to our University and show once again our gratitude to our fellow students who made the ultimate sacrifice by giving their lives to their country.

Memorial Stadium was dedicated lest we forget about the courage and sacrifice of those who came before us. We must show that we have not forgotten.

It is as President F. David Farrell said: "The complete experience of giving one's life for one's country can only be imagined. The living can only guess at the significance of the supreme sacrifice. But they can acknowledge whatever memorials they conceive as wholly inadequate and their debt much greater than can be told."

In the long history of K-State, the students have always stood up for our campus buildings when needed. It's our turn to contribute to this tradition of preservation.

One day, we'll be able to visit Memorial Stadium and repeat the words of those who gave us that gift some 70 years ago: "I helped."

Article portrayed sources badly

Dear editor,

I wish to express my concern about how the article, "Dating a Greek from an Outsider's Point of View," was written. I read the article when it came out on Wednesday morning and was appalled. After several readings, thinking I may have misinterpreted what was written, I noticed that the stories that Heather and I gave had somehow become twisted.

I said nothing to incriminate the house or its members in any way. The message that I gave became warped to sound like everyone who does not drink or does not date a woman from a sorority is shunned. Basically, the message conveyed was the house is a very cruel place where members are out to get one another. That could not be further from the truth. Theta Xi is one of the nicest places to be. We never try to influence a brother to drink or date another Greek as there is no reason for them to influence a brother one way or another. The men in the house are allowed to have their own type of social life.

When the article came out, people approached me and told me that this did not sound anything like me. I had to agree. I apologize to anyone this article may have hurt. If I had known this was going to happen, I would have declined the interview.

It has been called to my attention that this is not the first time that something like this has happened. If it is true, then I believe the Collegian needs to revise the way it writes its articles. My idea of journalism is to tell the truth as it is. There are enough events going on around us in the world, which should keep the media from sensationalism.

Why so much homosexuality?

Dear editor,

Is it just me, or has anyone else noticed the overwhelming number of articles concerning homosexuality in the Collegian? I think that it is odd that I can recognize Kevyn Jacobs' picture and can guess, in general, what he has written about.

I have also noticed that his articles are also quite lengthy and take up a lot of space. I am by no means a homophobic person, just one that is wondering why our paper uses so much space for articles concerning homosexuality. I lost interest after the first couple that I read. It is obvious that Kevyn Jacobs is a courageous young man for writing about things that concern him and his lifestyle, but the guy needs to expand his cache of possible topics. What's next? How the color of your car determines sexual preference?

According to the Collegian, Kevyn is an art major. This is fortunate because jobs for homosexuality columnists are probably fairly scarce. If he wants to dabble in journalism, ask him to expand his audience. We all need to be educated about many of the things that he has written about, but the space that he is taking up could be used to learn about a larger variety of things. Besides, many of us aren't reading his stuff anymore.

Bible should be taken literally

Dear editor,

I'm writing in response to a column in the opinion section that was written by Deb Taylor, titled, "Intolerance Toward Gays is a Sign of Hatred" that was in the March 7, 1995, edition of the Collegian. Something we all need to understand is why "Christians are not tolerant of any opposing views?"

In the column, Deb Taylor writes, "They [Christians] are 'completely intolerant' of any view which does not fall in complete alignment with their literal interpretation of the Bible." It doesn't take someone to interpret the Bible to say that homosexuality is wrong, and if it says that it is wrong (which it does) how could we read it any other way but literally?

I am a Christian, and I believe that God is like a father to me. What I mean to say is that when He says "no" to something, He knows that the consequences of doing the action will be very detrimental to us. For instance, if a father tells his son not to touch the burner of a stove that is on, he does so not because he hates his son. In fact, he loves his son so much that he doesn't want his son to suffer the painful consequence. In the same way, God loves every single individual on this earth, and He knows that homosexuality eventually is like that hot burner.

Before I close, I want to say that God loved us enough that He voluntarily sent his only son to die for all of us because we willingly have lied, cheated, murdered, were involved with homosexuality, etc. (which is basically a direct slap in the face of the One who made a sacrifice for you).

So if someone did that much for you, why would you just slap them in the face saying, "I have the right to suffer eternal damnation in Hell"?

How about a Men's Month?

Dear editor,

I would like to commend Erin Mansur-Smith's column in the Feb. 28 issue of the Collegian. I would just like to add a few items that her column seemed to miss.

When a man builds an Ark that saves the entire animal kingdom and the human race during an immense flood, then there should be an International Men's Month.

When hundreds of men are drafted and sent to a country half a world away to fight for the freedom of people they do not know, and hundreds of thousands of those men are killed and wounded in action or taken prisoner, then maybe we should have an International Men's Month.

When men are wrongly accused of sexual harassment in the workplace, wrongly accused of rape and child abuse, when men are sexually harassed in the workplace, then we should institute a Men's Month.

When men are afraid to tell a woman that she looks attractive, or ask a woman out for a drink or dinner for fear of harassment, then could we have a Men's Month?

When men have the visitation rights to see their children, and when men have their homes, cars and money taken away from them in divorce cases, then we should have an International Men's Month.

When men have their genitals cut off while they are sleeping and are abused physically and emotionally in the home, we should have a month dedicated to men.

When men are always assumed to be violent and immature people incapable of working out their problems without violence, you-know-what will happen.

When men discover cures for diseases that plague the world, strive to eliminate famine in the world, try to give freedom to those oppressed by a heartless dictator whose main goal is to eliminate an entire culture from the face of the planet, found a country based on the idea that all people are created equal, discover electricity and the modern technology that make this world a better place for everyone and institute places of higher learning like universities and museums, then maybe, just maybe, we could find it in our hearts to designate an International Men's Month.

When men ... Wait a second, I thought I was writing about a future time, but I just realized that all these things have happened. I'm sorry, Erin, I guess you really did miss quite a few important points. I'm surprised you didn't come across a few of these points during all the research you've done. The title "May as International Men's Month" has a nice ring to it, wouldn't you agree?

Three K-Staters earn all-America honors

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Three athletes earned all-America honors at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships Saturday at Indianapolis.

Gwen Wentland, Belinda Hope and Karissa Owens all finished among the top eight Americans at the meet.

Wentland placed second in the high jump with a leap of 6 feet 3 inches.

UCLA's Amy Acuff won the event with a leap of 6'5".

"I wasn't prepared for her to jump as high as she did," Wentland said.

"I thought if I jumped 6'3" I would win it, but she had a really great day."

Wentland had her best performance of the season the previous week at the U.S. Indoor National Championships with a height of 6'5".

Hope continued to improve in the 400 meters.

She finished fifth with a time of 53.27. Her best time before the meet stood at 54.32.

Hope qualified for the finals with a time of 54.10.

"I feel like I'm a lot stronger than last year," Hope said.

"Most of it is mental. I believe in myself more this year, and I'm just much stronger mentally than last season."

Owens advanced to the semifinal round in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.92 but missed making the final field and finished 10th. However, she was among the top eight Americans in the race.

"Karissa ran two solid races this afternoon," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"Only once has she run faster than today, and that was at home in the Big Eight meet. To come to the national meet for the first time and do that well is very impressive."

With outdoor season starting this weekend, Owens said she is excited about her chances.

"I'm kind of excited about the outdoor season," Owens said.

"Going to the NCAAs and competing as well as I wanted motivates me."

Big Eight high-jump champion Ed Broxterman cleared 6'10-3/4" to finish 14th.

Nebraska's Petar Malesev won the event with 7'4-1/2".

Broxterman is the lone person to defeat Malesev this season.

Malesev has cleared 7'5" this season on several occasions.

Steve Duren posted a 23'6-1/4" mark in the long jump but failed to make the finals of the event. Duren qualified for the championships with a leap of 25'3-1/4" Jan. 14 but has battled numerous injuries throughout the season.

K-State will compete in the College Station Relays at College Station, Texas.

Wentland and teammate Jill Montgomery will compete in the Heptathlon Thursday and Friday.

The rest of the squad will compete Friday and Saturday in open events.

▶ SEASON IN REVIEW

K-State couldn't score consistently this season

TODD STEWART
Collegian

After the regular-season ending loss to Colorado, K-State coach Tom Asbury summed up his team's play in seven words.

"We couldn't throw it in the ocean."

And for the most part, that is how the Cats' season went.

Throughout the season, the Wildcats were plagued with poor-shooting halves and low-scoring stretches that consistently took them out of games they had played their way into.

Five games stuck out particularly. Had the results been different in these five games, the 12-15 Cats would have sat at 17-10 and most likely would be in postseason play.

Case No. 1 — Jan. 12 at Nebraska.

Eighteen-percent first-half shooting never allowed the Cats to get into the game. After the 22-point nationally televised loss, Asbury talked about his team's offensive shooting woes.

"We just didn't get it in the darn basket," Asbury said.

"You can't expect to beat anybody doing that."

Case No. 2 — Jan. 14 at Missouri.

The Cats missed 29 of their 35 first-half attempts from the field, scoring only 16 points before intermission. The Cats were able to close the gap but never really overcame the horrendous first half.

"It was a miracle we were still in the game shooting 17 percent," freshman guard Mark Young said.

Asbury said he had never been around a team with shooting problems similar to his Cats.

"Two nights in a row we've shot 17 percent in the first half," Asbury said.

"I've never had a high-school team that shot 17 percent in a half in one year."

Case No. 3 — Jan. 25 at Oklahoma.

The Cats' 81-66 loss in Norman was the same story. The Cats shot a dismal 33 percent for the game and an even worse 25 percent in the first half.

The poor shooting caused the Cats problems getting out of the gate.

"That will happen when you're the poorest offensive team in the Big Eight, statistically," Asbury said.

"This team has had problems getting out of the chute all year."

Case No. 4 — Feb. 11 at Colorado.

The Cats shot a miserable three-for-23 from three-point land in the 82-68 loss to the Buffaloes.

"Three-for-23 — that answers every question that all of you have," Asbury said.

"There's not a lot more questions than there is when you shoot three-for-23 — who in the world are you going to beat?"

Case No. 5 — March 4 against Colorado.

In the regular-season finale, things hit rock bottom.

In the second half, K-State missed 36 of its 42 field goal attempts, 15 of its 17 three-point tries and seven of 11 from the free-throw line.

"We were in a complete coma offensively," Asbury said.

"We've just got to find people that can shoot the ball."

Case No. 6 — Friday against Kansas in the Big Eight Tournament. The Cats shot 29 percent and scored only 19 points in the first half.

The 90-45 loss was the second-worst loss in K-State history.

"They are a lot better than we are right now," Asbury said after the game.

"There is no question about that."

With Asbury's team graduating only two seniors that played substantial minutes, many of the same shooters will return for next year.

The solution is a bit of mystery to Asbury, but he said recruiting better shooters will take precedence in the off-season.

"I don't know if there is an answer," Asbury said.

"Recruit better players — that's all. I've been saying that all year."

Jayhawk players feel an urgency to win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Kansas forward Greg Gurley and guard Jacque Vaughn roomed together and lost together at the Big Eight tournament.

Then they got together and decided it was time for a team talk.

Players held a frank and open discussion in the locker room following their loss Saturday to Iowa State in the semifinals of the Big Eight tourney, Gurley said Sunday night after the fifth-ranked Jayhawks were given the No. 1 seed in the NCAA Midwest Region.

"It was a very open meeting. Everybody had something to say," Gurley said.

The team feels a sense of urgency, Gurley said.

"This is the best team I've been on," he said. "We've got the inside players. We've got the outside. This is the year we've got to do it. Now is the time if we're going to do it. We've got the big guys in the middle. We've got Jacque running the team."

Kansas begins Thursday against Colgate, making its first NCAA appearance in 95 years.

Stewart hopes Tigers are ready for Indiana

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri coach Norm Stewart is as concerned with his team's mentality as he is with Indiana, the Tigers' first-round opponent in the NCAA West Regional on Friday.

"I'm concerned with how mentally competitive we are for this ballgame," Stewart said.

"Offensively, if we don't get what we want in one series, we go one-on-one or throw it up. We haven't shown any judgment."

In its 68-50 first-round loss to Iowa State in last weekend's Big Eight Tournament, Missouri shot 34 percent from the floor. The Tigers' 50-point output was the lowest of the season, and they have lost five of their last six games.

Indiana will be coming off a more successful end to conference play, a 110-79 victory over Iowa on Sunday that gave the Hoosiers a share of third place in the Big Ten.

Iowa now heads to the NIT, hosting DePaul on Wednesday in the opening round.

Indiana had its most productive halves of the season in reaching the century mark for the first time since defeating Tennessee Tech 117-73 on Dec. 10, 1993.

Jordan still hasn't made decision about future in basketball

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEERFIELD, Ill. — There was no announcement. The news conference, so zealously anticipated, never came.

The only sign Monday that Michael Jordan really is planning to resume his basketball career came at practice, his third with the Chicago Bulls in less than a week.

"He just said, 'Do you think I should come in and work out?'" Bulls coach Phil Jackson said.

"And I said, 'Yeah, if you think you're gonna play ball, you probably should come and work out.'

He said, 'Well, I'll be there," Jackson said.

So, does Jordan's attendance mean that the world's most famous ex-minor-league ballplayer is ready to return to roundball?

"No," Jackson said.

"That means he's still pursuing whatever his decision is to make on this."

In other words, the only game Jordan is playing these days is the waiting game. And the rest of the world is playing along.

Reports last week that Jordan would hold a news conference Monday brought more than 100 reporters to the Bulls' practice center.

They came from daily newspapers and weekly magazines, from radio stations and television networks, from the Windy City to the Big Apple and beyond.

Jackson gave them about 10 minutes of his time.

A few players offered a few comments. Jordan? As Jackson said, "He came and practiced and played well. And he went home."

Most of Jordan's past — and future? — teammates did the same. They've grown weary of answering the same questions, over and over and over, Michael and Michael and Michael.

If they really didn't know what Jordan was thinking, as they have been claiming, what more could they say?

"It hasn't been addressed at all," Luc Longley said of the subject of Jordan's comeback. "As far as we're concerned, he's just here for a few practices."

Jackson said Jordan's discussions with club owner Jerry Reinsdorf probably will determine the course of events.

"The impediment might just happen in that area — not on the court, not on how well he plays and maybe not even on how well this team could do," Jackson said.

"Most of all, probably, it's up in Jerry Reinsdorf's hands right now. I have a feeling that they've got some things going on there."

Both Newsweek and the Chicago Tribune reported that there have been discussions between Reinsdorf and Jordan, who is seeking assurances that Scottie Pippen will remain with the team and will be financially satisfied.

Jordan's agent, David Falk, didn't respond to telephone messages.

Though Jackson said Jordan's situation was an obvious distraction to the team, he said he won't pressure Jordan to make up his mind soon.

"I think he'll make it up in good time," Jackson said.

"I've always thought Michael was very good at decision-making."

These days, the rest of the world might not agree.

Friends shouldn't judge by sexuality

Dear Editor,

I'm bisexual. I'm attracted to both men and women. The problem is that whenever I make a friend and they find out about my sexuality, they turn away or reject me.

Is being bisexual a bad thing? Is there a group where I can make some friends and accept me as I am?

Signed,
Looking for a Straight Answer

Dear Looking,

Pat yourself on the back, sweetie. There ain't nothing wrong with being what you are, and it takes a lot of courage to admit it.

If your friends can't get their heads out of their butts and see you for who you are and not just look at you for your sexuality, then they're no friends at all.

I suggest you contact the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian organization.

▶ MOVIE REVIEW

'Outbreak' brings reality of virus to life

NIKOLA ZYTKOW
Collegian

Deep in the heart of the jungle of Zaire lurks a deadly virus, the likes of which no one has ever seen.

At least not since the Vietnam War, when the virus infected a whole village of American soldiers. The government kept hush-hush about the incident in hopes of using the virus as a future weapon against foreign powers.

But like all living things, the virus could not be contained, and after years of being dormant, it finds its way into the United States via its host, the African monkey.

The symptoms are sudden and all-encompassing. Initially, there's profuse sweating accompanied with feelings of flu-like sickness. The body is then covered with red sores, which often flare and bleed. Consequently, the person loses control of motor skills and lapses into a short coma that predicts the inevitable death. The victim's life span after contracting the virus is approximately 48 hours.

Director Wolfgang Petersen and producer Arnold Kopelson do an immaculate job of portraying the terrifying swiftness of the spread of this horrid disease.

In one particular scene, an infected person, unaware of his condition but already starting to feel its effects, is sitting in a movie theater coughing. His cough is viewed in a virtual-reality fashion at the molecular level as it travels through the air infecting others.

The movie is full of these terrifically frightening scenes that could easily reaffirm a phobic's belief that there is disease everywhere — even when we are not aware of its presence.

But even the non-phobics in the audience are confronted with the uncomfortable feeling of dread toward this disease that strongly resembles AIDS.

Every decade has its dominant fear. During the Cold War, it was the fear of a nuclear war, whereas movies such as "The Day After" and even "The Hunt For Red October" emerged.

"Outbreak" brings us face to face with our fears and suspicions of the spread of AIDS as we watch the small town of Cedar Creek, sheltered by the ocean on one side and mountains on the other, go into a mass hysteria as its mothers, brothers and fathers are claimed by the mysterious virus.

The movie mixes action with plenty of medical jargon, which is surprisingly understandable, and pulls the audience right into the intricate storyline filled with famous faces.

Dustin Hoffman plays Sam, a brilliant army doctor who is struggling with both his broken marriage to Robbie (Rene Russo) and convincing his superior (Morgan Freeman) the new virus has the potential to be the 20th-century Black Plague.

Even though some scenes may seem a little far-fetched, the movie does a good job of building up tension and avoiding the predictability that plagues a lot of action-adventure movies.

Capitalizing on the public's fear of AIDS and the mystery of its origins, "Outbreak" is sure to be a box-office hit.

Rights of illegal aliens await final decision

Judge refuses to dismiss lawsuits or let states decide

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge refused Monday to dismiss four lawsuits seeking to overturn a voter-approved law that denies almost all services to illegal aliens.

The judge also refused to allow the issue to be decided in state court.

U.S. District Judge Mariana R. Pfaelzer issued her ruling on Proposition 187 without comment.

She said she would make her reasons public in writing later this week.

She has scheduled a Sept. 5 trial on the issue.

"We are pleased with this decision, and are ready to go to trial," said Mark Rosenbaum, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California.

Assistant Attorney General Charlton Holland III declined comment, but Gov. Pete Wilson said the ruling would be appealed.

"It makes sense to request the federal court to refrain from interpreting Proposition 187 until a definitive interpretation is issued by a state court since that decision will affect the outcome of a federal case," Wilson said in a statement.

Holland had argued in court that the fate of Proposition 187 should be decided in a state rather than a federal court because it is a state law.

Approved by 59 percent of the voters last November, Proposition 187 seeks to deny almost all state services to illegal aliens, including all public education and non-emergency health care.

In December, Pfaelzer issued a preliminary injunction barring enforcement of all but two provisions of the measure.

One prohibited illegal immigrants from receiving higher education, and another banned the sale and use of false immigration documents.

A state court in San Francisco later blocked the ban on higher education.

Peter Schey, a lawyer for the Center for Human Rights and Constitutional Law, said attempts to have 187's legality determined in state court would only slow the appeals process.

"Pete Wilson and (Attorney General) Dan Lungren both said in November that they wanted this to move quickly to the U.S. Supreme Court for a ruling," Schey said. "Now they are doing everything they can to keep this from going to trial in federal court."

Rosenbaum said the state's actions reveal "apprehension about the legality of this ill-conceived statute."

Wilson spokesman Sean Walsh called those claims "absolutely false."

"This is just more distortion from opponents of 187," he said.

Musical hopes to dispel stereotypes

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

When most people think of religion in the theater or on television, images of the Church Lady and TV evangelists might spring to mind.

Scott Steel, graduate student in theater, said he hopes the production of "Smoke on the Mountain" will help break those stereotypes.

The musical, which will be performed at 7 tonight through Friday at the Purple Masque Theatre, is an interesting and entertaining comedy, Steel said.

Steel said he first saw the musical at Sterling College and thought it would be a successful project for his thesis, which requires him to direct and produce a campus production.

"This is the first production at K-State that I've acted in," Steel said. "I've missed being on stage. All during my years as an undergraduate, I focused on performing, but here I wanted to focus on directing."

Because it takes place in a church and has realistic characters, Steel said he thought it would help send the message that not all theater has to portray a negative image of religion.

TICKET INFO
Tickets for "Smoke on the Mountain" are $3 for adults and $2 for students and children.

"People associate theater and the church as 'life is bad, God comes, and life is good again,'" Steel said. "This musical deals with spiritual issues, but it deals with real people with real problems who work to come together and solve problems."

"Smoke on the Mountain" was written by Connie Ray and conceived by Alan Bailey. It takes place in 1938 at a Baptist church in Mount Pleasant, N.C., during the Great Depression.

"The pastor is trying to bring the congregation into the modern world and push into progress," Steel said. "One of the ways he does that is to invite a family singing group to come in and do a Saturday-night sing."

Steel said Saturday-night singing groups at churches were popular forms of entertainment during the 1940s. To get the audience involved, they will serve as the congregation during the musical.

Dolly Alonso, stage manager for the production and sophomore in theater and radio/television, said the group participation will help encourage the performers.

"They're excellent songs," Alonso said. "People will be humming along and feel like clapping."

One of the cast members is the pastor, but the other six compose the family that appears at the Saturday-night sing.

"What makes this different from other musicals is that the actors are musicians instead of having a separate orchestra," Steel said.

Steel said the actors not only had to memorize their lines but also had to do everything from teach themselves sign language to learn playing the banjo.

"We got together during the first day of the spring semester, and have been rehearsing ever since," Steel said. "Nine weeks ago, I don't think they all realized that they'd be singing, memorizing lines and learning and memorizing musical parts on top of all of it."

Steel said he grew up with a Southern Baptist background, so the music came naturally to him. He taught himself to play the guitar.

"It was a lot of fun, but there was a point where I had to practice three to six hours a day on top of my directing to learn how to play the guitar," Steel said.

Although the production was a challenge, Steel said the cast has been receptive, and the ticket sales are going well.

"They have been a wonderful cast because they're so eager to try new things," Steel said.

96 free HIV tests still available

Overcharge provides students with peace of mind

CARRIE COX
Collegian

In two months of this semester, more than two-thirds of free HIV tests available at Lafene Health Center have been used by K-State students.

As of Friday, 174 out of 270 HIV tests have been used during the two months the tests have been available, Cindy Burke, Lafene health educator, said.

The free tests became available to students Jan. 11.

Student Senate allocated the money for free HIV testing from excess money collected when students were overcharged 50 cents for fees and tuition last semester.

"Things are going very well," Burke said. "We haven't had any problems with the tests at all."

Burke said she thinks the same number of students would not have come in to be tested if the money for free HIV testing had not been provided.

"It's great to see that many people come in, but at the same time, there are still plenty of people on campus who haven't been tested yet," Burke said.

Burke said national statistics show one out of every 250 college students nationwide are infected with the HIV virus, which causes AIDS.

Kelley Fink, Lafene health educator, said because the national numbers are so high, it is very important that everyone get tested for HIV.

"If people can take the initiative to get themselves tested, then we can better understand the magnitude of the problem, and then people can make informed, wise choices about controlling their lives," Fink said.

Fink said if students want to get tested for HIV, all they need to do is make an appointment.

Before the test is given, students receive a pre-counseling session from a physician or a health educator.

During the session, topics such as risk assessment, confidentiality, HIV education and prevention are discussed.

Test results can be obtained after two weeks.

At that time, a second counseling session is scheduled in order for the student to receive the results and further discuss HIV education and prevention and any other concerns the student may have.

"We will not give anyone the results of their test in a letter or over the phone. Something like this is too important to be impersonal," Burke said.

The tests will continue to be made free to K-State students until all 270 tests have been administered, Burke said.

The price for HIV tests from Lafene after that time will be $28.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

One-man band plays in Union

After shouting the refrain "tequila" at the end of "La Bamba," Cruz joked that it was the only song he sang. In reality, Cruz relies exclusively on his own playing ability to entertain.

Cruz said although he performs occasionally with his brother and father, he prefers solo performances to playing in a band.

"You get to do everything. I play the bass, rhythm and lead parts all at the same time, so it's more challenging," Cruz said.

"I do love playing in a band, but you have a lot more control over the music as a soloist."

Cruz kept a monologue going between songs, giving some of the background of the songs he was playing, as well as showing the audience some of the techniques he was using. At one point, Cruz engaged the crowd in a game of stump-the-musician.

Cruz invited audience members to name any fairly well-known song 15 years old or older, and he would play it.

"I don't want anyone to leave and say, 'He didn't play my favorite song.' Now's your chance," Cruz said.

Audience selections included "Music Box Dancer," "Flight of the Bumblebee" and some other obscure songs. Cruz managed to play them all.

Cruz closed the show with what he said was one of his most difficult selections to play, "Bohemian Rhapsody" by Queen. Although the original was an orchestral piece, Cruz's version sounded remarkably similar, minus Freddy Mercury's vocals, of course.

Candese Perez's reaction to the performance was typical.

"It was beautiful, relaxing," Perez, freshman in chemical engineering, said. "I'd love to see him again. I hope he comes back."

If he does, check out his act. You might be amazed by what a one-man band can do.

Workshops written into allocations process

cations process.

"We felt strongly that we didn't think it was fair for a group to receive money from the fine arts fee and the student activity fee," he said.

The committee felt double and triple dipping was unfair to other groups, Clouse said.

A series of workshops on the allocations process is also written into the proposed regulations, he said. One representative from each organization receiving money through the allocations process must attend one of the workshops, which will be in the fall, Clouse said.

Brandon Clark, former allocations chair, and Clouse led the workshops last fall.

"I felt like they were very successful," Clouse said. "This stuff is very confusing. I think it helps a lot."

Budget shifting has always been confusing and difficult under the old regulations, Clouse said.

Under the new regulations, the treasurer will be able to approve budget shifts of $50 or less. Shifts of more than $50 have to be approved by a majority vote by the Allocations Committee.

Clouse said he thought allowing the treasurer to approve small budget shifts would help relieve some of the frustration organizations sometimes feel when faced with the red tape in the current system.

If an organization requests to shift money from advertising to photocopying on a project, they may have to wait up to a week before the decision can be made, and it may be too late, Clouse said.

Although it took nearly six months to revise the regulations, Clouse said he thought they had made some good changes.

"It takes an awful lot of research and getting opinions," Clouse said.

Tricia Nolfi, student government adviser, and Meinhardt helped with the revisions.

"I also got a fair amount of input from college councils," Clouse said.

Clouse said he thought the councils were left out of the process the last time the guidelines were revised. He said he felt some apprehension when he visited the councils, but he tried to keep them informed and ask for their input during the revision.

"A lot of these changes have an effect on them and their funding," he said.

Clouse said he thought it was important to keep the college councils informed.

Meinhardt, a member of the Agriculture Council, said he let Clouse know what the council wanted in the funding regulations and what problems it had with the old regulations.

Councils can't fund open house, postage or supplies, he said. The committee tried to come up with some considerations to provide for those expenses, Meinhardt said.

"I just hope the groups that have problems with the allocations process would come forward and tell us," he said.

Students surprised by acceptance of homosexual lecturer ater and drama professions, but they tend not to associate homosexuals in macho careers," Axell said.

"It's good he's educating and here as a role model to our community."

Brenda Kaliesen, senior in architectural engineering, said she was surprised that K-State allowed Pallone to speak because of the conservative atmosphere of the University.

"Intolerance in this area needs to be stopped," Kaliesen said. "I'm a conservative person except when it comes to accepting others."

Kirstin Proffitt, sophomore in education and Spanish and multicultural committee member, said she first received opposition when she brought the idea to UPC.

Proffitt said that after the committee members learned about Pallone, they showed support for the lecture.

She said she was pleased with the turnout.

"Most everyone here wanted to be here," Proffitt said. "I'm happy with the size and kind of people who showed up."

March Madness

The big dance is madness

It's time to take out your dancing shoes.

PHILL SPIKER

The Big Dance is finally here.

Ah, this is my time of the year.

I love March Madness because it is madness.

It's when underdogs like Santa Clara beat powerhouses like Arizona. Or, who could forget Villanova beating Georgetown in 1985 or North Carolina State beating Houston on a last-second dunk by Lorenzo Charles in 1983.

Those were magical moments I will never forget.

After watching the tournament selection show, I took a look at the bracket to see how the teams match up.

I think the best part of the Big Dance is predicting who is going to win it. So I thought I would give the Collegian readers my bold predictions for this year's dance.

Here they are.

n Obviously, the Midwest bracket is the toughest.

Wow! This bracket is like murderers row.

Check this out.

Kansas, Arkansas, Purdue, Virginia, Arizona, Michigan, Syracuse, Louisville and Western Kentucky — need I say more.

Boy, I'm telling you this bracket is loaded top to bottom.

But who will win this bracket?

I have already heard all the mumbo-jumbo about how tough it will be for Kansas to come out of this bracket. But remember, if the Hawks can make it to the regional final in Kansas City, which will be played in the Hawks' third home, Kemper Arena, (KU's second home is Bramlage Coliseum) the Hawks could have a realistic chance of surviving that region.

But the Hawks do have one big problem staring them in the face. They never do well in Dayton, which is where the first two rounds of the tournament will be played.

Another problem for the Hawks has to be their poor foul shooting and their lack of depth at point guard.

I think the Hawks have a good chance, but good just won't be enough to get out of this bracket.

So, which team will come out of this bracket?

I thought long and hard about this, and I have to go with Arkansas.

Why?

This should be totally obvious.

The Hogs have the talent to make a long run in the tournament. Arkansas was on a role at the end of the regular season, but the Hogs blew a 19-point lead, losing to Kentucky in the Southeastern Conference championship game.

Probably the most impressive thing about Arkansas is all the Hogs' starters from last year's national championship team are back.

With all of this in mind, Arkansas will meet up with Kansas in the Midwest regional final and send the Hawks back to Lawrence with a bad taste in their mouths.

n The Southeastern region could have some surprises.

Kentucky should stroll into the regional finals in Birmingham, Ala., but the Wildcats won't be facing the Tar Heels from North Carolina.

Sorry Heels' fans: without Rasheed Wallace in the line up, North Carolina will struggle.

I see the Heels getting upset by the Shawn Respert and the Michigan State Spartens.

This is Respert's and legendary Michigan State coach Jud Heathcote's

■ See MADNESS Page 4

Remember when SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Senior forward Stanley Hamilton battles for a rebound during K-States upset of the 25th-ranked Oklahoma Sooners in January.

The Jayhawks should be weary

Poor Kansas.

After ripping through this season with the country's best schedule and winning the Big Eight Conference, the Jayhawks were awarded with a No. 1 seed in the Midwest Regional.

However, the No. 1 seed is a mirage.

That is because Kansas is stuck in the NCAA Tournament's toughest region.

Just look at the Midwest Regional — Arkansas, Purdue, Virginia, Arizona, Syracuse and the list of tough teams goes on and on.

It's loaded with teams that all could cause KU problems. Problems which could translate into a loss.

Another thing to make things even more difficult for KU is that it is playing in Dayton, Ohio. A place where it has struggled in the past. For example, the Hawks lost to UTEP three years ago when they were also the No. 1.

JEREMY CRABTREE

Maybe KU coach Roy Williams can take his players to the tiny Miami River and have them spit off a bridge like they did two years ago in the Mississippi River.

It worked then, and maybe the Jayhawks can escape from Dayton. If they do, they will be playing on their third home court in Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

Bet on them if they can make it to Kemper.

■ I guess an awesome run of beating KU, Missouri, Oklahoma State, and Iowa State can help your rankings quite a bit.

That's the case with the Oklahoma Sooners, who in the middle of the season were not even expected to make the tournament.

But the Big Eight's Player of the Year Ryan Minor carried the Sooners to a No. 4 seed in the Southeast Region.

This region is also packed, but with a couple of wins the Sooners are capable of being a Sweet 16 team.

That's it and no more than that, as the Minor Express will finally run out of gas.

■ Oklahoma State is another story. I think the Cowboys right now are playing some of the best ball in the country.

After starting out slow with a 10-6 record, the Pokes have caught fire. Except for two stumblings, to the mighty K-State Wildcats and the Sooners in Norman, the Pokes are a top 12 team.

Bryant "Big Country" Reeves and Randy Rutherford are one of the best inside-outside combinations in the country.

However, Rutherford maybe the key. If defense's collapse on Big Country — which they will — Rutherford will have to nail the perimeter jumper for OSU to remain in the title hunt.

In the East, if the Pokes can get by Alabama in the second round, OSU has a chance to be another

Womens madness can be just as crazy

Louisiana Tech leads by two with 0.7 seconds on the clock. North Carolina, under their own basket, is faced with a choice-throw it inside and go for the tie or pass it outside for a three-pointer and the win.

The inbounds play seems headed for the post, but the defense of the Techsters is stifling. With time expiring, Carolina finds Charlotte Smith hovering around the arc. Smith catches the ball in the air and lets fly before her feet hit the ground.

DAN LEWERENZ

Pandemonium. Carolina wins the NCAA championship in a game less popular, but no less exciting, than the Arkansas-Duke match-up on the men's side.

This year's tournament will be just as exciting. Though the women's game hasn't reached the parity of the men's, there are still a number of teams that have a shot at the title. The fact that most of the top seeds have played each other will add to the intensity that March Madness brings to the women's game.

East Regional — Because Storrs, Conn., was chosen as a regional site, arguably the best team in the nation will play at home throughout the East Regional. Go ahead and pencil in Connecticut on your Final Four bracket.

The Huskies, lead by All-America forward Rebecca Lobo and 6-foot 7-inch center Kara Wolters, should cruise through their first two games.

Though a semifinal against Alabama and Player of the Year candidate Niesa Johnson may prove tricky for the Husky back court, Connecticut's post strength and home court should get them to the regional final without too much effort.

The regional final should pit UConn against Louisiana Tech. Though the Lady Techsters have a number of sharp shooters, the inside game of Connecticut should power them past last year's runner-up.

West Regional — Though Stanford went 26-2 and sailed undefeated through the Pac-10, a conference which sent five teams to the Big Dance, the selection committee overlooked geographical proximity and awarded the top spot to Vanderbilt.

Not that Vandy didn't earn a high seed. Beating Tennessee in the finals of the SEC tournament is proof enough of the Commodores' quality. A potential third-round tussle with San Diego State in a hostile Pauley Pavilion may set the stage for an upset. But look for Vandy to play for a spot in the Final Four.

Stanford should face North Carolina in the other semifinal, ending the road for the defending national champs. Stanford's size and depth will wear down the Tar Heels, and a friendly California crowd will help send the Cardinal to Minneapolis over Vanderbilt.

Mideast Regional — Like Connecticut, Tennessee has the benefit of a home court advantage all the way to the Final Four. They will get there.

The Lady Vols will probably face an experienced Western Kentucky team in the third round. But the talent and depth of a Tennessee team defending their 60-game home winning streak should prevail.

It's the bottom half of the Mideast bracket that gets interesting. While both Kansas and Arkansas can make some noise, No. 2 Texas Tech and No. 3 Washington will probably face each other again in the semifinal.

Last time, the Huskies won the Preseason NIT on Tech's home floor. This time, injuries to both teams will dramatically change the complexion of the game. Who cares? Tennessee will beat the winner anyway.

Midwest Regional — The Big Eight finally gets some respect, and Colorado gets the No. 1 seed. If circumstances don't conspire against them, the Buffs should take that all the way.

The top contenders got left out of the Midwest. But Colorado may face a second-round game with Southwest Missouri State, and the Bears 1992 Final Four trip also went through Boulder. Round three could well see a fifth seeded Drake team playing on their home court.

Talent and experience should pull the Buffs through to a regional final against Georgia, one of three SEC teams that will make the Elite Eight. But Georgia simply lacks the experience and the depth to run with Colorado.

Final Four — A Stanford-Connecticut match-up would showcase the two best front courts in the nation. Final Four experience and a deep bench would seem to favor the Cardinal. But Lobo and Wolters will prove too much for the young Stanford team to handle.

On the other side, the Tennessee-Colorado rematch will be dazzling. Guards Michelle Marciniak and Shelley Sheetz may put on the best show of the tournament. But the inside game goes to the Buffs. Tennessee freshman Tiffini Johnson will be eaten alive by Colorado's Isabelle Fijalkowski, and the Buffs don't lose much dropping to reserve center Reagan Scott.

Can Fijalkowski and Scott hang with Lobo and Wolters? That's the million dollar question. I say no. The Huskies' inside game is second to none. And though Connecticut point guard Jennifer Rizzotti will have her hands full with Sheetz, the Beasts of the East make it a perfect season at 35-0.

BY PHILL SPIKER

It's March Madness time and what a better name for this crazy tournament.

Everyone is always talking about Kansas, North Carolina and UCLA.

Why doesn't anyone talk about the little teams?

This is what the stories might be like in a parallel universe far, far away.

■ Florida International pulls off the biggest upset in college basketball history.

UCLA coach Jim Harrick said before the game that Florida International couldn't hold his jock.

But little did Harrick and the Bruins know what was in store for them.

Florida International would win the game 152-68.

Florida International began the game with a thunderous dunk by one of its players, in which the alleged player took off from behind the three-point line flying over several Bruins players exclaiming he was Superman. He then hung on the rim for at least 10 seconds singing the "Star-Spangeled Banner."

This was just the beginning of an incredible 50-0 run by the Florida school.

During certain stretches of the game, Florida International players would actually fly through the air easily dropping in shots and calling the Bruins players "momma's boys."

final season in Sparten green. The emotion alone should be enough for an average team to rise to the occasion and win one for Jud and Shawn.

Unfortunately, the Spartens will fall flat on their faces against Kentucky in the Southeast regional finals.

n The East bracket could also have some surprises.

Wake Forest is definitely for real.

The Demon Deacons main man, Randolph Childress, is one of the best players in the nation. He literally shot down Carolina in the Athletic Coast Conference championship game. Wake Forest proved it deserved the No. 1 seed in the ACC tournament by winning the tournament.

Enough said.

What about UMass?

This team is definitely a contender for the championship.

Lou Roe and Marcus Camby are a great one-two punch who can take the Minutemen far into the tournament.

UMass has good balance, depth and defense. Camby is a relentless defender and along with Roe can be a dominating force on the glass. But the Minutemen have been inconsistent down the stretch — this is due to Camby's hamstring injury, which kept him out of the lineup for three games and the suspension of guard Michael Williams.

Villanova also has to be a team to be reckoned with.

Kerry Kittles and Co. have had an excellent season and the Wildcats are poised to extend their season far into the tournament.

The Cats, who finished second in the Big East and won the Big East Tournament convincingly over UConn, are on a roll, winning 17 of their last 19 games. The big glaring weakness of the Wildcats is their inexperience in the Big Dance. They haven't been in the NCAAs in four years.

Despite the Wildcats very good play of late, UMass will survive its match-up against Kittles and Co. but will run into some hungry Deacons in the East regional finals.

That's right.

Wake Forest will be packing for Seattle.

n The West bracket should be an easy one right?

The O'Bannon brothers and UCLA should cruise through this bracket.

Wrong!

Maryland and a not-so-ordinary Joe Smith are going to derail that train.

Sorry, Coach Harrick and all you Bruin crazies: the Bruins just won't have what it takes to stop the best player in the nation.

Joe Smith and Maryland will prevail and will be going to Seattle.

This will make the Final Four an all-ACC and all-SEC match-up.

The Hogs will rematch the Wildcats and will give basketball fans another taste of the Southeastern Conference Championship game.

This time the Hogs will prevail and Woooooo Pig Soooooey will be heard all the way from Fayetteville, Ark., to Seattle as the Hogs return to the championship game to defend their title.

In the all-ACC semi-final, Joe Smith will show why he is the best player in the nation by ending Wake Forest's bid for a nation title.

This will set up a match-up between the two best basketball conferences in the nation.

Arkansas will play Maryland for the national championship.

The envelope please.

And the winner is ...

Joe Smith and the Maryland Terrapins. That's right, Maryland will defeat the Hogs in a close one. Joe Smith will be the Most Valuable Player and President Clinton will have to congratulate coach Gary Williams and Terps instead of his beloved Hogs.

This is my prediction, but I would also like to hear who the readers think will win the title.

So send me who you think will be in the Final Four by either dropping off your four picks on a piece of paper in the Collegian newsroom (Kedzie 116) or by sending it to my E-mail address, which is spiker@ksu.ksu.edu.

I will tabulate all the results and have them in the sports page by March 28. Please have all of the entries in by Friday.

It's time for the madness to begin.

Making room for the best 64

ASSOCIATED PRESS

In theory, the NCAA tournament brings together the country's best 64 teams in a revenue-generating bonanza leading to the Final Four.

In fact, it brings together 64 teams, not necessarily the best 64.

Locked in by automatic bids to conference champions large and small, the tournament opens Thurday with a dozen teams that fall well below No. 64 in the respected Rating Percentage Index. Eight of them, in fact, are listed at No. 100 or below.

The RPI, one of the tools used by the tournament committee to determine at-large bids and seedings, rates teams based on winning percentage, strength of schedule and opponents' strength of schedule.

It is not very impressed, for example, with teams that struggle all season and then win tournaments that carry instant invites.

The automatic bids produce some strange tournament longshots who find themselves mixed in with the power programs. That's OK with some people, though.

"It's college basketball, it's not the NBA," said ex-Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps. "I would not want to say that we've got to go and get the best 64 teams. No."

No problem there. According to the RPI, the committee didn't come close to the best 64.

Most criticism of the tournament committee's work centered around the at-large bid awarded to Manhattan College (25-4).

The deciding factor, according to chairman Bob Frederick, was the 9-3 record the Jaspers assembled against teams ranked No. 51-150. Left unsaid was the fact that Manhattan had an RPI rating of 50, considerably better than many of the automatics.

"The thing has to be open to teams like Manhattan," said Pete Newell, who coached California to the NCAA tittle in 1959, a simpler time when the tournament was limited to 24 teams. "I don't think they should be discriminated against because they are not in a top conference.

"If you don't consider Manhattan then you go back to the old days when they just picked from the big conferences."

This year's RPI booby prize winner is Florida International, saddled with an 11-18 record.

It was that good only after FIU won six of the last seven games, including the Trans American Athletic Conference tournament championship and an automatic bid.

That improved its index to 227 and the payoff is a date with the West region's No. 1 seed, UCLA.

In the same class as FIU is Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference champion North Carolina A&T (15-14), ranked No. 208 on the RPI but still headed for the tournament and a first-round date with topseeded Wake Forest in the East.

Mount St. Mary's, with a 147 RPI to go along with the Northeast Conference tournament title, gets fed to No. 1 seed Kentucky in the Southeast.

Colgate, a charming first-time participant, has a 122 RPI to go with the Patriot League championship and that meant a first-round date with No. 1 seeded Kansas in the Midwest.

It should be noted that the next No. 16 seed to knock off a No. 1 will be the first one to do it.

Then there are St. Peter's (100), Texas Southern (112), Murray State (144), and Tennessee-Chattanooga (149) all in the tournament courtesy of postseason championships, not RPI ratings, all equipped with No. 15 seeds.

More first-round fodder for the tournament heavyweights.

Frederick defended the committee's work.

Its task, he said, was to issue at-large invitations to the best 35 teams to supplement the 29 automatic berths.

But what if there were no automatics? What if the committee had 64 invitations to hand out? Obviously FIU would be heading home and so would North Carolina A&T.

And maybe Kentucky and Kansas would have more challenging first-round opponents than Mount St. Mary's and Colgate.

Nine of the 64 schools in the tournament — Colgate, Florida International, Gonzaga, Mount St. Mary's, Nicholls State, Drexel, North Carolina A&T, St. Peter's and Texas Southern — have never won an NCAA tournament game.

Best 64? Hardly.

Hawks to be weary

Sweet 16 team.

■ Iowa State may have extended too much energy by reaching the Big Eight Tournament title game to go anywhere in the tournament.

Freddy Hoiberg looked exhausted after the game, as did the rest of his teammates. If they had won, I would have picked them to do well.

But, sorry Cyclone fans, I think Iowa State will lose to Xavier in the first round.

■ Then comes Norm Stewart's Tigers who are a No. 8 seed.

After coming into the Big Eight Tournament with big hopes, the Tigers choked big time.

Will this fire up the Tigers or will it have them thinking about next year?

The Tigers have a tough task ahead of them, as they have to face the "General" Bobby Knight and the Indiana Hoosiers.

This will be the first round's best game.

■ After a long Big Eight season, the roadblock has been moved from the road to Seattle and the Final Four.

Now it's time to sit back and see how tough the Big Eight is after all.

A good showing could gain the league some respect around the country, but another quick exit could probably tarnish the conference's postseason image even more.

Sports splatterings

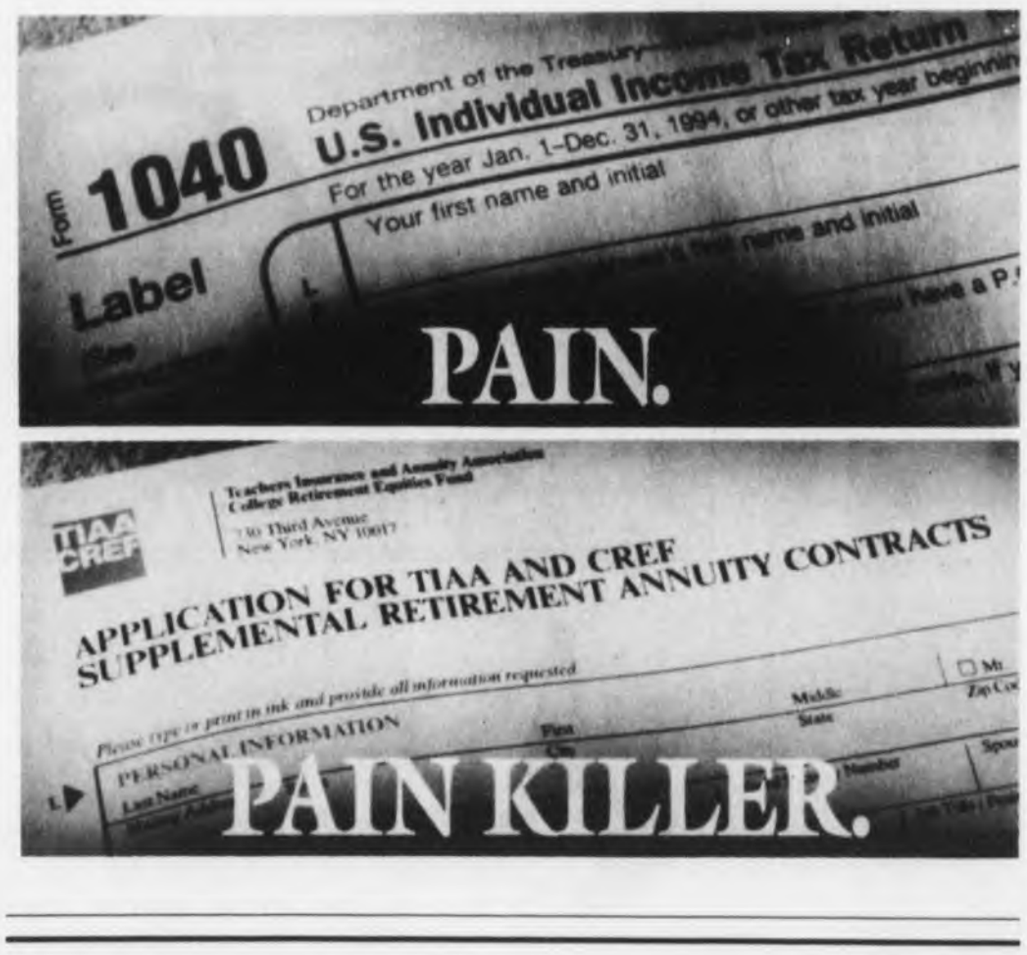
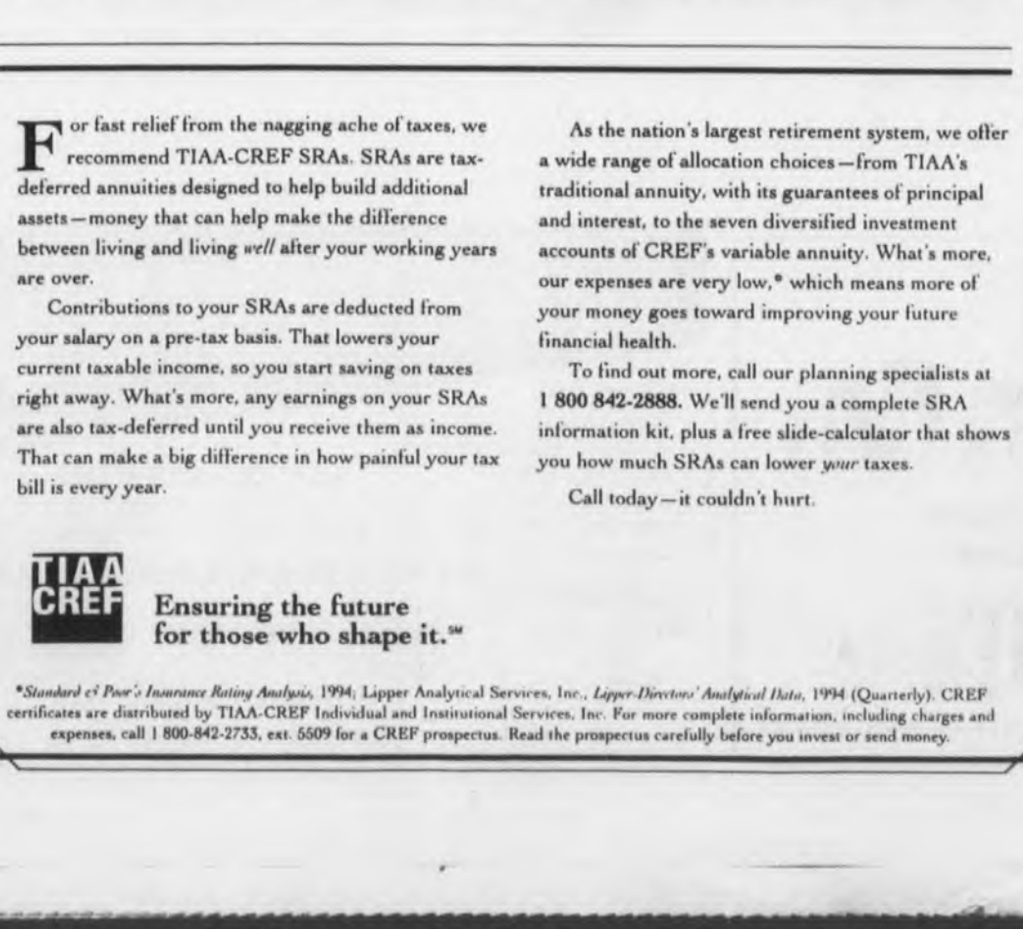
After the game, a basketball fan, who didn't want to be identified, said that fans saw unusual growths coming out of the Florida International players heads.

"They looked like aliens," the source said. "I think they might be from another planet."

■ Gonzaga University has finally finished its long run to the NCAA championship.



Gonzaga beat the alleged fighting aliens of Florida International outside of the Kingdome 106-105.



Florida International's amazing run was ended when Gonzaga shot down the last remaining player while making a wind-mill dunk at the buzzer.

The player was heard after the game saying it was a dirty job but someone had to do it.

After the game, Gonzaga coach Dan Fitzgerald, received a phone call from Gonzaga legend John Stockton congratulating the Gonzaga team on saving the world from certain destruction by the Florida International team and winning its first national championship.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pre-tax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax-deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

As the nation's largest retirement system, we offer a wide range of allocation choices—from TIAA's traditional annuity, with its guarantees of principal and interest, to the seven diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity. What's more, our expenses are very low,* which means more of your money goes toward improving your future financial health.

Former Harvard professor lectures on virtues of chaos, light, self-knowledge

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

The man who was the leader in the movement to keep mind-altering drugs legal now finds light, chaos and the World Wide Web new ways to tune in, turn on and drop out.

Timothy Leary spoke Tuesday night on new ways to alter your mind during his lecture at McCain Auditorium.

Although Leary seemed to ramble from topic to topic in a random, chaotic fashion, a few common themes emerged. Questioning authority was one practice Leary stressed repeatedly.

Leary himself has not only questioned but often directly contradicted the authorities in his lifetime. Booted out of Harvard for allowing undergraduates to participate in psychedelic research involving LSD, Leary became a sort of LSD guru figure to acid-heads in the 1960s.

Leary and friends moved to the country home of a wealthy benefactor. There Leary continued to experiment with and speak in favor of psychedelic drugs.

In 1966, Leary debated the merits of keeping LSD legal with Ted Kennedy before a U.S. Senate committee. Leary argued that responsible adults should be allowed the freedom to experiment with their own minds using psychoactive plants and chemicals. LSD was made illegal anyway the same year.

Leary's focus at Tuesday's lecture was not on drugs but on advancing multi-media computer technology and electronic communication.

Leary said the increasing amount of information available to individuals makes each generation more intelligent than the preceding one.

Leary defined generations according to the dominant new medium that each generation has experienced.

"First there was the radio generation, then television, then computers and now the electronic communication generation," Leary said.

Leary also said the increasing amount of information available has sped up technological advancement exponentially.

"In the last 10 years, advances have been made which should have taken a hundred years," Leary said.

Leary talked about the idea of chaos as opposed to order and rules.

He said while leaders try to gain power by offering order, the true nature of the universe is chaos. To be in harmony with the intrinsically chaotic external universe, one's mind must be in a state of chaos, Leary said.

After forgetting the point he was making several times, Leary explained that at the age of 72, senility is beginning to set in.

"As I get older, I'm getting senile," he said. "But the good side is that the effects are similar to those of smoking or eating some good sinsemillia."

Leary's sense of humor seemed to endear him to the audience. After drawing laughter for a pot reference early in his speech, Leary assessed the crowd's disposition.

"So this crowd likes dope jokes," Leary said. "I've got mine right here," Leary said, whipping a satchel of something out of his coat pocket.

Leary's emphasis on resisting authority and control by others included cautions on how to avoid such control.

"Who controls your eyeballs controls your mind. Who con-

City denied street plan grant funds

STEVEN YOUNG

Any parking garage that may be built on campus will be delayed at least a year.

Faculty Sen. John Havlin made that announcement at the Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday afternoon.

The delay was the result of Manhattan not receiving a grant that would have been used to widen Anderson Avenue in front of the K-State Union, Havlin said.

James Pearson, city manager, said other cities around the state may have presented projects that would have a greater effect on their communities' economic development.

It may be that the state decided it has done enough to aid Manhattan recently. It is someone else's turn to get money, Pearson said.

Tom Rawson, K-State vice president, said everything will be delayed a year. The city will reapply next year. If approved, a parking garage could be in place in 1999, he said.

New telefund helps soften calling stress

JOE KLEIDOSTY

A picture of a needy college student calling mom and dad for money when finances are dwindling is something that is etched in the minds of many people.

Most of the time, calling for that money is difficult to do.

Parents' Telefund, in its first year as a component of Telefund, was established in an effort to have an opposite effect on the person who is calling.

Gordon Dowell, Telefund director, came up with the idea to have student volunteers for Telefund call a parent or a relative for a donation in order to ease the callers into the calling process.

Dowell said he thought it would be a great way to have first-time callers run through the script before calling alumni and would be another incentive for callers to do well.

"We wanted to look for another way to help the students out and hopefully get the students off to a quicker start," he said.

Telephones in buildings will aid in campus safety

Students needing escorts late at night still need a phone.

And thanks to the Telecommunications Department, students will have a phone to use.

Christina Spicer, Van Zile Hall Governing Board treasurer, has initiated a safety program that will install telephones in many campus buildings in order for students to make calls if they are in need of assistance.

"While some of the buildings on campus have pay phones, we want to put in phones that people can use if they need help or even just a ride from an escort service," Spicer said.

Because many students have classes at night or study on campus during the evenings, Spicer said it is important that each student has access to a phone in case of an emergency.

Twelve to 16 phones will be installed in various buildings around campus and will be accessible to on-campus numbers only.

"This is something students need to know about. We feel like if we can increase the level of safety by simply putting in phones, then we will be helping more people than we could ever realize in the long run," Spice said.

Lin Bliss, co-chairman for the Wildcat Walk Escort Service, said this is not the first time Telecommunications has been willing to make safety a priority.

"Telecommunications has played a vital role in making our escort service possible," Bliss said. "They have given us an incredible amount of assistance, a great deal of equipment and the availability of funds to make everything run smoothly."

Bliss said he believes the new phones will increase the amount of calls for escorts in the long run.

"Since February 1, we've answered over 100 calls needing escorts. With new telephones inside campus buildings, we may be reaching out into new areas

Women discuss problems of welfare reform

Decades of change bring new challenges

CARRIE COX
Collegian

Problems with welfare-reform efforts and criticisms of the Contract With America were discussed Tuesday as three panel members voiced their concerns about the welfare system.

Anne Butler, director of women's studies; Sue Zschoche, assistant professor of history; and Gayle Bennett, English teacher at Manhattan High School; spoke to 28 people about the welfare system.

The event was sponsored by the KSU Women's Center as part of Women's History Month.

"There is a great deal about the Contract With America that I think is offensive," Zschoche said.

"There are a huge number of misconceptions and the like of things that are completely outrageous."

Zschoche said one of the main problems with the welfare reform under the Contract With America is the term traditional values.

"There is a tremendous amount of nostalgia for the traditions of 1955 when Ward and June lived. There's a perception that the drug-crazed hippies and some uppity African Americans came in, and it's all been downhill from there," Zschoche said.

"But our problems can't be solved by trying to go back to 1955."

Zschoche also said the term welfare now has a different connotative meaning.

"It used to be that if I was concerned about your welfare, it was a good thing. Clearly, in the context we have now, the term welfare is extremely pejorative," Zschoche said.

Bennett, who calls herself the voice of liberalism in Manhattan, said she thinks the wrong people are being blamed for the current system.

"Young girls get pregnant. We get upset because they're causing problems. We forbid them to have sex to keep them from getting pregnant but deny them sex education. We don't let them get an abortion but force them to get a job, because without money they can't buy groceries.

"Either way, without groceries or without a job, we say they are denying their child adequate care," Bennett said.

Bennett said the focus of the welfare system is in the wrong direction.

"What they want is a child of ideology rather than finance. They seem to think if we make their lives miserable enough, they will stop being poor and live just like us," Bennett said.

Butler said the welfare system is demeaning and not beneficial to those in it.

"When we see those most victimized by the system being blamed for the condition of the system, something is wrong," she said.

Butler also raised the question of who should be in charge of determining what problems are causing the system to fail.

"It's a lot of politics of problem definition. How a problem gets defined for whom and by whom is shaped and determined by the more privileged in our society without knowledge of what's really going on," Butler said.

John Fleming, junior in marketing, said he enjoyed the program.

"I think we really hit on some strong points today. I agree with the main focus of the current problem, how those who are getting violated are at the same time being blamed for the cause of the problem," he said.

"There is a tremendous amount of nostalgia for the traditions of 1955 when Ward and June lived. There's a perception that the drug-crazed hippies and some uppity African Americans came in, and it's been all downhill from there. But our problems can't be solved by trying to go back to 1955."

▶ ATTORNEY GENERAL SUPPORTS EXPANSION OF DEATH PENALTY LAW

TOPEKA (AP) — Attorney General Carla Stovall negotiated with legislators Tuesday over her own proposal to expand Kansas' capital punishment law to allow 16- and 17-year-olds to be sentenced to death.

Stovall told the House Judiciary Committee that some provisions of the bill before the committee would make only technical changes to the state's 11-month-old law.

She said she views the technical changes as necessary to make the law more workable.

Stovall said she still supports expanding the law to cover 16- and 17-year-olds.

However, she asked the committee to drop any controversial provisions, especially the one that would allow teen-agers to be sentenced to death, if they could prevent the bill from passing.

Stovall also suggested amending the bill to raise the age of protected children to 17, while allowing a death sentence only for criminals 18 or older.

Under the current law, protected children are 14 and under. Those who commit certain crimes against protected children could be sentenced to death.

Under the bill as Stovall proposed it, children 16 and under would be protected, while teenagers 16 and older could be sentenced to death.

Committee Chairman Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, said he initially reacted negatively to the thought of executing 16- and 17-year-olds.

However, he said it is likely that a 16-year-old who was sentenced to death would not be executed until after he or she turned 18, because of the amount of time a trial and appeals of a conviction and death sentence would require.

▶ CLINTON STOPS OIL DEAL WITH IRAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Intervening in a politically charged business deal, President Clinton killed an American oil company's $1-billion oil contract with Iran, accusing Tehran of terrorism and undermining Mideast peace.

Clinton's action delivered the death blow Tuesday to a Conoco deal that already was crumbling under pressure from powerful stockholders and criticism from the administration and Capitol Hill.

The White House said Clinton would issue an executive order in a matter of days to block the agreement, which had called for Conoco to develop a huge offshore oil field in the Persian Gulf.

Senate Banking Chairman Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., a critic of the deal, praised the action but said it did not go far enough.

▶ HOUSE ADVANCES TAX-CUTS BILL

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans pushed their Contract With America tax cuts through the Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday after Democrats declared the package hopelessly flawed.

Democrats offered a single amendment — to end the tax cuts after five years.

After that was defeated, on a 21-14 party-line vote, they offered no further amendments, and the committee adopted the package by the same vote.

The tax cuts, including a $500-a-child credit for families earning up to $200,000, would cost $189 billion over five years.

Democrats said the loss would balloon the deficit, but Republicans vowed to cover it entirely by slashing spending.

▶ PEACE TALKS RESUME FOR ISRAEL, SYRIA

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Peace talks between Israel and Syria, stalled for three months, are resuming with the United States playing a more active role in the search for an accord on the strategic Golan Heights.

A weary Secretary of State Warren Christopher announced the resumption Tuesday night after hours of delay, a telephone call to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin in Jerusalem and a two-hour meeting with Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa.

He had already held back-to-back talks with Rabin in Jerusalem and Syrian President Hafez Assad in Damascus, but the announcement was withheld for seven hours, raising speculation it would be canceled.

▶ DOCTOR'S USE OF CANCER DRUG INVESTIGATED BY MEDICAL BOARD

HOUSTON (AP) — A doctor who has been giving cancer patients an unapproved drug treatment is being investigated by the state Board of Medical Examiners.

Dr. Stanislaw Burzynski has been using a drug treatment not yet approved by the Federal Drug Administration but permitted in FDA-approved clinical trials.

The treatment involves synthetic drugs based on the same properties found in a group of substances in the body called antineoplastons.

Burzynski, who patented the treatment, and his colleagues said the substances are produced in people as part of a biochemical defense system that inhibits cancer cell growth.

Unlike traditional treatment such as radiation and chemotheraphy, antineoplastons are non-toxic. Treatment is administered either in capsule form or through an intravenous drip.

Burzynski is involved in the FDA's clinical trials. The dispute arose because he also began treating patients outside the trials at his Burzynski Research Institute.

The Texas Board of Medical Examiners contested Burzynski's use of antineoplastons when they said his claims that the drugs suppress cancer are misleading.

Burzynski contends that because the drug treatment is not sold outside of Texas, it is exempt from jurisdiction of the Federal Drug Administration.

He also said state law allows the use of unapproved drugs for immediate care, cases in which such treatment is urgently needed.

New coffee shop looks for cozy niche

New business seeks to provide homey atmosphere

JANICE SWICKARD
Collegian

Several local businesses are showcasing their work in a new downtown coffee shop.

Mainstreet Specialty Coffees will be opening its doors for business Thursday. The new coffee shop is located at 111 S. Fourth St. off Poyntz Avenue.

"I think that every coffee shop has to have its own niche," owner Kitty Pursley said. "Our niche is the cozy, very relaxed atmosphere."

The shop is located in the former Chef Cafe location. Pursley said she wants to start from where the old cafe left off.

"People used to come to Chef Cafe to drink coffee and meet with other business associates, and I want to continue the tradition by making them feel comfortable coming here," Pursley said.

Several businesses have donated items to put in the store. Floralia has donated the floral arrangements, and On the Avenue has contributed antiques and collectibles. Both the flower arrangements and the antiques will be on sale at the coffee shop.

Irma Meyer, owner of On The Avenue Antiques and Collectibles, said she thinks the shop will do well.

"I think it will be really great. We're showcasing many of our items in the shop, and it will be great advertising," Meyer said. "If everything goes well, we will just keep replacing the items that sold and stick with mostly a Southwest theme."

The shop will serve gourmet coffees, Italian sodas, bagels, fritters and fruit.

Pursley said she doesn't want to charge for little things like butter and jelly and wants the place to have a home-like feel.

"We will have homemade pies from Marcon Catering, and they are delicious. There aren't many places that you can get real homemade pies and good coffee," Pursley said. "We are going to try to always serve good coffee with real foam. We don't want to serve anything bitter."

All of the prices are going to be rounded to the nearest nickel to make prices even.

Pursley said she doesn't want to deal with pennies, and she thinks it will save the customer money in the long run.

"I want all of our prices to be even, and this way you won't spend $1.02 for coffee, you'll just pay $1. I like this system a lot," she said.

Pursley said the shop is not serving soups or sandwiches at this point, but it might include them in the future.

"This is the kind of place where you can come and watch TV, read the paper or just visit. Students and business people are welcomed to have meetings here," she said.

News anchor gives insight on Kansas rural life

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

Larry Hatteberg, author and news anchor at KAKE-TV in Wichita, tells stories about people.

Hatteberg spoke Tuesday at the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives Luncheon on Kansas People.

He said he has learned a lot about rural people and the way they live through his job.

Hatteberg said rural life affects the way everyone lives.

"Much of the way I perceive life is based on growing up in Winfield because everybody has a rural connection," he said.

"The rural culture becomes a foundation for our lives, and even if you do not come back to that foundation, it touches you and affects you in the way that you live your life and in the way that you perceive others."

A big concern for people living in small rural communities today is whether the community will survive, he said.

Hatteberg said some rural communities are going to die while others are going to have wonderful futures.

He said the visionaries who return to rural communities will help them survive.

"It will take people who have a commitment and who have a deep love and a vision for the particular area of the state that they are concerned with," he said.

"If people in small towns put their resources together and work together to bring tourism and to establish their community as a significant point in our culture, I think it can happen, but it takes a lot of work."

Hatteberg said some people will go back to their rural roots, but cities are a large lure for some people to leave those roots.

Hatteberg said he has had many different positive experiences while visiting with people throughout Kansas.

He said he enters into a person's life and listens, which is unlike the stereotype of TV news people.

"If we in the television industry can get you to stop for just a moment with a simple story about a simple guy and just think about life and evaluate your own life, then I think we have done something for television news. There are times when I go to a story, and I never ask a question. All I do is listen," he said.

He said sometimes he talks to people who tell him things they have never told their spouses or best friends.

"I think part of the reason this occurs is that when I come into some person's life, I tend to listen and not ask a lot of questions. I think people find this as an easy way to open up," he said.

Hatteberg said these types of stories are important to put on television because they make people think.

"I think many times that I have the luckiest job in the world, getting to travel around the state, around the country and in many cases around the world doing stories on people. If I am learning something from an individual, then hopefully the viewer is, too," he said.

Hatteberg said he is interested in covering people who are multidimensional because these are the people who have messages to be heard.

"I enjoy doing stories on rural people probably more than any other story because they are real," he said.

'They say what is on their mind, and they say it frankly in a way that there is no misinterpretation. Most importantly, it comes from the heart, and my role is to listen," Hatteberg said.

Denying funding for views still possible

After all, they might not like your group and what it represents, either.

Student Senate presented its new and improved funding regulations last week — complete with many changes.

One of the changes was the elimination of a section that prohibited members of Senate from considering an organization's views or the content of its products when allocating funds.

To Senate's credit, that section was taken out because senators thought it repeated the previous section, which prohibited discrimination against race, sex, religion, political viewpoints and the like.

Granted, it would be illegal for them to take that section out.

However, if our student senators claim they will not discriminate against a group on the basis of their opinions when it comes to giving them money, then we highly encourage you as students to hold them to that claim.

And if you think they will obey the rule without a little extra prodding, think back about a week ago when a student group was denied funding for its magazine, Metazine, because of its contents, which included a nude male a and reference to sex involving a 16-year-old.

After all, they might not like your group and what it represents, either.

Better precautions needed for guns

My friend Alex went to a gun show last weekend and bought his first semi-automatic weapon for $125.

His handgun is in the mail.

When he told me what he bought, I was amazed. The fact that a person can go to a gun show, sign a form stating that they are mentally competent and walk away with a Russian military rifle doesn't do a whole lot to make me feel safe.

All my anti-gun feelings came roaring to the surface, completely squelching my right-to-bear-arms half.

I've never gone completely one direction or the other on gun control, and I probably never will.

My history with guns is long and respectful. My father was a state trooper from the time I was 6 until I was 18, so I lived around guns for most of my formative years.

I was also raised on the philosophy of never pointing the gun at anyone, loaded or not.

I was also taught never to take the gun out and handle it without a really good reason, like someone's broken into the house and is trying to slit my throat and run off with the good silver.

Personally, I've always thought guns fell in with religion and politics: Everyone has an opinion, and everyone thinks their opinion's right. I believe that guns have their place in society for hunting and home protection, but that's about it. I have fired a gun and know what they can do, but I still don't have any desire to own one.

I asked Alex to show me his gun. He brought out a nice, oily, rifle-looking gun with a bayonet on the end and handed it to me. It was heavy — I realized just how good those guys in the Marine recruitment commercials really are.

We sat down and began to discuss guns. At first, I felt that an SKE, like the one Alex owns has no place in this country, as it is meant for killing people and nothing else. But shotguns, which Wal-Mart sells and can be modified to kill anything and blow someone in half, are not restricted.

KADY MASSEY

When I mentioned banning weapons, Alex pointed out that automatic weapons have been banned, not once, but twice — once before Prohibition when Congress banned the Thompson automatic rifle (also known as the Tommy gun), and again just in the last couple of years. This is the only time I've heard of anything being banned twice.

I asked why there was a waiting period on handguns and not on rifles. Statistically, people seem to enjoy shooting each other with handguns more than any other kind of weapon. Alex did admit that getting the SKE was just a little too easy.

We discussed the fact that America is one of the most restrictive countries to get a gun in, but we seem to lead the world in gun-related killings. Canada, a country we share a border with, had less than 20 cases of someone getting killed by a gun in 1993. In Israel, all citizens spend two years as a member of their army, therefore becoming trained in the usage of firearms. The British police didn't even carry guns until just within the last year, and that is limited.

I'm not suggesting that we get rid of all guns. The framers of the Constitution had very good reasons for allowing Americans the right to bear arms. At the time, the U.S. had no standing army, so the citizens were the militia. This was also a time when owning a gun was all there was between life and death by starvation or scalping. Because I've yet to meet anyone who survives only from wild game, and the Indians have calmed considerably, maybe it's time to rethink.

I suggest a minimum five-day waiting period for everything and everyone. If someone is in such a hurry to have a weapon in their hand before then, let them carry a sword. A 30-day wait might be a better idea.

I also think a background check before getting the weapon should be required. Alex claims a background check is being done for the gun he bought, but he already has it in his home.

There should be required safety training for any gun owner. A permit that has to be renewed like a driver's license would be a good idea. A gun should be treated like any other weapon.

I'm not allowed to fly a fighter plane or operate a nuclear reactor, because I don't have the training. The same should be true of guns.

I also think that anyone who commits a crime using a gun, killing someone or not, should have to face the stiffest sentences.

What it all comes down to is training, education and consequences.

Anyone who is trained to handle a gun, knows how to take care of a gun and realizes the consequences for misusing one should be allowed to own one.

$15 fee unfair to international students

The International Student Center caters to about 1,100 international students on campus.

This is an increase of about 41 percent of the number in 1986. The amount of paperwork required by the Immigration and Naturalization Service is also supposed to have increased. As a result of the above, the ISC asked for an additional staff member to be employed so as to help handle the increased workload.

The administration, after looking at various possible resources of funding for the additional staff, came up with the last (read as easy) alternative, the students. Two suggestions were initially made, which were to increase the application fee for international students and to charge an additional fee of $15 a semester for international students only.

A couple of weeks ago, we were informed that they had decided to go ahead with the second alternative. Before discussing whether that is right, I would like to state that international students have become an important part of any university/campus. They contribute richly to the extremely essential cultural diversity on campus. A good chunk of the graduate students are international students, meaning that they contribute greatly to the research in the University. They also help in improving the academic ambience of the University and in raising academic standards.

The alternative chosen for raising the funds can be faulted for the following reasons:

- None of the other groups, like the Black Student Union, the Minority Engineering Program and so on, are being charged an additional fee for staffing requirements. Then — why international students?
- The premise that increased enrollment calls for such a step does not hold water, because if there is an increase in enrollment in one particular department in the University, thereby requiring an additional staff member, will the students of that department alone be charged an additional fee?
- The reason why the alternative of increasing the application fee of international students to obtain the funds was shelved was because a drop in the number of international applicants was feared. By the same yardstick, would not an increase in fee for international students alone result in alienating (however well-intentioned) a section of the student group, giving undesirable adverse publicity to the University?
- It has been said that two other universities in the Big Twelve have a similar fee. Well, 10 others don't. Moreover, if A commits a mistake, that is no reason why B should commit the same mistake. It might give a person the courage to do it after seeing A. But it is still wrong.
- For those who feel that $15 is less than $20, or that $15 is not a big amount, it is not the amounts that matter here. It is the symbolism that counts.
- Because it is the money of the international students that goes directly to hire the additional staff member, the international students should have been asked whether they feel that there is a requirement. Their opinion was never considered.

GUEST COLUMN

The fee starts at $15 a semester. There is no telling how or why this will be increased next.

This is setting an unhealthy precedent on campus and has to be stopped. Today, it may have started with one student group. There is no reason why this should not move onto other student groups in the future.

I request all of you who feel strongly about this to write to the Collegian and make your opinion known.

K-State has a very strong international program. I sincerely hope that all steps are taken in the right direction so it continues to do so.

▶ INTERNATIONAL STUDENT FEE

Cost should go to all students

Dear editor,

I take exception to Brendan Ryan's notion that international students should pay an extra fee to fund the International Student Center because it benefits only a minority. Does he think that multicultural students should pay a fee to support the Multicultural Office, that disabled students should pay for Disabled Student Services or that displaced homemakers and non-traditional students should pay an extra fee for the services offered them?

We are a university community, not a bunch of people trying to divvy up the check after dinner. A university, as its name indicates, is inclusive. Indeed, any institution that lays claim to this title must recruit a diverse population and offer the necessary services. The bottom line is that the presence of these diverse populations enriches the educational experience of everyone on a university campus.

Jacobs' column obviously needed

Dear editor,

Mr. Pinnick asks, "Why is it that every time I pick up the Collegian, I have to see some homosexual column written by Kevyn Jacobs?"

Assuming this statement to be true, and I have no reason to doubt Pinnick's assessment, then I must conclude that Pinnick only bothers to read the Collegian once a week since Mr. Jacobs' columns only appear in the Collegian once a week. My question is: Of what benefit to the readership is the opinion of one reader who only bothers to read the paper 20 percent of the time?

Pinnick goes on to write, "But until then, then, he can keep his unacceptable sexual-preference problems to himself, because we are tired of reading about them." It probably hasn't occurred to Pinnick yet, and this is understandable since he is only a sophomore (these highly complex problems do take time to figure out), so I am going to save Pinnick considerable expense of brain power and spell it out for him: DON'T READ KEVYN JACOBS' COLUMN.

This discriminatory and prejudicial attitude is the basis for Jacobs' columns, and Pinnick's letter obviously justifies the need."

BRAD SEABOURN
graduate student in grain science

A very simple solution actually, to what Pinnick perceives to be a difficult problem — but then I never considered Jacobs' weekly column a problem to begin with. I think it provides an interesting balance to the opinion page. Opinion columns such as Jacobs' provide exposure to alternative views in an educational setting that Pinnick and others may never again have the opportunity to read.

Finally, Pinnick refers to Kevyn Jacobs' columns as "excuses for his sexual deviancy." While the term "deviant" correctly identifies homosexuality as a practice that differs from the accepted social standards within society (with no judgment as to moral value), I suggest that Pinnick's sophomoric (no pun intended) use of the word here was not to enlighten us to this obvious fact but rather to imply that Jacobs is morally corrupt and to publicly humiliate homosexuals in general.

This discriminatory and prejudicial attitude is the basis for Jacobs' columns, and Pinnick's letter obviously justifies the need.

Readership responds well to same old thing

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Do you despise the Collegian opinion page? If so, you can take a shot at improving it.

Applications for next fall's Collegian are available now during business hours in Kedzie 103. You have the opportunity to do more than complain about your paper's opinion page. You can try to make it better.

That said, perhaps there are some things you should know before you try being a columnist.

Every columnist has more or less the same space as the rest. Most of them have comparable writing skills. Nonetheless, most of us go on writing with little or no notice from the public at large.

If you want to be a success on this page, you have to find a pet project. You have to find one controversial issue and drive it into the mud over and over again.

Why?

Because that's the only thing K-State seems to respond to.

Some of you say you hate reading the same stuff over and over.

A small portion of those who feel this way put pen to paper and say so.

Unfortunately, very, very few of you ever write in to support what you agree with. Instead, most of the feedback Collegian writers get is negative.

That negative feedback almost always goes to the controversial bully-pulpit preachers.

People who are more reasonable and diverse in topic choice go unsupported and, apparently, unnoticed.

So if you're going to write for the Collegian opinion page, do yourself a favor. Become an atheist, a transvestite, a Ku Klux Klan member, a militant vegetarian or a communist and write about only that particularly shallow facet of your mind.

You will be the darling of the campus.

Anything else will go, and no one will ever know the difference.

But don't worry. You won't be completely anonymous if you're reasonable. Your picture goes next to your name every week. People will recognize you in the damnedest of places.

They won't have a clue what you've written about, however. Instead, most folks will ask you, with not an ounce of shame, "You work for the Collegian, don't you? Hey, what's the story with Russell Fortmeyer/John Hart/Kevyn Jacobs?"

Some others will simply glare and scowl at you on the sidewalk on the way to class.

Still others will assume you are a liberal/a conservative/a jerk/an arrogant ass/intelligent, none of which are necessarily the case. Again, they will not have read your work, so they won't have any idea who you are.

They will just associate you with the ax grinders of the opinion page.

Some of your professors and instructors will sometimes recognize you. That's when true trouble can start. People begin to assume things, and they let their own preconceived notions about you cloud their abilities to be fair.

You'll learn to suck up, don't worry, but it may annoy you a little until you learn to be a good flunky.

People will respect you if you're an unreasonable jerk who has a lot of popular support.

Being a reasonable writer for the Collegian opinion page will not get you free drinks in Aggieville by any means. It may get you some snide remarks about other writers, though.

If you have a job outside of the newspaper, as most people do, you will find yourself spending more and more of your time defending yourself from co-workers. They may like you, but they won't like everyone you share a page with.

In short, read Fyodor Dostoyevsky and then decide he was wrong. Most people, in spite of what they say, do not want to be free. They want bread and circuses. They want a little entertainment, a little food, and from then on they want to be told what to believe. They most certainly don't want you to be sensible. After all, what fun is that?

Then read Niccolo Machiavelli and then decide he was right. People will respect you if you're an unreasonable jerk who has a lot of popular support. This is true of the Collegian opinion page. This is true of presidential elections.

The overwhelming majority want to be entertained and/or angered by what they read here. They do not want to think about new ideas. They do not want to be educated.

You won't be competing with this writer for a job, so get those applications in before it's too late!

Homecoming Bids 1995

ALL fun and GAMES

Story by Stacey Hager Photos by Cary Conover

Serenades at 2 a.m, dinner, flowers and ice cream. What more could a woman ask for?

It is all a part of Homecoming bids.

Bids are invitations used to determine sorority and fraternity match-ups for 1995 Homecoming activities.

Fraternities have been trying to win the favor of sororities in hopes they will accept their Homecoming bids.

The bidding process, which used to be a week long, began 8 a.m. Monday and will end at 6 tonight, said Greg Spencer, vice president of External Affairs for Interfraternity Council.

The three days usually include serenading, sending flowers, presenting skits and giving rides to classes, he said.

"Members are trying to give off as favorable impression as possible so their bids will be accepted," Spencer said.

Spencer said that every other year, the sororities extend the bids to the fraternities, and the next year the fraternities extend the bids.

This year the fraternities are extending the bids. Fraternities must comply with regulations, including a $150 spending limit and a ban on activities past 11 p.m.

Because there are only 11 sororities and 25 fraternities, a lot of the fraternities pair up for Homecoming, Spencer said.

Jason Holder, Tau Kappa Epsilon Homecoming co-chairman, said it is a lot easier sharing the work with others.

TKE and Delta Upsilon are paired together for Homecoming 1995. Some of their efforts to win the sorority of their choice have included delivering donuts and having an ice cream social. They will be serving dinner tonight at sorority houses and decorating their dining rooms.

> Delta Sigma Phi Homecoming chairman

There is no way they could have done these things by themselves, Drew Stewart, TKE Homecoming co-chairman, said.

Sigma Nu and Lambda Chi Alpha are teamed up again this year. Marty Goodnight, Sigma Nu Homecoming co-chairman, said they wrote a personalized version of Willie Nelson's "On the Road Again" for the Sigma Nus and Lambda Chis.

The fraternities pick the fraternity they would like to be paired with, and Lambda Chi and the Sigma Nus decided to work together again this year.

"We get along great. There are a lot of good friends between the two houses," Andrew Alldredge, Sigma Nu Homecoming co-chairman, said.

The fraternities serenaded, performed skits and cooked breakfast to try to win the sorority women's approval.

Another grouping includes Phi Kappa Theta, Delta Sigma Phi and Delta Chi.

Brian Lindstrom, Delta Chi Homecoming chairman, said working together works out well and broadens their views.

◀Tim Keeler, sophomore in pre-physical therapy, yells as he substitutes for the buzzer during the game.

This group's activities included flowers, serenades, milk and cookies, skits and rides to classes.

"There is strength in numbers and more ideas," Tom Huster, Delta Sig Homecoming chairman, said.

Spencer said Homecoming at K-State is one of the University's biggest events.

"There is a lot of pressure on the Homecoming chairs. It is a big job with a lot of responsibilities," Spencer said.

Goodnight said it is a stressful time.

"Everybody in both houses has been helping out. It hasn't been just an individual effort," Goodnight said. "It is a good experience as a minor leadership role and gets us started in the house."

Scott Fritchen, DU Homecoming co-chairman, said it is worth it when it all comes together.

Spencer said the bidding process will end tonight. The fraternities must present their bids and their first picks by 6 p.m. to the Greek Affairs office.

Sorority representatives will then pick up the bids they receive and take them back to their chapters for voting. They must contact Greek Affairs with their decision by 7:30 tonight.

If a sorority does not receive a bid, they will immediately go into the second round of bidding. The sororities will be notified at 8 tonight of second-round bids and must inform the Greek Affairs office of their decision by 9 tonight.

"Not everyone can get their first pick. You make the best of it," Alldredge said.

BIG EIGHT POSTSEASON RUNDOWN

CHOICES tough to make

LAWRENCE — The selection of 35 at-large teams to the NCAA basketball tournament has prompted a lot of questions, and Bob Frederick has heard most of them.

Frederick, the Kansas athletic director and chairman of the nine-member committee that picked the at-large teams, was hit with numerous phone calls and faxes in his Lawrence office Monday, the day after selections were made.

"What more could I have done?" he said. "Would it have been fair to the University of Kansas if the team was dropped to a third or fourth seed? In my experience on the committee, it's actually been a disadvantage to the team a committee member represents because you bend over backward trying to be fair.

"I told the committee from the outset that our goal is and should be to pick the 35 best at-large teams and that we know not all people are necessarily going to agree with us."

BOYCE will be missed

BOULDER, Colo. — Despite the loss of Donnie Boyce, the National Invitational Tournament held true to its word and gave the Colorado men's basketball team a second season.

Boyce, who broke two bones in his left leg during Colorado's loss to Oklahoma in the Big Eight tournament, will travel with the team as it opens the NIT at New Mexico State Wednesday.

"I'm thrilled for our team but very disappointed for Donnie Boyce," Colorado coach Joe Harrington said.

"Donnie helped us to get a bid, and he wanted badly to play in the postseason."

NIT executive director Jack Power said Sunday that Boyce's absence did not diminish Colorado's chances of being among the tournament's 32 teams in the tournament.

Colorado's second postseason appearance in 33 years will not be easy.

The Buffs will be without Boyce, the school's career-scoring leader, and they will face a New Mexico State team that finished the season 13-3 in Las Cruces.

The Aggies (23-9) were on the bubble for an NCAA Tournament bid after losing to Long Beach State in the semifinals of the Big West tournament last week.

FIVE other teams to play

KU and CU aren't the only teams that will be playing in the postseason.

Iowa State, Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and Missouri all were at-large selections for the NCAA Tournament.

But along with CU, Nebraska was chosen to play in the NIT Tournament.

Oklahoma State and Oklahoma were both selected as No. 4 seeds in the NCAA field. Iowa State was tabbed as a seventh seed, and Missouri received a No. 8 seed.

Kansas will face Colgate, Oklahoma will face Manhattan, Oklahoma State is playing Drexel, Iowa State will play against Florida; and Missouri and Indiana are set to tangle in the first round.

Nebraska and Colorado will play first-round NIT games on Thursday and Friday.

JEREMY CRABTREE

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Big Eight Tournament is Kansas City's crown jewel.

And its throne is Kemper Arena.

Even with two non-local teams playing for the Big Eight Tournament title Sunday, a record crowd of 17,153 packed Kemper.

"I think that the people here in Kansas City do a magnificent job of hosting the tournament," Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said. "This has developed into a special conference tournament."

This year's conference tournament was no exception, as No. 5-seeded Iowa State advanced to the championship game with an upset victory over No. 1 seed Kansas.

However, both Kemper and Kansas City belonged to the Oklahoma State Cowboys.

After ripping through first-round opponent Nebraska, the Pokes had to face Oklahoma to advance to the title game.

That's exactly what OSU did.

That left only the Cyclones and Cowboys standing on Sunday.

Although the crowd was dominated by an estimated 12,000 ISU fans, the Pokes jumped out to an early 12-5 lead with a 7-0 run.

However, Iowa State answered with an 8-0 run of its own. Then OSU went on another 7-0 run to extend its lead to 19-13.

OSU continued to build on that lead behind the inside shooting of Bryant Reeves and built an eight-point lead at halftime.

"The reason that I got the ball down low so much was the guards put the ball where I needed it," Reeves said. "All the credit goes to them."

With the Clones facing an eight-point deficit, a comeback was in order, which is exactly what Iowa State did.

Behind the hot shooting of guard Fred Hoiberg, who canned two three-pointers, Iowa State was within only two points with 4:44 left in the game.

However, OSU used its poise to fight off Iowa State and escape with a 62-53 victory.

"ISU competed harder today than any team I've ever coached against," Sutton said. "Their team played very hard, and I think that they'll go far in the tournament."

OSU forward Scott Pierce said the key was the Cowboys' leadership and experience.

"They really fought their butts off, but we were able to keep our poise and get the win," Pierce said.

"They really pressured us to get back into the game. I think the difference was that we were able to run the clock down and get some easy buckets."

Cats suffer 2nd-worst loss ever

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Things can't get any worse.

After falling to Kansas 90-45 in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament last Friday, K-State coach Tom Asbury said he won't stand for this type of defeat anymore.

"There is a huge discrepancy between the two programs," Asbury said. "We've just got to challenge our underclassmen to go out and start assuming responsibility so we can start to narrow this gap.

"Certainly, as coaches, we need to go out and recruit better players to help narrow this gap in a hurry. We will do that, because I'm not sitting through this too much longer."

However, Wildcat fans did have to suffer through Friday's drubbing, which pulled the plug on the Cats' 12-14 season.

It was a game in which many records fell. However, all of them weren't records K-State wanted to set.

This game was K-State's second-worse loss in its basketball-rich tradition, and it was the largest margin of victory ever for Kansas over K-State. It was the Big Eight Tournament's widest margin of victory ever.

"You don't want to get hammered like that to anybody," Asbury said. "It's just pure and simple — they just absolutely drilled us."

The game didn't start as bleak as it ended, as the Cats jumped out to a quick 7-0 lead. The run was sparked by a basket and a three-pointer by swingman Belvis Noland.

However, Kansas didn't panic, and the Hawks quickly retaliated with a run of their own, a run the Hawks rode all the way to a record-breaking victory.

"You never want to get into a situation where you are down 7-0, but we didn't panic, and we kept our head in the game," KU coach Roy Williams said.

The main problem the Cats had with the Jayhawks was their height. With Kansas sporting almost three seven-footers, the Hawks pounded the ball inside.

Six-foot 11-inch forward Scott Pollard did the most damage for KU with eight points and six rebounds in the first half. He then finished the game with a career-high 12 rebounds and 13 points.

Noland said Pollard is a great player.

"He finished all of his plays today," Noland said. "My hat goes off to KU. They played very well."

Despite dominating the Kansas 5A state in doubles, Chris Schulte said she had to change her game in college play.

Schulte dominated in high school, but in college she is STILL LEARNING

TODD STEWART
Collegian

It started out as something she could have fun doing with her brother and sister.

Then came the lessons. Then she entered a few tournaments.

The rest took care of itself.

When Chris Schulte was in the fourth grade, she played two hours of tennis a day with her brother and sister at the local recreation complex.

She started taking lessons at the local recreation center and played in a few tournaments, and by her senior year of high school at Salina South High, her accomplishments spoke for themselves.

She was a two-time Kansas 5A state double's champion, a two-time 5A state runner-up in singles and I-70 League doubles and singles champion.

Those accomplishments led her to K-State and NCAA Division I tennis on a tennis scholarship.

"I was just nervous thinking about playing Division I," Schulte said.

Despite her successful high-school career, Schulte said her game had to go through some changes to play at the Division I level.

"A lot of my game was self-taught," Schulte said. "I've had to work on some things, and I am still going through that."

She said the two areas of her game she has been working on the most have been her grip and her serve.

Despite the changes Schulte's games have had to endure, she said she is still positive about her play this year.

"I feel like I'm playing OK," she said. "I'd like to keep playing well and try and finish fairly well in the Big Eight."

Beyond this season, Schulte said she's not setting any concrete goals.

Helping Schulte out in her freshman year has been K-State junior all-American Karina Kuregian, Schulte said.

What has been tough on Schulte in her first year is balancing athletics and academics.

"I was really worried when I came to K-State about doing school and tennis," Schulte said.

She said she is managing, but she said the two take up a lot of time.

"I basically have time for school and tennis and studying — that's it," she said.

Schulte, an elementary education major, has changed her major four times already her freshman year. However, she said she is having a blast at K-State.

In the nine years since she was the fourth-grader hitting tennis balls with her siblings, Schulte has come a long way to NCAA Division I tennis.

As she looks back on her earliest tennis days in her elementary-school years, she said tennis became almost second nature, but her competitive spirit carried through onto the court and drove her to win.

"Playing kind of became a habit," Schulte said. "I guess I stuck with it because I am pretty competitive with everything I do."

Cats end season with big loss to Jayhawks

That inside game is something that Williams said KU had to have to be effective against K-State.

"This was one of the things that we worked on before the game," Williams said. "I think when we came into the game, we had only 10 more rebounds than they did from the first two games.

"I challenged them to get more rebounds."

To make things even more challenging for K-State, the Cats weren't shooting effectively.

For the game, the Cats shot 29 percent, including a frigid 20 percent from behind the three-point arc.

The 45 points was the lowest scoring output of the season and the lowest in 48 games dating back to a 63-43 loss to Missouri in 1994.

"We didn't shoot well," Asbury said, "but we hadn't all season. Along with their overwhelming size and our poor shooting, we couldn't overcome them."

"I think that we are two players away from being able to compete in the Big Eight."

TOM ASBURY
K-State basketball coach

If there is any bright point to a blowout loss like this, it could be that the Cats can only go up from here. Asbury said he knows what the Cats need — to recruit talented players.

"I think that we are two players away from being able to compete in the Big Eight," Asbury said.

That recruiting process has already begun, Asbury said.

Women's team still on the road to Big Eight success

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

The season is over, and it's time for reflection in the world of K-State women's basketball.

K-State finished the season 14-13, its first winning record since the 1990-91 season. The Wildcats' 6-8 conference record earned them a fifth-place finish, also their highest since '90-91.

But the numbers are not the only signs of coming success.

"There's no question we're a better team than we were a year ago," K-State coach Brian Agler said. "They really improved from start to finish. We've experienced some inconsistency getting there, but that's to be expected."

Agler, in his second year at K-State, has earned an even 27-27 record, going 11-17 in Big Eight play.

For the coming year, Agler said he is counting on the continued progress of his returning players and the infusion of new talent to bring the Cats back into the upper division of the Big Eight.

"We're counting on improving. I'd really like to see our post players step up a bit," he said.

The Cats will need a strong post presence to replace Shanele Stires, the team's only departing senior.

A first-team all-conference selection as a senior, Stires leaves K-State fifth on the all-time scoring list and sixth in career rebounds with 1,344 points and 701 boards.

"You're just not going to find one person to replace Shanele," Agler said. "She had a great career and a great season. Everybody will have to pick up the slack.

"Look at Purdue — they lost the Big Dog and still got the No. 3 seed."

Among the players Agler said he sees stepping up is sophomore Andria Jones.

"Andria is really versatile, and she showed signs of that later in the season. If she has a good off-season, she could help pick up some of the slack."

Other returners include juniors Lisa Gaitor, Carlene Mitchell, Patty Johnson, Dana Pollock and Kristy Thomas; sophomores Missy Decker and Kjersten Larsen; and freshmen Amanda Chamberlain and Brit Jacobson.

Jacobson, the only returner to start all 27 games, averaged 13.6 points and 5.1 rebounds per game.

Her 367 points set a new record for freshman scoring, breaking the record of 330 points set by Eileen Feeney in 1978-79.

Decker returns as the Cats' leading three-point threat, hitting 46 percent from the arc in Big Eight contests.

Chamberlain and Mitchell split the point-guard duties, and Jones, Gaitor and Larsen all earned starts in the post.

Agler has added two new Wildcats to the roster.

Kayla Hester, a 6-foot post from Seward County Community College, and Jenny Coalson, a 5'11" senior from Colorado, could both make an immediate impact, he said.

Earlier in the season, Hester set a school single-game scoring record with 36 points.

Coalson, who averaged 22 points and 12 rebounds as a junior, was named the Player of the Year in Colorado as a senior.

"Jenny is really versatile and athletic," Agler said. "She's got that drive and mental toughness that will allow her to come in and contribute right away."

Agler said the Cats will need to continue to improve to compete in the Big Eight.

2 finish near top at NCAA Indoor

WESS HUDELSON

K-State placed two women in the top six last weekend at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships in Indianapolis.

Gwen Wentland and Belinda Hope finished among the best in the nation in the high jump and the 400 meters.

Karissa Owens finished 10th in the 55-meter dash but was among the top eight Americans in the race and earned all-America honors.

Wentland placed second in the high jump with a leap of 6 feet 3 inches. UCLA's Amy Acuff won the event with a leap of 6'5".

"I wasn't prepared for her to jump as high as she did," Wentland said. "I thought if I jumped 6'3" I would win it, but she had a really great day."

Wentland had her best performance of the season the previous week at the U.S. Indoor National Championships with a height of 6'5".

Hope continued to improve in the 400 meters. She finished fifth with a time of 53.27. Her best time before the meet stood at 54.32.

Hope qualified for the finals with a time of 54.10.

"I feel like I'm a lot stronger than last year," Hope said. "Most of it is mental. I believe in myself more this year, and I'm just much stronger mentally than last season."

Owens advanced to the semifinal round in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.92, but she missed making the final field and finished 10th. However, she was among the top eight Americans in the race.

"Karissa ran two solid races this afternoon," Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "Only once has she run faster than today, and that was at home in the Big Eight meet. To come to the national meet for the first time and do that well is very impressive."

With outdoor season starting this weekend, Owens said she is excited about her chances.

"I'm kind of excited about the outdoor season," Owens said. "Going to the NCAAs and competing as well as I wanted motivates me."

Big Eight high-jump champion Ed Broxterman cleared 6'10-3/4" to finish 14th. Nebraska's Petar Malesev won the event with 7'4-1/2".

Broxterman is the lone person to defeat Malesev this season. Malesev has cleared 7'5" this season on several occasions.

Steve Duren posted a 23'6-1/4" mark in the long jump but failed to make the finals of the event. Duren qualified for the championships with a leap of 25'3-1/4" on Jan. 14, but he has battled numerous injuries throughout the season.

K-State will compete this week in the College Station Relays at College Station, Texas.

Friend's alternate plans hurt others

Dear Cassandra,

There are four of us planning on going to Panama City, Fla., for spring break. We calculated all the expenses and paid for our accommodations. We had just enough money for the trip, but now one of our roommates has found a girl who asked him to go skiing with her, and he has now dropped the plans with us for her.

Now we cannot afford the trip, and we cannot find a fourth person. We will be losing our money and possibly a friendship over this irrational decision.

Signed, Brooke, Riley and Alex

Dear B.,R. .and A.

There really isn't any way he can be held to his prior plans with you unless he wrote it in a contract of some kind. Telling him that his current relationship isn't going to last will alienate him even more.

Artist tells folk stories with songs

Robert Earl Keen
"No Kinda Dancer"
Sugar Hill Records

Ratings:

★★ Think twice

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

In case you missed it when it came out in 1984, Sugar Hill Records has re-released Robert Earl Keen's classic debut album, "No Kinda Dancer."

Keen's music is classified in record stores as everything in between country, bluegrass and folk genres, and "No Kinda Dancer" is the Keen release that best draws from all of these.

Keen is not a folk singer of the militant vegetarian crowd, but more of a guardian of the western oral tradition.

He is a storyteller, adding depth to the typical country scenarios of woman, wife and dog leaving with his realism.

Listening to a Robert Earl Keen album is an experience that mimics real life — you will feel joy and pain, usually at the same time.

He is a genuine voice in a time when too many people within the country and folk-singer set are selling their souls.

Keen never strayed from his simple formula of honest lyrics and simple music, and he probably never will.

The album features the studio version of the "Front Porch Song," co-written with Keen's college pal, Lyle Lovett.

The ranting story about hassling Presbyterians is missing but still makes a great song.

Lovett has since made it big, but Keen is left as an obscure footnote to his career, even though he is probably the better songwriter.

Lovett also offers backing vocals on "Rolling By."

Folksier elements are found on the title track and "Young Lovers Waltz," while "Swervin' in My Lane" is a more modern country song.

New for this release is the previously unreleased "Song for Kathy," an apologetic, emotional song written to Keen's wife.

Keen is quickly capturing status of a cult legend. His live shows are intimate experiences, much like his recorded material.

"No Kinda Dancer" is the album that introduced us to his fascinating character.

Woman ordered to get rid of 40 dogs

Court order puts Pet Hotline director in the doghouse

LUKE WEHRMAN
Collegian

Imagine sharing your home with 150 dogs.

That's exactly what Beverly Hashagen, director of the Pet Hotline Ranch, was doing until Pottawatomie County issued a court order requiring her to get rid of the dogs.

According to the Pottawatomie County Zoning Administration, Hashagen was supposed to have the dogs gone by Dec. 3.

As of now, she is in contempt of court for not complying with the court order.

Troy Lynn Eckart, Pet Hotline Ranch volunteer, said Hashagen is diligently trying to find homes for the dogs.

"There were approximately 150 dogs she was trying to find homes for," Eckart said. "There are still about 40 dogs there."

Hashagen said she has been housing stray dogs for many years.

She worked for the Riley County Humane Society until her own dog ranch started taking up most of her time.

Hashagen started the Pet Hotline Ranch at her home in Riley County.

Hashagen then moved to 80 acres of land in Pottawatomie County because she needed more room for the dogs.

Hashagen has seven acres of fenced land for the dogs to roam. All of the dogs have doghouses. She also has a garage for young puppies to stay in during harsh weather.

Many of the dogs on Hashagen's land were found abandoned or stray. Some of them show up pregnant, and she takes them in and cares for the puppies.

Hashagen said she has dogs of all ages on her land.

"They range anywhere from 9 months to 11 years of age," she said.

Hashagen got in trouble when her dog population started to grow out of control.

John Lang, Pottawatomie County attorney, said Hashagen did have a conditional-use permit for her dogs, but it was revoked by Pottawatomie County when she did not comply with the conditions of the permit.

Hashagen said the conditional-use permit was to allow her to keep the dogs on her land. She had an agreement with the zoning administration that would allow them to evaluate the situation if the dog population exceeded 50.

"Now they want her to get rid of all the dogs," Eckart said.

The Pet Hotline Ranch is funded by donations, and there are more than 10 volunteers that help Hashagen with the dogs.

Hashagen lives near a veterinarian who helps her care for sick dogs. She is able to give the dogs some of their shots and other vaccinations on her own.

"We worm them and give them most shots," Hashagen said.

Hashagen said it is illegal for her to give the dogs rabies shots on her own.

Hashagen has the dogs spayed or neutered when enough money comes in from donations.

Dr. Kathy Gaughan from the K-State Veterinary Hospital said as long as the dogs get adequate health care, it would not be a problem housing such a large number of dogs.

Hashagen is requesting a $10 donation upon adoption. She also suggests taking the dog to a veterinarian for an examination.

The fate of Hashagen's dogs will be decided March 28 when she is to appear in Pottawatomie County Court.

Until then, she will keep trying to find homes for the remainder of the dogs.

"Keeping the ranch may be a fight, but I want to continue to do it," Hashagen said.

Researchers use drug, rats to find help for alcoholics

STEPHANIE STEENBOCK
Collegian

Rats are helping K-State researchers find ways to help fight alcoholism.

Stephen Kiefer, professor of psychology, and Todd Thiele, graduate student in psychology, are studying the taste reactions of rats to alcohol.

"We study the taste of alcohol and how an animal responds to the taste," Kiefer said.

Thiele said he really enjoys taste-aversion research. Taste-aversion research centers around the idea that if someone eats or drinks something that makes them sick, they will not want to eat or drink it in the future.

Thiele gives rats access to consume alcohol. Then they are injected with a drug that gives them symptoms analogous with the flu.

After this training, the rats are allowed to consume alcohol again. However, after they've been sick, they are less likely to drink alcohol.

"The longer I wait to see if they'll drink the alcohol, the stronger the taste aversions are," Thiele said.

Kiefer videotapes the animals and watches their responses to the alcohol in slow motion.

"The rats make facial and mouth movements if they like or don't like something," Kiefer said.

One of Kiefer's studies uses Finnish rats that are the equivalent of human alcoholics.

"After the Finnish animals drink a lot, they really like the taste of alcohol," Kiefer said.

Kiefer said he has found aversive responses in rats that are alcoholics.

The drug used, naltrexone, was approved by the Food and Drug Administration for use in alcohol-abuse treatment programs. It has been used for 10 years in heroin-addiction treatment programs.

Kiefer said the drug is somewhat successful in humans.

"Supposedly, it reduces the craving for alcohol," he said.

He has submitted a grant proposal to the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

He said his research is determining if this drug makes alcohol taste bad. With a grant, he said he could take his research further.

"Whether it keeps them from drinking alcohol is the real question."

▶ FREE YOUR MIND WEEK

Politics, education discussed at forum

STEPHANIE STEENBOCK
Collegian

An open forum entitled "Extreme!" offered a chance for alternative campus and community groups to discuss some recent issues and explain their organizations Tuesday afternoon in the K-State Union Courtyard.

The forum, which was organized by the Union Program Council as part of Free Your Mind Week, was a mixture of introductions, information and debate.

Representatives from UFM, Students Advocating a Valid Education, College Republicans, Young Democrats, Students for Peace and Justice, and the Group for Ethical Awareness and Responsibility explained their organizations and answered questions from the audience.

Issues such as a diversity overlay, political correctness and the "Contract With America" were debated.

Troy Tuttle, senior in secondary education and organizer of Students Advocating Valid Education, said the problem with political correctness is forced compliance.

"I think certain people may be put into a position of forced compliance, and these people will think that their opinion doesn't count," Tuttle said.

The diversity overlay is a topic that has been addressed by the Group for Ethical Awareness and Responsibility.

Janice Swanson, assistant professor of animal science and industry, said GEAR is a group of students and faculty that looks at all aspects of issues.

Tim Kukula, sophomore in political science and representative of College Republicans, said he is pro-diversity, but he does not believe diversity can be forced.

"This is Free Your Mind Week. You cannot be free if someone is forcing you to take a class," Kukula said.

Michelle Smith, senior in political science and representative of Young Democrats, said the diversity overlay is about understanding where people are coming from and what their angle is on life.

"The one thing we ask is that you are politically informed," Smith said.

John Pruner, senior in history and representative for Students for Peace and Justice, said his group has four main interests.

The first is for the country to move toward a true peace dividend. The second is to continue governmental issues toward environmental protection. The third is to focus on racism and human-rights issues. The last goal is to explore the roots of violence and work for a rational gun-control system.

Linda Teener, director of UFM, said UFM is an educational resource for the campus. UFM organizes classes and publishes them in a catalog. Instructors are volunteers, and classes are available to anyone for a minimal fee.

Teener said UFM offers discussion and dialogue on diversity and multicultural issues. She also said multicultural courses are well attended.

"I think there is a great deal of interest on campus to learn about other cultures," Teener said.

▶ FULL MOON

Lunar phases, lunatic correlation may only be self-fulfilling prophecy

SHELLY FOGLE
Collegian

If you find yourself howling at the full moon Thursday, it may be all in your head.

People have blamed bizarre occurrences on the phases of the moon for ages, but there is no scientific proof that a full moon has any direct effect on people's behavior.

It was even rumored that fictitious characters such as werewolves revealed themselves near the time of the full moon.

Anecdotes about the influence of the full moon still exist today, though scientific research shows no causal factor between the full moon and abnormal behavior.

The word lunatic is derived from the Latin base word "luna," said Judy Parker, director of community relations at Parkview Hospital in Topeka.

Luna is also the base word of lunar, a word referring to the moon.

"There are some correlations. People tend to have feelings of restlessness, anxiety and are less able to manage stress," Parker said.

Parker said people who work in the mental health profession sometimes notice the cycles of the moon.

There are more calls on the Help-Line, a telephone-crisis hot line, around the time of the full moon, she said. There may also be changes in a person's physical well-being as well as mental changes.

"There are more babies born around the time of the full moon, but there is nothing that states it is because of the full moon," said a spokesperson at Memorial Hospital in Manhattan.

Dr. Terry Pfannenstiel, program manager for adult services at Pawnee Mental Health services, said there are anecdotes but no scientific studies that connect the full moon and odd occurrences.

"People need a reason, justification and understanding of behavior, so myths are handed down," he said.

Although science does not support the lunar hypothesis, many people do.

Pfannenstiel recalled a study that polled psychiatric nurses and emergency medical technicians about their belief in the effects of the moon phases.

Of the nurses and technicians polled, 80 percent and 55-60 percent respectively thought the full moon affected people's behavior.

The ideas about the moon become self-fulfilling prophecies. If people think something will happen because of the moon, then it may actually happen, Pfannenstiel said.

"The idea that the full moon causes behavior is not true. People confuse correlation with causation," he said.

Office of Student Activities and Services is currently accepting applications for Director of Consumer and Tenant Affairs Office

The primary goal of the director is to provide assistance to students in preventing and resolving problems with commercial concerns.
The secondary goal of the director will be to conduct an on-going program to educate the student body in rental, consumer and financial matters.
The director also assists in helping student locate off-campus housing as well as the operation of a roommate matching service.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Existence of parking problem debated

"It makes no sense to build a parking garage until the new turn lane is added," Rawson said. "It would only add more congestion."

However, Faculty Senate went ahead and expressed its opposition to a campus parking garage.

The motion was taken in time for the administration to consider Senate's position prior to the March 31 release of a five-year plan for K-State.

Two resolutions, both seeking closer consideration of a potential parking garage, were considered by Senate. Only one of the resolutions passed.

The successful resolution urges the University's administration to reconsider options for solving the perceived parking problem.

The resolution passed by consensus after three amendments were made to its wording. The meaning remained unchanged.

Senate asked the University administration to postpone the construction of a parking garage.

Faculty Sen. Gerald Reeck said he is unconvinced that a parking garage is needed and would solve the perceived parking problem.

"We don't have a parking problem," Reeck said. "We have a walking problem."

Everyone wants to get just as close to his or her destination as possible, he said.

Reeck said he is concerned with the precedent a parking garage would set.

"The history of parking garages on campuses is that one just sets the ball in motion," Reeck said.

The cycle of people getting jealous of others who get to park close to buildings will continue, and more garages will be proposed, he said.

Sen. Cia Verschelden said nobody has told her they are in favor of a parking garage.

"Maybe they are out there, and they just don't want to come to me," Verschelden said.

Havlin said he thinks there are more people who recognize a parking problem than Verschelden believes.

He said the value of additional parking close to the Union is in the additional conferences and utilization the Union would get.

Additional parking is particularly important in light of the proposed expansion of the Union, Havlin said.

Leary warns students against authority trols your TV controls what is imprinted on your mind," he said.

"The average household watches six to eight hours of TV a day. The simplest common sense answer is to check what you watch."

In addition to his speech, Leary also showed video-taped, high-speed imagery accompanied by music and written as well as spoken messages.

Leary said the tape is designed to create a state of mental confusion or chaos.

Audience's response seemed mostly positive, although some in attendance said they had trouble following Leary's train of thought at times.

"He might be a little senile, but he seems like an intelligent man," Chris Williams, sophomore in biology, said.

"He seemed to be drawing an interesting analogy between Huxley's idea of soma and television today."

Others speculated on the effects of so many mind-bending psychedelic sessions on Leary's mental state.

"The guy has done a lot of acid — you could tell that," Meleah Mcnair, sophomore in resource and parks management, said.

"I liked his ideas about creating your own personal reality, not letting other people define reality for you," she said.

Telecommunications gives money to pay for phones

we haven't had access to before," Bliss said.

Spicer said in order to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, the phones will most likely be installed next to the elevators in the buildings. She also said if the building has more than one floor, additional phones may be installed on the second floor in case someone needs assistance and the elevators are not working.

Telecommunications is sponsoring the project, and each phone will cost $375 to $400 to purchase and install, Spicer said.

The final decision on which campus buildings will receive new phones will be made April 3 at a meeting open to the public.

"We're going to have a meeting to discuss which buildings should receive priority, and everyone is welcome. This is a chance for students to have a say in where they think their safety needs can best be met," Spicer said. "The more input we have, the better we can serve the students of K-State."

Parents give students scholarships

The funds produced as a result of the Parents' Telefund will benefit the callers in the form of randomly drawn $250 scholarships.

Dowell said the first round of winners has been drawn, and the winners of 20 scholarships will be notified this week.

He said more names will be drawn for scholarships when the funds from the pledges become available.

"We wanted to try and create a source of revenue that could be used to help the students calling," he said.

Dowell said he believed many students called friends and relatives during previous telefunds anyway, so Parents' Telefund was created to prompt callers to ask for pledges during the call.

Jan Herink, annual giving coordinator, said 478 pledges totaling $16,225 were made during the 28-day campaign.

She also said a $5,000 pledge was made by someone.

"We felt like it was a big success," Herink said.

Dowell said the first year surpassed his expectations, and Parents' Telefund is in the plans for next year as well.

"I was hoping we could raise 14, and we raised 16," he said.

Plans halted for Anderson expansion until 1999

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The expansion of Anderson Avenue will have to wait until 1999, pushing back the possible construction of a campus parking garage another year.

Jerry Petty, director of community development, said the Anderson Avenue expansion project was planned for 1998, but without federal funding, it probably will not be possible.

Instead, he said, the city will complete another application for the possibility of expansion in 1999.

The project included providing left-turn lanes and related traffic signals at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue, and Anderson and Denison avenues, he said.

Kim Athon, informational specialist for Kansas Department of Transportation, said the Anderson Avenue project was submitted in the Economic Development Program.

This year, a total of 24 projects were requested in the Economic Development Program with a total cost of $30 million, she said.

"The number of requests for funding far exceeded the number of projects that could be completed with available funds," Athon said.

Poverty game helps decision-making process

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

The key to escaping poverty is building assets in the self-concept and support-systems areas, a guest lecturer said Wednesday.

David Shulman, former executive director of Cross-Lines, an anti-poverty agency in Kansas City, said increased assets in those areas gives impoverished people time to step back and assess their situations.

"Low-income people are criticized, but their decisions are made quickly and with an attitude that it doesn't matter," Shulman said during a lecture in Bluemont Hall Wednesday morning.

He said sometimes decisions take longer to make but the pattern of poverty stays the same.

"I did not grow up in poverty, but I spent 20 years working with people in poverty," Shulman said.

While at Cross-Lines, Shulman developed a poverty-simulation game. The game is designed to teach participants about the factors locking individuals and families into poverty.

The game is played by dividing the participants into subgroups. Each group receives a packet and a hypothetical situation about a family facing poverty.

The team, while facing a strict deadline, must make decisions based on what they perceive to

▶ KSUARH ELECTIONS

Tense elections end; president chosen

JANICE MELIA
Collegian

The presidential election for the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls took three votes.

But in the end, Eric Keen, junior in mechanical engineering, was given the tie-breaking vote from Lin Bliss, current KSUARH president and junior in pre-medicine and history.

The voting, which was done by the general body of KSUARH, included representatives from the various residence halls. The first vote at the Tuesday night meeting did not leave a clear winner between the three candidates.

A runoff vote of the top two again ended in a tie. That left the tie-breaking vote in the hands of Bliss, according to the Association's constitution.

"I was pretty sure it was going to be a close race," said Jason Oblander, presidential candidate and junior in history and political science.

Keen said he was glad when it was finally over.

"It was very close, and re-voting with a runoff added that much tension," Keen said.

But that tension ended when Bliss returned to the room with his decision.

"We've counted the ballots, and we have a tie. We had two outstanding candidates, and I'll break the tie in favor of Eric Keen, next year's president," Bliss said.

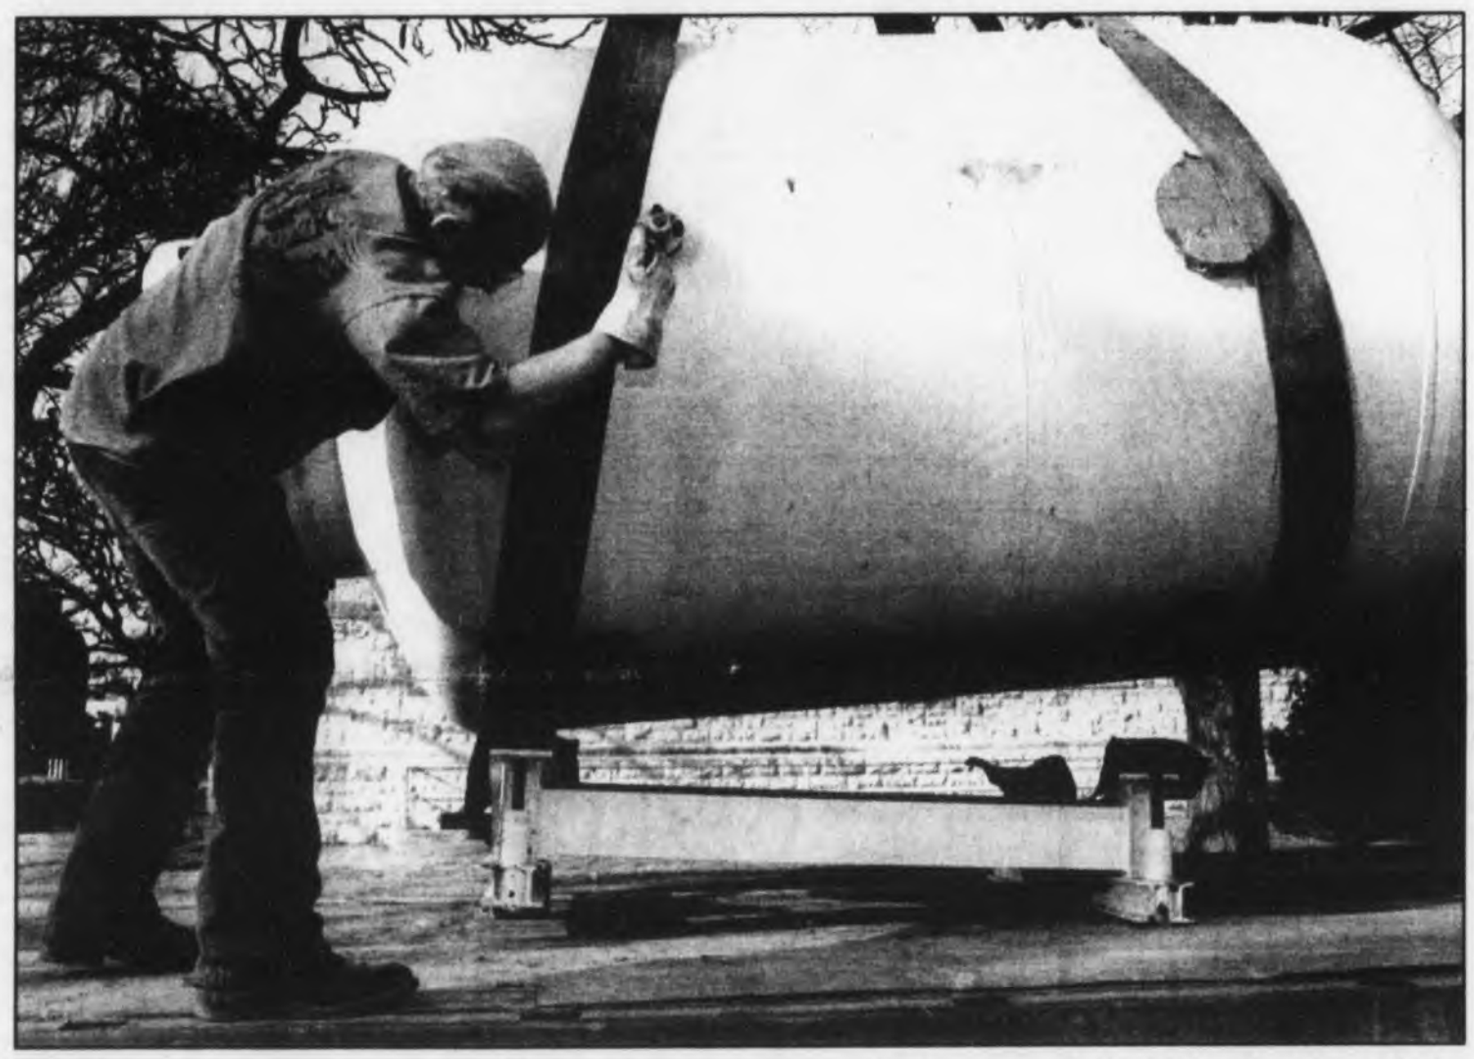
Bliss said he based his decision on Keen's experience within KSUARH as well as campus development and involvement.

"I think I made the best decision I could. I'm sure there could be some controversy over the decision, but I made the best decision I could," Bliss said.

Julia Trowbridge, sophomore in architectural engineering and running mate of Keen, won the vice presidency over Charisse Wilson, senior in pre-law and history.

Keen said he was pleased with Trowbridge's election as vice president.

"Julia and I know we work well together because we have. I have no reservations about her representing me or ARH," Keen said.



After losing her bid for vice president, Wilson ran for the position of information coordinator, which she won over Lillian Lancaster, sophomore undecided.

Oblander went on to win the seat of environmental chairman over candidate Matt Moore, sophomore in wildlife biology.

The remaining seats, which were run for uncontested, were voted upon with unanimous ballots cast.

Those candidates and positions are as follows: Scott Lamb, senior in geography, for treasur-

Accelerator slows to a stop at Western Illinois University after a 21-year tour of duty in K-State's Cardwell Hall

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

It's often been said it is better to give than to receive.

The K-State physics department has figured out a way to give what it once received.

The department is donating a particle accelerator, which it no longer uses, to Western Illinois University. The accelerator, which is housed in a large pressurized tank to prevent sparks from the enormous amount of voltage required to run it, was moved out of the McDonald Laboratory in Cardwell Hall in several stages.

Everything but the tank, which weighs more than 6,000 pounds, was transported to Western Illinois in a rental truck. The tank presented more of a challenge.

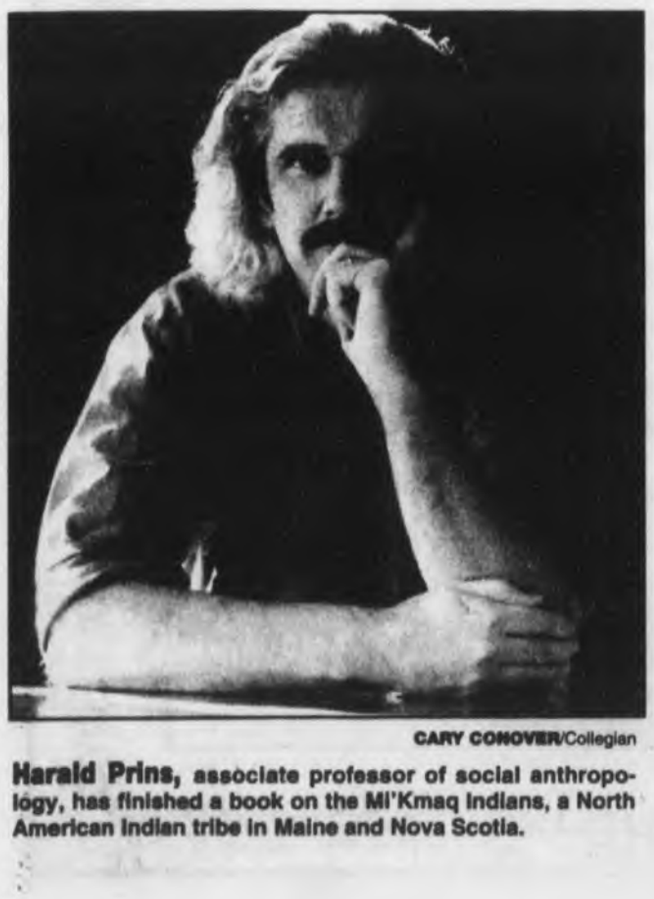
Six workers wheeled the tank out of Cardwell Wednesday morning. In the afternoon, a crane arrived to lift the tank onto a flatbed truck. The tank will be transported to Western Illinois, where the accelerator will be reassembled.

In exchange for donating an obsolete piece of equipment to an institution that can still use it, the physics department will clear up space for other uses.

"We'll convert the space it occupied into offices for visiting researchers," said Tracy Tipping, laboratory safety officer at the lab.

"We're part of an exchange program, so we have researchers from different places come use the lab. Right now, they don't have anywhere to keep their paperwork."

Pat Richard, director of the lab, said K-State is passing on a gift that it received in 1974 from a Texas company.



"Texas Nuclear wanted to get rid of it. We needed it here, so I went down with two people and picked it up," Richard said.

Tipping said a faculty member at Western Illinois, Vickie Frohne, was a graduate student at K-State. She knew that the accelerator was not being used and inquired about getting it for Western Illinois.

Tipping said the accelerator was advertised for sale to the public, and no substantial bids were received. Western Illinois then made a token bid and received the accelerator. Western Illinois will pay the costs of transporting the accelerator.

Richard said the accelerator was used for basic research until newer equipment made it obsolete. The accelerator is not ready for the junk heap yet, however.

"With some replacement parts, it could last another 10 or 20 years," Richard said.

Harald Prins, associate professor of social anthropology, has finished a book on the Mi'Kmaq Indians, a North American Indian tribe in Maine and Nova Scotia.

Anthropology professor enjoys teaching, reaching students

JAMIE CONGROVE
Collegian

Harald Prins, associate professor of social anthropology, never thought he would end up living in the Kansas Flint Hills.

"My life is a journey," he said. "It takes me to unexpected places."

Prins said he believes teaching is a mission.

"When I walk into class, I have a skeptical audience. And I believe that everything I say in cultural anthropology is essential to know," Prins said.

One reason Prins feels so strongly about the course is because he has seen firsthand the differences in many cultures.

Growing up in the Netherlands, Prins said after high school, his father kicked him out of the house.

"He knew most people need freedom and to learn responsibility, so I was kicked out of the house and had to fend for myself. I then appreciated the value of money," he said. "My father was from the old, tough school."

Because his father was a professor, Prins said he had seen students who had come out of high school and were not ready to take academics seriously. Therefore, he didn't want that to be the case with his son.

After he traveled for a year, Prins went back to school and had his doctorate at age 25.

"I didn't want to waste time bumming around, so I took double loads," Prins said.

After many adventures, such as swimming in the Red Sea and almost having to have his leg amputated because he smashed it on a coral reef, he went to film school.

He said the reason he wanted to go to film school was because he wanted to be able to reach more people.

"I was very frustrated because if we are trying to reach the public at large, and they won't read, we need to find another means of reaching people," Prins said.

"So I decided to go to film school because through film it can reach so many people, and through film you can show people what you are trying to put into words," he said.

Prins said his first film, "Our Lives In Our Hands," was on the Mi'kmaq Indians and their struggle for land and equal rights. The film made appearances on television, at the Indian film festival, in Europe, at the Smithsonian Institution and other places.

With the attention the film got, many lawyers demanded that Native Americans get their rights and land returned to them. Prins said he was the expert witness and had to testify for the tribe in front of the U.S. Senate.

"I saw I could make a difference because laws were passed and it gave them their rights back" he said.

Prins said he believed the Indians were mistreated because injustice and misunderstanding are the direct results of ignorance.

"That is why when I teach, I hammer the importance of knowledge," he said.

One student said that through his experiences, Prins is able to illustrate his points better.

"He was one of the first teachers to make me look around at what's going on in the world besides facts and figures," Ashley Broeckelman, junior in elementary education, said. "He's made me realize that there is more to life than just college — there are lots of other societies out there."

Prins said that when he teaches, he doesn't take any students for granted.

"I try to make sure skeptical students think at the minimum. I work the crowd and put a lot of personal effort into my classes," he said.

Prins said the reason he feels so strongly about his teaching is because he thinks, as intellectuals, teachers have a tremendous responsibility to give back to students to make for a better life.

Ami Lutz, junior in pre-professional elementary education, said students don't always have to take notes in class

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ UNION TO RESEARCH STUDENT PREFERENCES ON FOOD, SNACKS, BEER

You could be getting a call today asking what type of food you would like to eat in the K-State Union.

The Institute for Social and Behavioral Research is conducting a survey for the Union concerning food service.

The questions used in the survey deal with types of food students, faculty and staff like; where they buy snacks, breakfast, lunch and supper; favorite restaurants; and whether they would like beer served in the Union, Leah Pickett, program coordinator for ISBR, said.

"The Union wanted to do this because it is important for them to get food preferences and thoughts from students and faculty," she said.

The respondents for the survey are chosen randomly and asked questions by student interviewers.

"It's been a fun project for us because it's been well-received by the students," Pickett said.

Leonard Bloomquist, director of survey research for ISBR, worked with the Union and the two consulting groups of Thomas Ricca Associates and the Comyn Fasano Group to develop the survey.

"We will be completing the interview with students this week," Bloomquist said.

Faculty and staff will be contacted during spring break and the following week. It will take approximately a week to compile the information and another week to analyze the results.

"Analysis will be done by our office and by the consulting groups hired by the Union," Bloomquist said.

Jack Sills, director of the Union, said the Union wanted to find out the preferences of the students so it could make changes.

"The results will be used by the consultants and added to the information they collect," Sills said.

▶ DOG RIDDLED WITH BULLETS BY POLICE

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Two police officers have been charged with cruelty to animals for using a stray dog for target practice.

Bayou Vista police officers Greg Trantham, 27, and John Overstreet, 32, are scheduled to go on trial Monday for allegedly killing a Lhasa Apso that was turned over to them as a stray.

Witnesses reported they saw the carcass of the dog riddled with bullets. The carcass disappeared.

Burt Springer, the attorney representing the officers, would not allow them to comment. The officers lost a bid Monday to have the charges dismissed.

Springer said he would show the dog was not killed and witnesses fabricated the story.

Animal-cruelty investigator Mary Shosty said she took the case to prosecutors after witnesses told her the officers bragged about killing the dog.

▶ DOLE GETS BACKING FROM NEW YORK GOP

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential hopeful Sen. Bob Dole put the final touches on a political sweep of New York Republicans on Wednesday, gaining the support of the state's 14-member GOP delegation in the House of Representatives.

"We are endorsing Bob Dole today because we need a leader who is committed to reining in the excesses of big government and reasserting our nation's leadership in the world," Rep. Susan Molinari of Staten Island, an early backer of the Kansas Republican, said.

With the primary nearly a year away, it's impossible to say how the 71-year-old Dole's candidacy will play with New York voters.

But in the last two weeks, Dole has received the endorsement of the state's most powerful Republican politicians and GOP party leaders, including Gov. George Pataki and Sen. Alfonse D'Amato.

▶ BILL TO REQUIRE NEW DISCLAIMERS

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate Elections Committee heard testimony Wednesday on a bill that would require campaign brochures to include a disclaimer showing who paid for it.

"This says that it doesn't matter who you are, but if you're donating, you need to disclose who you are," Rep. Britt Nichols, R-Prairie Village, said.

Carol Williams, executive director of the Commission on Governmental Standards and Conduct, said in recent years Kansas has seen an increase in the number of brochures, pamphlets and fact sheets used in campaigns.

Williams said candidates are now required to place a disclaimer on TV ads for political candidates. Williams said some candidates support the measure because at times a brochure distributed without a candidate's approval has had incorrect information.

▶ PAT BUCHANAN TO ANNOUNCE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDACY FOR 1996

WASHINGTON (AP) — Patrick Buchanan said he would formally announce his presidential candidacy next Monday in New Hampshire and then take a Winnebago tour of Iowa and several other early primary states.

Buchanan, who bruised President Bush with a 1992 primary challenge, said he was the only economic nationalist in the Republican field, citing his opposition to the NAFTA and GATT trade agreements.

Appearing Monday night on CNN's "Larry King Live," Buchanan said he believed he would be the only Republican candidate to fight the battle on social issues, including opposition to abortion and to homosexuals serving in the military.

Advisers had said last week that Buchanan planned to announce his candidacy Monday. Buchanan said he chose New Hampshire over his childhood home in the Washington area because of the success he had there with his 1992 challenge.

Buchanan said he hoped to build support by targeting several groups of voters, including Catholics, Christian conservatives, advocates of strict immigration reform, proponents of term limits and opponents of abortion.
